CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

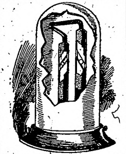
Rapid Ice Cream Freezer—Platinum Electrode Arc Lamps—The Heat of Stars—The Accuracy of Modern Instruments Is Used in Ascertaining It.

The Heat of Stars.

Some scientific measurements of the heat of stars in recent years, while giving somewhat unsatisfactory results as regards the direct purpose of the tests, have shown the exceeding delicacy of the instruments now employed for indicating heat effects. Prof. Boys describes his attempts to detect heat radiations from the stars by means of an exceedingly delicate radiometer, used in conjunction with a sixteen-inch reflecting telescope. In spite of the fact that his apparatus was sensitive enough to show the heat equivalent to that of a candle 1.71 miles away, no effect whatever could be obtained from Venus, Jupiter, Saturn, Mars, Arcturus, Capella, Vega or any of the numerous bright stars said to have been obtained many years ago by Huggins and Stone with comparatively insensitive apparatus. Further investigations were undertaken by Prof. Nichols at the Yerkes Observatory, Wisconsin. The tests were made with an improved radiometer of remarkable sensitiveness. The radiometer, stably mounted on a heavy pier in the heliostat room of the observatory, was effectively shielded from air currents and other sources of disturbances. The instruments consisted of a suspension system formed of two mica discs, each two millimeters in diameter, blackened on the face and supported on a light cross arm on either side of a thin glass staff, hung by an extremely fine quartz fiber in a partial vacuum. Both vanes were exposed to the radiation of the sky, at the focus of a silvered aperture and eight feet focus. Rays from the star were reflected into the concave mirror by means of a siderostat having a large, plane mirror of silvered glass. The rays entered the radiometer through a fluorite window. With this apparatus a deflection of 0.1 millimeters would be given by a candle thirteen miles away. Prof. Nichols' radiometer is five times as sensitive as that used by Prof. Boys, and the area of his telescope mirror is 2.4 times that of the mirror used by Boys. Seven determinations of the heat variations of Arcturus gave a mean deflection of 0.60 millimeters. Vega was also observed on seven nights, and gave a mean deflection of 0.27 millimeters. The results appear to be trustworthy, and establish the fact that the heat of some stars may be determined with a fair approach to accuracy, although many sources of error exist, the actual value of which has not yet been established. The test, however, may reasonably be considered to show that we do not receive from Arcturus more heat than would reach us from a candle at a distance of five or six miles, no account being taken in the latter case of atmosphere absorption.

Platinum Electrode Arc Lamps.

An entirely new departure in the construction of arc lamps is disclosed in a recent patent granted to an inventor of New York. This lamp combines the essential features of the incandescent lamp and those of the familiar arc lamp, the exhausted inclosing globe of one and the arc sprung between two electrodes of the other. The electrodes are composed of platinum and gold, fused together in a manner described by the inventor, and these are supported by magnets and plungers so as normally to remain in contact with each other when no current is passing, but to automatically strike an arc when the lamp is thrown onto the circuit. The peculiar horizontal arrangement of the quadant-shaped electrodes is shown in the illustration. The chamber in which the arc is maintained being highly rarified prevents the oxidation and consumption of the platinum electrodes, so that they are non-consuming, the same as an incandescent lamp filament. The high melting point of the platinum prevents their being fused by the heat of the arc. This arrangement permits the retention of the high illuminating efficiency of the arc, together with the advantages of the incandescent lighting—viz, great steadiness of the inclosed air-tight globe.

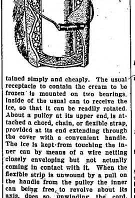


Fireproof Cloth.

In order to prevent the rapid spread of flames in theaters and places of residence some attempt has been made to substitute draperies of asbestos for those usually employed as curtains and decorations. The weight and cost of that material, however, to say nothing of other objections, have interfered with its use for this purpose. And a wish has long been entertained for a method of rendering ordinary materials fireproof that shall be simple and inexpensive, thus making possible the retention of the silk, woolen and cotton fabrics now in favor. Such a process is now reported from Germany. The exact nature of the chemicals utilized in this operation is not made known, but the American consul at Freiburg sends to Washington a report on the subject. Samples of the preparation having been procured, the consul tried a few experiments. Cloth that had been treated with the fluid in question and dried was thrust into a candle flame. The result was that the goods were charred, but they did not take fire. Kerosene was then poured on a piece of material that had been dipped in the preparation. When a match was applied to it the oil would burn, but not the cloth. A bit of wood wrapped in cloth that had been treated with the preparation was protected from fire when placed on the coals of a furnace. When bunting or lace curtains have been impregnated with the fluid and dried an addition of less than 1 per cent of the weight can be detected. The increase cost amounts to about 3 cents a square yard when work is done on a small scale and less when operations are conducted on a wholesale plan. The strength and color of a fabric are said to be absolutely untouched by the process.—Memphis Scimitar.

Rapid Ice Cream Freezer.

The prime requisites in ice cream freezers, from the housewife's point of view, are the rapidity of the operation and the ease with which the freezer may be rotated. Usually the longer it is operated the harder it becomes to work it. With the can illustrated herewith, however, the inventor asserts it is no harder to rotate the can at the end than at the beginning of the process and that the freezing is much more rapid than with ordinary freezers. The inventor hails from the Nutmeg state, and gives Middletown as his residence. The advantages are obtained simply and cheaply. The usual receptacle to contain the cream to be frozen is mounted on two bearings, inside of the usual can to receive the ice, so that it can be readily rotated. About a pulley at its upper end, is attached a chord, chain, or flexible strap, provided at its end extending through the cover with a convenient handle. The ice is kept from touching the inner can by means of a wire netting closely enveloping but not actually coming in contact with it. When the flexible strip is unwound by a pull on the handle from the pulley the inner can being free, to revolve about its axis, does so, unwinding the cord. When the cord is all unwound the can still continues to revolve in the same direction, thus rewinding the cord on the pulley, but in the opposite direction, which operation may be repeated as often as necessary. A freezing mixture is placed in the bottom of the outer can, and being able to readily pass through the netting is thrown up and around the freezing can by the rotary motion. The contents of this can by the same motion are caused to be in a constant state of effervescence, so that no scraper or mixer is necessary to prevent the half-frozen contents from adhering to the sides of the can.



Euclid's Treatment of Ratio and Proportion.

In an article in the School World on the teaching of proportion for use in geometry, Prof. Hill of University College, London, says one of the greatest difficulties encountered by the beginner in geometry is to understand the theory of ratio and proportion. The more he has studied Euclid's treatment of the subject in his fifth book the more his admiration for what Euclid accomplished. Prof. de Moyan said that it and Aristotle's logic were the two most unobjectionable and unassailable treatises ever written. Euclid's fifth book is an algebraic not a geometric treatise, but it differs from the corresponding portion of elementary algebra usually taught in schools by being applicable to magnitudes which have no common measure. Usually a teacher supplies his pupils with simple algebraic proofs of Euclid's proposition, but such proofs are only valid when all the ratios concerned are ratios of magnitudes which have a common measure.

The annual report of the commissioner of patents for the year ending Dec. 31, 1899, shows that the total receipts of the office amounted to $1,325,457, a sum but twice exceeded since 1836. The surplus for the year was $113,073. The patent office now has paid into the treasury $5,086,649 more than it has drawn out. The number of patents issued, including designs and reissue, was 25,527, a number but once exceeded. The number of patents expiring during the year was 18,135. In proportion to population, more patents were issued to citizens of Connecticut than to those of any other state, the ratio being one to every 945 inhabitants. The commissioner approves a bill pending in congress providing for the construction of a fireproof building for the use of the patent office. Congress is asked to amend the trademark statutes so as to provide for the registration of trademarks used in interstate commerce.

Spectacles for the Blind?

From Russia comes the news that Prof. Norshewski has invented an instrument, the principle of which is the sensitiveness to light of selenium and tellurium, both of which change their quality as conductors of electricity with a variation in the light to which relative meaning only is indicated. While their actual vision will be unaffected, they will feel the various effects of changing light by its action. It is claimed that a totally blind man has been enabled to find the windows in a room, and after some practice to distinguish approaching objects. The inventor hopes to make the instrument so efficient that the blind will be able to tell almost certainly when they are approaching an opaque or transparent substance.

Parental Relations.

One of the teachers in the Sunday school of the First M. E. church of Germantown was endeavoring to instil into the minds of the little girls of her class recently a due appreciation of parental affection. She spoke of the mother's love for her children and of the respect which the children should show to their mothers. For some reason she rather omitted to lay much stress upon the father. Finally one of the little girls remarked that she thought children should love their mother much more than their fathers. "Why do you think that?" asked the teacher. "Oh, well," said the little tot, "your fathers are only related to you by marriage, but your mothers are related to you by bornation!"—Philadelphia Record.

The Girl Found What She Wanted, But Still She Was Not Happy.

"Some people have no sense," said the girl shopper, as she sank down upon the chair in front of the counter.

"What is it?" asked a sympathizing friend, "can't you find what you want?"

"Oh, it isn't that, but I can't find it in the way I want. They're bound to proclaim it from the housetops. You see, I've been wanting to wear hip-pads for a long time—it gives a girl so much better shape, don't you think, and I'm not very large. Everybody seems to think it's so foolish, and so I've never had the nerve to ask for them. But to-day, when I found myself right up on the same floor with them, I screwed up my courage, and asked a clerk up there about them.

"'Next counter,' she cried, and then she called out 'Hip-pads,' and, oh, dear, I know everybody is looking at me now, and I never shall be able to buy them!"

Mr. Beecher's Sarcasm Effective.

In the Plymouth congregation there was at one time a woman who was a thorn in the flesh. She had a harsh voice and a stiff manner of speaking. Her long-drawn-out, dull discourses wearied the congregation. But Mr. Beecher was patient. At last he, too, reached the limit of endurance, and one evening when she sat down, after talking nearly half an hour, he arose and in his deep tones said slowly: "Nevertheless, I still believe in women speaking in meeting." She spoke no more.—From the Ladies' Home Journal.

LARGEST TREE IN THE WORLD.

Called the Hurricane Tree, and Is in Nassau, Capital of the Bahamas.

In Nassau, the capital city of the Bahama islands, they say "the tree in the public square"—not the trees. Now, the public square of Nassau is quite as large as most cities of its size, but there is only one tree in it, and that tree literally fills the square and spreads its shade over all the public buildings in the neighborhood. For it is the largest tree in the world at its base, although it is hardly taller than a three-story house. It is variously known as a celba, or a silk cotton tree, but the people of the low islands of the West Indies call it a hurricane tree. For, no matter how hard the wind blows, it cannot disturb the mighty buttressed trunk the ceiba. In the hurricane of last spring all the palms and many of the other trees of Nassau were overturned, but the great hurricane tree, although it lost all its leaves, did not lose so much as a branch. Its trunk throws out great curving, wind-like braces, some of them twenty feet wide and nearly as high. These extend into the ground on all sides and brace the tree against all attack, while the great branches spread a thick shade overhead. In the tropic sunshine of midsummer, hundreds, even thousands of people may gather in the cool of its shadow. No one knows how old the great tree is, but it must have been growing hundreds, if not thousands of years. A very old picture in the library at Nassau shows the tree as big as it is at present, and even the oldest negro on the island cannot remember when it was a bit smaller.

WHERE JEFF DAVIS COURTED.

A Large Stone That Figured In His Youthful Romance Preserved.

When Gen. Zachary Taylor was in command at Fort Knox, near Vincennes, Ind., Jefferson Davis, afterwards president of the Southern Confederacy, was a lieutenant in the army, and was with his command at the fort. Tradition has it that Davis and Miss Taylor, whom he afterwads married, took strolls upon the prairie near the fort, and that they often seated themselves upon a large stone which lay on a knoll some distance away. It is stated that while seated thus one day Davis proposed marriage to Miss Taylor and was accepted. Davis and Miss Taylor were married at Vincennes, and themselves told of the courtship on the stone. To commemorate the romantic incident, Mrs. Dr. J. H. Rabb of Vincennes, has caused the stone to be removed to the house where it is now to be seen.—New York Sun.

Why He Was Afraid to Bid.

At an auction sale of miscellaneous goods at a country store the auctioneer put up a buggy robe of fairly-good quality. An old farmer inspected it closely, seemed to think there was a bargain in it, and yet he hesitated to bid.

"Think it cheap?" asked the auctioneer, crying a 10-cent bid.

"Yes, kinder," was the reply.

"Then why don't you bid and get it?"

"Wall, I've bought heaps o' things in dry goods an' so on," slowly rejoined the old man, "and I never took home anything yet that the old woman thought was worth the price. If I got that 'ere robe for even 15 cents she'd grab it up, pull at one end and chaw on a corner and call out, 'cheated again—more'n half cotton!' That's th' reason I dasn't bid."—Arizona Graphic.

The Doctor's Guess.

Chapman loves a good dinner, and one day, just before the big case was to come up in court, he ate more than he ought. The next day he was sick, and White took a doctor around to see him. Chapman was groaning with the pain, and the doctor was puzzled. At last the doctor noticed a red spot on Chapman's cheekbone, and came to the conclusion that Chapman needed a dentist, and told him so.

ALABASTINE

WHAT ALABASTINE IS.

Alabastine is the original and only durable wall coating on the market. It is entirely different from all kalsomine preparations. Alabastine is made ready for use in white or fourteen beautiful tints by the addition of cold water. It is put up in dry powdered form, in packages, properly labeled, with full directions on every package. It takes the place of scaling kalsomines, wall paper and paint for walls. Alabastine can be used on plaster, brick, wood or canvas, and a child can brush it on.

WHAT "KALSOMINES" ARE.

Kalsomines are cheap and temporary preparations, manufactured from whitings, chalks, clays, etc. They are stuck on the walls with decaying animal glue. Alabastine is not a kalsomine. It is a rock-base cement, which sets, and it hardens with age. It can be re-coated and re-decorated without having to wash and scrape off its old coats. Alabastine is utilized to a great extent in hospitals, as it prevents the accumulation of dirt and the congregating of disease germs, being disinfectant in its nature.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOL-HOUSES.

The interior walls of churches, school-houses and all public buildings should be coated with nothing but the durable and pure Alabastine. So evident has this fact become, that hundreds of tons are used annually for this work. The genuine Alabastine does not rub or scale off. It is cleanly during the long period of its usefulness. Every owner of a building should use it. Ask your paint dealer or druggist for card of tints, and write for free copy of our interesting booklet to Alabastine Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

REJECT THE "JUST AS GOOD."

The dealer who tells you that he can sell you the "same thing" as Alabastine or "something just as good," either is not posted or is trying to deceive you. In offering something he has bought cheap and is trying to sell on Alabastine's demands, he may not realize the danger to himself as well as to you. Beware of all new substitutes. Dealers risk a suit for damages by selling and consumers by using an infringement. Alabastine Co. own the right to make and sell wall coatings adapted to mix with cold water.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Our Fungous And Insect Pests.

If the history and experience of the last twenty years have taught us anything, it should be that we need to strike hard and often at our insect and fungous pests. There are some men that oppose all attempts at legislation to exterminate such pests, and generally, if their motives are sought out, it is found that they are to be hurt in their property by the legislation in question—that they have goods to put on the market that they do not want inspected, or else they want to escape the expense and annoyance of inspection. The policy of letting things alone always finds advocates.

But with insect and fungous pests the careful farmer and fruit grower is largely at the mercy of his nearest neighbor. What advantage is it for a man with a plum orchard to cut out every sign of black-knot as it appears, if his neighbor on the windward side is to be permitted to have an orchard that is half dead with black-knot? The officers of the state should have full power to go into any orchard and rid it of dangerous parasites, if the owner of such orchard, after due warning, does not attend to it himself. The whole community is interested in this, as much the man that consumes fruit as the man that raises it. It is for the interest of the community that as much produce be raised as can be consumed, that the prices may place it within the reach of all. Every state should have a thorough quarantine against pests as yet outside its borders, and the national law in this regard should be made as stringent as can be enforced.

We are all the time bringing trees and plants from foreign countries. With them are likely to be introduced pests that are new to us, or have as yet obtained only a slight foothold here. In the country from which these pests come there are other parasites that keep them in check. On their introduction into this country the parasite is often introduced with the insect we do not want, and the latter multiplies beyond all experience with it in its home. The writers on entomology assert that some of our worst pests could have been stamped out by the expenditure of a few thousands of dollars, if that expenditure had been made within a year or two after the insect was introduced. It is a mistake to suppose that these pests spread rapidly—all of them. Some are very slow in extending the limits of their visitations. An example of this is seen in the gypsy moth, which is still confined to Massachusetts. Another illustration is the imported elm leaf beetle, which has as yet hardly passed the Allegheny mountains.

We do not find it at all difficult to put large armies of men in the field in case of a foreign war; but we hesitate to put even a few hundred of men to work in combating an insect or fungous pest that is sure, if left to itself, to destroy hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property.

Horticultural Observations.

A gentleman last week called at the office of the Farmers' Review asking what should be done with a cherry orchard that had become infested with black-knots. The farm on which is the cherry orchard mentioned is in Pennsylvania and the owner has been west for fifteen years. During that time he has rented the farm and the orchard. He now finds that his orchard is a mass of black-knots. The advice was given him to cut down the orchard and burn all, and not to put either a plum or cherry orchard on its old site. Even ground under such an orchard becomes dangerous as a producer of spores from fallen parts of the knots.

The fate of this orchard illustrates the result of ignorance in handling such orchards or in fact any orchard or farm crop. Had the ones that rented the place known or understood the nature of black-knot, it could have been stopped in its first stage. The knots need never have been allowed to ripen and become sources of the production of new spores. These knots and the limbs with them on should have been removed with care and burned. Fortunately a law has just been passed in Pennsylvania that compels owners of such orchards to remove trees badly infested with black-knot and to cut off and burn limbs with black-knots on them. It seems a pity that it should be necessary to pass such, and they are an index of the ignorance of the people, but if men will not of themselves remove such centers of contagion, the law must come in and do its part, till such time as we become more fully civilized.

The American fruit exhibit at Paris bids fair to be a success. It is certainly under the charge of a man that knows about all there is to know about the exhibition of fruit. The appointment of Senator H. M. Dunlap has given universal satisfaction. Mr. Dunlap has been connected with every interest in Illinois for the advancement of horticulture since he was a boy. He has occupied leading positions in the state horticultural society, having been for several years secretary of it. He has traveled extensively through the fruit regions of the United States studying their conditions relative to horticulture. He has been and still is one of the most powerful friends in the Illinois senate, of the University of Illinois and the agricultural college, having been the introducer in the senate of Illinois of many of the bills appropriating money for those institutions. Probably there is not a man in the United States better fitted to look after our interests at Paris than Senator Dunlap.

Evolution of the Tile Drain.

The tile drain in its perfection did not come at once. It is the result of gradual development—we might say of evolution. Man first attempted to drain wet land by throwing stones into a ditch, covering them with branches of trees and faggots, and covering that combination with dirt. This method was evidently used extensively and for a long period. In time some smart fellow found that three poles laid together would give a fairly good drain, as they left a space in the center. They had only to be covered with grasses to keep out the dirt, and required but a small ditch for their reception. One wonders if there was not a good deal of trouble about joining the ends. Some one improved on this method by making the hole in the middle greater. This was done by splitting the three poles and having the split sides touch each other at the edges, forming a triangle. After that men got to laying two parallel walls of stone and covering them with flat rocks. We may be sure that these stone drains were at first small, for it has taken men a long time to find out that drains should be of good size. These stone drains are still extensively constructed in countries where stones are plentiful, even in our own New England states. The first tile drains were primitive. The tiles were made like an inverted U, and were placed on the smooth mud, having no other bottom. The edges of the tiles were pressed into the mud, and the whole drain thus easily became uneven. It is no wonder, then, that the next step was to make a tile with a flat bottom.

Tapping Worm-Eaten Maples.

Shall worm-eaten maples be tapped this spring? This question is being asked so frequently and so earnestly that the following opinion is given in reply by the Vermont experiment station:

Whether or not to tap will depend upon circumstances of which the sugar-maker is the best judge. His decision should be influenced by the following considerations. The sugar is the reserve food of the tree stored last season to feed the buds this coming spring. The amount of sugar taken from an ordinary maple tree by tapping is from 2 to 4 per cent of its total sugar content. This is so small a fraction as usually to cause no appreciable loss to the tree. But if the tree has been so badly eaten by worms during the past seasons as to have its life endangered, it might be undesirable to make even this small drain which would somewhat decrease the chances of life for the tree.

It is to be remembered, however, in this connection that all of the stored sugar was manufactured in the green leaves last season. Now if those leaves were eaten by the worms there would be proportionately less sugar in the sap, and in case the damage to the foliage was really serious the sap will be of so low quality as regards sugar content that it will not pay to tap the trees in any case. On the other hand, if there is enough sugar present to make tapping profitable, then there is enough so that the removal of the 2 to 4 per cent will not appreciably affect the tree.

It is believed, therefore, that the safest way for one who is in doubt is to determine the quality of the sap from his trees, selecting several representative trees and taking samples from these before tapping the remainder. If the sap is of good quality he may safely tap. If, however, it is of poor quality—that is, deficient in sugar—it will be both unsafe and unprofitable to tap. The directions may be tersely put thus: Tap if there is sugar enough to make it pay to do so.

Stables.

It is rare that farmers' stables are constructed with the three-fold idea of giving proper light, proper ventilation and proper drainage. Any one of these defects is likely to cause much suffering to the animals and loss to the farmer. If the stable is too dark, the eyesight of the animals is injured, and the same is true when the light comes in in doubtful rays from this crevice and from that. Even light from a dirty, small window obscured with cob webs is not of sufficient quality or quantity to give the light needed for the development and health of the eyes. Stables that are built compactly with light and that high up are generally also poorly ventilated, and the bottom part of the barns or stables become a pit to catch and hold all the bad odors, including the carbonic acid gas from the lungs of the animals. If, in addition, the drainage is poor the odors are increased, for the urine remains in the stable and throws off ammonia. It is a wonder that animals can live at all in some of the barns and stables in which they are kept all winter. Stables should be constructed on high ground where possible, that the drainage problem may be reduced to its smallest proportions. If a stable has to be constructed on the level, great care should be taken to see that it is perfectly drained, and that the drain is not clogged up and the urine forced back in wet weather. If the drainage is poor the only alternative is to use a large quantity of absorbent material, by the assistance of which the urine may be taken up and removed. Even in stables that have good drainage absorbents should be used to a considerable extent.

To Sell Animals.

Buyers of animals are to a very large extent influenced by their first impressions. This may not be strictly true of the professional horse buyers, but most of our horses and other animals are sold to men that are not professional buyers. So much does the appearance influence buyers that the professional horse buyers make a point of picking up poor looking but valuable animals and putting them in shape to bring the most money. Sometimes a few hundred weight of corn put onto a horse has brought a buyer that made the operation exceedingly profitable. There is no reason why the farmer should not make a special effort to put his sale stock in extra fine condition. A clean stable and inviting surroundings have a decided influence in biasing the opinion of the would-be purchaser. If a horse is to be sold time spent in grooming him till his coat shines will be time well spent. The fat that the farmer can put on his ribs will be sold at a fancy price. The same applies with equal force to cattle, and the well-fed, well-carded animal, kept in a clean, airy stable will sell for an advance over the good animal that is not so cared for.

A fib is a lie painted in water colors.

THE PLACE FOR A POOR MAN.

A Homestead Clear and Money Ahead in Two Years.

Alameda, N. W. T., Canada,
Dec. 22, 1899.

Mr. B. Davies, Canadian Government Agent, St. Paul, Minn.—Dear Sir: As I promised you about two years ago that at some future time I would let you know what I thought of western Canada and the chances of a poor man making a start and supporting a family at the same time, so will write a few facts concerning my own experience the past twenty-one months; and what I have done, any able-bodied man can do, provided he will work.

I left Traverse country March 20, 1898; landed in Alameda at noon the 21st with $3.55 in my pocket, a stranger and among strangers, and when my family came in October, 1898, my wife had nearly $10, or barely enough to pay freight on her stove, sewing-machine and clothes and beds. I commenced work March 28; also made entry for homestead same day (the man I started work for loaning me $15 to pay entrance fee), and I have earned or at least received $478.10 in wages since then and have been idle at least two months of the twenty-one since I came. The homestead I took had twelve acres broke by a former occupant. I paid $20 to have it replowed in July, '98, and the seed wheat for it cost me $8.25. I let it to a neighbor for one-half in elevator, clear of all expense except the seed, and this fall I received $70.10 for my part of the crops off the twelve acres, so my total receipts the past twenty-one months have been $548.10, and my expenses, besides living for self and family, have been as follows:

Entrance fee ($5 being paid for cancellation)	$ 15.00
Summer fallowing 12 acres	2[illegible].00
Seed for same	[illegible].25
Cost of house, besides my own labor on same	75 [illegible]
20 acres of breaking and double-discing same	[illegible]
	$[illegible]
My half of wheat	[illegible]
Net expense on homestead	$[illegible]

We moved on our homestead [illegible] 10, 1899, have thirty-two acres in [illegible] shape for crops in 1900. My wife joins with me in sending best wishes to you and yours.

You can truly say to any poor man who pays a big rent to get a farm (somebody else's land) or works for wages to support a family, that I have personally tried both in Minnesota and tried hard to make a success of it, but found to my sorrow that after working hard a poor living was all I could get out of it, and after nearly two years of western Canadian life I will say that I am very thankful to you for helping me to decide to try it in Canada. Yours respectfully,

W. H. KINKADE.

A MOTHER'S STORY.

Tells About Her Daughter's Illness and How She was Relieved—Two Letters to Mrs. Pinkham.

"MRS. PINKHAM:—I write to tell you about my daughter. She is nineteen years old and is flowing all the time, and has been for about three months. The doctor does her but very little good, if any. I thought I would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, but I want your advice before beginning its use. I have become very much alarmed about her, as she is getting so weak."—MRS. MATILDA A. CAMP, Manchester Mill, Macon, Ga., May 31, 1899.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—It affords me great pleasure to tell you of the benefit my daughter has received from the use of your Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After beginning the use of your medicine she began to get better, she mend rapidly and is now able to be at her work. Her menses are regular and almost painless. I feel very thankful to you and expect to always keep your Vegetable Compound in my house. It is the best medicine I ever knew. You have my permission to publish this letter if you wish, it may be the means of doing others good."—MRS. MATILDA A. CAMP, Manchester Mill, Macon, Ga., September 18, 1899.

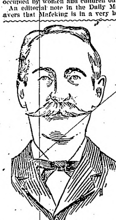
BOERS ARE CHECKED

SO LORD ROBERTS ADVISES THE WAR OFFICE.

Taken to Mean, Not by Fighting, but by Dispositions to Head Off Their Advance and to Bar Vulnerable Points on the Line of British Communication—Boer Peace Commissioners Have Papers Showing That Germany Urged the Transvaal to Wage War.

London, April 15. — "The forward movement of the Boers is checked," says Lord Roberts. This is taken to mean, not by fighting, but by dispositions to head off their advance and to bar the vulnerable points in the line of British communication. Relief is on the way to Wepener. The Boers in Natal appear incapable of developing an aggressive movement at Elandslaagte. Lord Methuen is at Zwartkopfontein, twelve miles east of Boshof, and is sending small, swift columns through the adjacent country. Lord Chesham, commanding one of these, encountered a small commando about ten miles southeast of Zwartkopfontein. He found most of the farms occupied by women and children only.

An editorial note in the Daily Mail avers that Mafeking is in a very bad way, and that the hope of relief is far off, as no force is advancing from the south.



Brig. Gen. Brabant.
Colonial Officer, Whose Command is Invested by the Boers.

The war office announces that 4,000 horses will arrive at the Cape this week. It is well understood that the animals are not fit for work until about ten days after the voyage. Two thousand more are due at the Cape next week. The war office has called out the reserve companies of several infantry battalions, which will be sent to South Africa forthwith.

The Boer peace commissioners have documents—the Rome correspondent of the Daily News says—showing that urgent advances to the Transvaal to wage war were originally made by Germany. This correspondent also asserts that Count von Buelow, the German foreign minister, who was said to have gone on a visit to a sick brother, really went to Milan for the express purpose of conferring with the delegates.

Boers Changing Tactics.

London, April 15.—The Daily Telegraph has the following from Elandslaagte, dated April 13: "The Boers are changing tactics and are moving from Glencoe westward, with a view of threatening the lines of communication to Ladysmith. On Tuesday a corps of carbineers and another of Thornycrofts' horse narrowly escaped being cut off owing to the treachery of a Kaffir and native guide.

Kimberley Preparing for a Siege.

Kimberley, April 15—The town guard has been remobilized and guns have been remounted at the forts owing to the fears of the populace that the Boers will again attempt a siege. A battalion of the Scottish rifles has arrived and the reoubts around the town are manned with regular troops. The military authorities regard these fears as groundless.

Boers Move Quickly.

London, April 14.—The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Morning Post, telegraphing Thursday, says: "The enemy have evidently determined to adopt entirely new tactics. Two columns are known to be moving to the south of Bloemfontein. They are relying upon Cape carts for transport and are carrying scarcely any forage and only sufficient food to meet immediate requirements of the convoy with ox transport following at a secure distance. The Boer columns are thus enabled to move almost as quickly as cavalry. It is reported that there are 9,000 Boers to the south of Dewetsdorp. The force extends from that point to Odendahl. The burghers who returned to their farms are undoubtedly rejoining the enemy. Lord Roberts has appointed the duke of Marlborough to be assistant military secretary at headquarters."

Total Boer Losses.

London, April 15.—The Daily Mail publishes the following dispatch, dated April 12, from Lourenzo Marques: "The Boers are manufacturing shells, especially Vickers-Maxim, in large quantities at the Begbie foundry, Johannesburg. The actual Boer losses to the end of March, including prisoners, are estimated at 12,000. At present there are several thousand Boers in Natal and 35,000 in the Free State."

Nothing to Cause Uneasiness.

London, April 15.—The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Daily Mail, telegraphing Thursday, says: "There is nothing whatever to cause uneasiness. It will presently be seen that the Boers are just where we want them. In a word, we are all right."

Boers Repulsed With Great Loss.

Bloemfontein, April 15. — Accounts received here of the fighting of the corps under Col. Dalgetty at Wepener show the Boers attacked them vigorously but were repulsed with great loss. The Boers subsequently relinquished the attack, and it is said here that they are returning northward.

Reported by Lord Roberts.

London, April 15. — The war office has received the following dispatch from Gen. Roberts, dated yesterday at Bloemfontein: "The enemy's movements south have been checked. Wepener is still surrounded, but the little garrison is holding out well. Troops are being moved to their assistance. The health of the troops is good and the climate perfection."

Surrounded by Boers.

London, April 15.—The Times has the following from Jamersberg, dated April 13: "Col. Dalgetti's force has been surrounded by some thousands of Boers, with eight guns, two pom-poms and two Maxims since Monday morning. They have gallantly withstood a heavy attack on Monday and again an important attack on Tuesday, and on Thursday there was a continuous shell and rifle fire."

TELEGRAPHERS' STRIKE.

Situation Shows an Improvement for the Road.

Atlanta, Ga., April 15.—The situation in the strike of the telegraphers on the Southern railroad shows an improvement at midnight for the railroad. Passenger trains which Thursday and early yesterday morning ran from one to five hours late, arrived yesterday afternoon and last night but slightly behind schedule time, and freight trains are beginning to move. The officials of the road here claim the situation is not even unchanged; that it has not at any time been other than normal.

President Powell, of the O. R. T., said that the strike would continue indefinitely, or until the company treats with the men. "My organization has a protective fund of $50,000 to be used in case of strike, said the president, "and I am having this money transferred from the headquarters to points on the Southern." President Powell says there has been no thought of a strike on the Queen & Crescent.

At Flowery Branch, Ga., Corona, Ala., and Columbus, Miss., operators who took the places of retiring agents have been roughly handled and run out of town.

Telegraph Operators Quitting.

Knoxville, Tenn., April 15. — Telegraph operators continue to walk out on the Knoxville division of the Southern railway. Twenty-nine are out now. Supt. Ewing states that all but two vacancies have been filled. The indications are that more men may yet go out. The railroad officials claim that traffic has not been interfered with.

Miners Go on a Strike.

Knoxville, Tenn., April 15. — Three hundred miners of the Coal Creek company mines went on a strike yesterday. The strikers are United Mine Workers who have taken their present step because four of their number were discharged. The general manager of the company stated that he would not reinstate the union men and had ordered all the strikers to turn over their tools and vacate the company's property within twenty-four hours.

New Siamese Minister.

Washington, April 15.—Phya Prasiddhi, the new minister from Siam, accompanied by his clerk, arrived here yesterday. He will present his credentials to the president at an early day. He has had previous experience here, having been an attache of the Siamese legation in 1887.

Colored Congressman.

Richmond, Va., April 15. — Virginia negroes have called a convention to be held here on May 10 to nominate a colored candidate for congress in every district in the state as a rebuke to the treatment the colored people received at the Republican state convention at Norfolk last week."

Nicaraguan Disavowal.

New York, April 15. — A special to the Herald from Washington says: Nicaragua has disavowed to the United States that she organized and dispatched to David the expedition which has aroused so much concern in Costa Rica and Colombia.

Deadlock in Ohio.

Wellington, Ohio, April 15.—The Republican congressional convention of the Fourteenth district, is again balloting at the rate of one vote a minute. Twelve hundred and seventeen ballots have been taken and there has been no break.

Charged With Swindling.

Chicago, April 15.—Nicholas Nowak of Ross, Wis., was arrested in this city last night on the charge of swindling a number of citizens of that town out of $10,000 through fraudulent methods in horse deals and real estate transactions.

Purchased the Holland.

Washington, April 15. — A contract was closed yesterday between the government and the Holland Torpedo Boat company for the purchase of the submarine boat Holland. The price agreed upon was $150,000.

Another Duel.

Paris, April 15.—The count of Lubersac and Baron Edourrd Rothschild, a son of Baron Alphonse Rothschild, fought a duel with swords yesterday. Baron Rothschild was deeply pricked in the right forearm.

Boiler Explosion.

Benwood, Va., April 15.—A boiler exploded at the Riverside iron works, demolishing three buildings and disabling the machinery. Fifteen people were injured. The property loss will aggregate $200,000.

Aged Man Commits Suicide.

Scranton, Pa., April 15. — George Manger, aged eighty-three years, committed suicide at the home of his daughter by blowing out his brains. He had been in ill health and was despondent.

Verdict of Not Guilty.

Medford, Wis., April 15.—The jury in the Blanchard murder trial brought in a verdict of not guilty. Blanchard was charged with having shot his wife at Rib Lake on Aug. 28.

Smallpox in Mexico.

City of Mexico, April 15.—During the past two weeks there have been forty cases of smallpox here and twenty-two deaths.

For Sidar's Palace.

Constantinople—The sidar's palace at Khartum will be furnished with articles ordered by the khedive at the time when he expected the emperor and empress of Germany to be his guests.

Statue of Gen. Gordon.

London—Arrangements are being made for the erection of a statue of Gordon in the public gardens of Khartum, not far from the spot where he met his death fifteen years ago.

Man may hold an important position, but a woman's is often more telling.

To Test Marconi System.

London—The London county council has decided to make a thorough examination of the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy between the fire stations at Streatham.

Lincoln's Birthday Legal Holiday.

Washington—It is now proposed to make Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday. Representative Moody of Massachusetts has introduced a bill making Feb. 12 a holiday.

CONGRESS

Resume of the Week's Proceedings.

The Senate.

Washington, April 10.—After some further discussion the senate yesterday rejected the sectarian school amendment to the Indian appropriation bill offered by Mr. Jones of Arkansas, by a vote of 30 to 16. As has been the practice for two or three years the free homes measure was offered as an amendment to the bill, but it was ruled out on a point of order that it was general legislation and therefore not germane to an appropriation bill. Without division the bill was passed. The measure carries about $8,414,000. An unsuccessful effort was made to agree upon a date for a vote on the resolution relative to the seating of Mr. Quay as senator from Pennsylvania. The effort will be renewed today. During the last two hours of the senate the Alaskan civil code bill was under consideration. An amendment by Mr. Hansbrough regarding locations in the Cape Nome district created a warm discussion.

The House.

Yesterday was a dull day in the house. The agricultural appropriation bill was under discussion and was made the excuse for an irregular debate on various topics. Good progress was made with the bill after the close of general debate, twenty-five of the forty-seven pages being completed before adjournment.

The Senate.

Washington, April 11.—Without objection yesterday the senate agreed to vote on the right of Hon. M. S. Quay to a seat in the senate from Pennsylvania on Tuesday, April 24, at 4 p. m. During its session the senate paid marks of respect to the late Hon. R. P. Bland of Missouri. The addresses passed on the memory of the dead statesman were notable for their earnestness and eloquence.

The House.

The house of representatives devoted the day to agricultural appropriation bill, passing it substantially as reported. An animated discussion arose over the series of amendments offered by Mr. Corliss of Michigan, restricting the distribution of free seeds and free vaccine. Mr. Corliss maintained that the government distributions invaded the field of private enterprise. His various amendments failed, however, after extended debate. An amendment by Mr. Latimer of South Carolina was adopted increasing the supply of "farmers' bulletins" issued by the agricultural department and distributed by members of congress.

The House.

Washington, April 12.—The long and bitter struggle over the Porto Rican tariff bill ended yesterday when the house, by a vote of 161 to 153 concurred in the senate amendments. The bill now required only the signature of the speaker of the house and the president of the senate before going to the president for his approval. These signatures will be attached today, and before nightfall the bill probably will become a law. As the bill originally passed the house it was a simple bill imposing 15 per cent of the Dingley rates on goods going into Porto Rico from the United States and coming from Porto Rico into the United States. As amended by the senate and agreed to by the house, all restrictions on goods coming into the United States from Porto Rico are eliminated and certain foodstuffs and articles which heretofore have gone into Porto Rico free by executive order, are excluded from the operation of the 15 per cent duty imposed on goods entering the island from the United States. A complete scheme of civil government for the island is also attached to the measure. Upon the final vote nine Republicans voted against the bill: Messrs. Heatwole of Minnesota, Crumpacker of Indiana, Lane of Iowa, Littlefield of Maine, McCall of Massachusetts, H. C. Smith of Michigan; Warner of Illinois, Fletcher of Minnesota and Lorimer of Illinois. Two Democrats, Messrs. Davey and Meyer of Louisiana, were paired with Democrats in favor of the bill, and one Democrat, Mr. Sibley of Pennsylvania, voted for it outright.

Mr. De Vires, the other Democrat who voted for the original bill, yesterday voted against concurrence. Mr. Stallings of Alabama was the only member absent and unpaired. The vote came at 5 o'clock, after a very interesting, and, at times, very exciting debate of five hours, which covered not only the bill, but the special order under which the house acted. One of the most dramatic features of the debate was the reading by Mr. Richardson, the minority leader, of the original opinion of Charles E. Magoon, the legal adviser of the war department, in favor of the view that the constitution extend over Porto Rico ex proprio vigore. Mr. Dolliver of Iowa, in reply, called Mr. Magoon a clerk who tried to override the great lawyer at the head of the war department. Mr. Warner of Indiana, Crumpacker of Indiana, McCall of Massachusetts and Lorimer of Illinois, all Republicans, made speeches against the motion to concur.

The Senate.

With little debate of importance the senate yesterday passed the Pacific cable bill, a measure appropriating $3,000,000 for the construction of a cable line between San Francisco and Honolulu. The bill was unanimously reported by the committee on naval affairs, and that [illegible] was passed without serious objection [illegible] was regarded as a compliment to the [illegible] committee. During the greater part of [illegible] the session the District of Columbia [illegible] appropriation bill was under consider[illegible] [illegible]000,000. As passed it carries nearly $8,[illegible]

The House.

Washington, April 13. — The house yesterday after a spirited debate adopted the resolution reported from the insular affairs committee to authorize the secretary of the treasury to designate depositories in Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippines for the deposit of government funds. By the terms of the resolution it applies to Cuba only so long as the island shall be occupied by the United States. An amendment to include the Philippines in this provision as to Cuba, offered, as stated, to emphasize the desire of the opposition not to retain the islands was defeated by a party vote. A senate bill which will permit the dependent mothers of soldiers or sailors of the Spanish war, even though they married Confederate soldiers, to receive the benefit of the general pension law, was passed. The remainder of the day was devoted to debate upon a resolution from the committee on election of president, vice president and representatives in congress for a constitutional amendment empowering the legislatures of the states to decide whether United States senators shall be elected by the legislatures or directly by the people. A substitute resolution was offered by the minority of the committee, which differed from the majority resolutions in giving the states no opinion but providing that in all states the people should vote directly for United States senators.

The Senate.

An effort was made in the senate by Mr. Morgan to displace the present unfinished business — the Spooner Philippine bill—by the substitution in its place of the Nicaraguan canal bill. While Mr. Morgan's motion failed—15 to 33—the Philippine measure had a narrow escape from being displaced by the Alaskan civil code bill on motion of Mr. Carter, the motion being defeated on a roll call—22 to 24. The feature of the day's proceedings was an exhaustive discussion of the Quay case by Mr. Burrows of Michigan. Senators on both sides of the chamber gave him most careful hearing, and at the conclusion of his speech warmly congratulated him. Mr. Jones of Arkansas, chairman of the Democratic national committee, opened the session with a sharp retort to a charge made against him in the house Wednesday by Mr. Dolliver of Iowa.

The House.

Washington, April 14. — The house yesterday, by a vote of 240 to 15, adopted a resolution for a constitutional amendment providing for the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people. Fourteen Republicans and one Democrat voted against it. By the terms of the resolution the amendment to be submitted to the legislatures is as follows:

"The senate of the United States shall be composed of two senators from each state, who shall be elected by a direct vote of the people thereof for a term of six years, and each senator shall have one vote. A plurality of the votes cast for the candidates for senator shall be sufficient to elect. The electors in each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislatures, respectively.

"When a vacancy occurs by death, resignation or otherwise in the representation of and state in the senate the same shall be filled for the unexpired term thereof in the same manner as is provided for the election of senators in paragraph 1; provided, that the executive thereof may make temporary appointment until the next general or special election in accordance with the statutes or constitution of such state."

The remainder of the day was devoted to the consideration of private pension bills. During the course of the debate there were several sharp attacks upon Mr. Talbert of South Carolina for his course in delaying action on bills.

TERRIFIC EXPLOSION.

One Man Killed and Several Fatally Injured.

Logansport, Ind., April 17—Too much pressure and a piece of defective gas pipe in the mains of the Chicago Pipe company at a point four miles southeast of here, was the cause of a terrific explosion yesterday in which Michael Ellison, Jr., was instantly killed and five other men received injuries from which it is doubtful if some recover. Twelve men were in the trench repairing a leak in a ten-inch main from which the gas had been transferred to an eight-inch main near it. The men were around a "T" in the eight-inch main and Ellison was stooping over it when the pipe gave way, and he was found 150 feet away, his bones broken and probably having met instant death. George Morrison in charge of the work, found himself sprawling on the ground thirty feet away with gravel and dirt blown into his skin, his whole body wrenched and most of his clothes torn and tattered, but no bones broken. Will Briggs was also hurled some distance and was taken home unconscious. Three men were knocked down and bruised in a frightful manner, but the rest of the men escaped with slight injuries from flying dirt and rock. The "T" weighs 1,000 pounds and was carried a distance of fifty feet, taking off the top of George Nelson's hat and a small bunch of his hair, otherwise not injuring him.

SWEPT BY A TORNADO.

Considerable Damage Reported in Parts of Kansas.

Wichita, Kan., April 17.—A storm approaching a tornado in proportion is reported from New Winfield, between here and Newton, and in the vicinity west of Clearwater. Two deaths are reported and four people are said to have been killed by overturned houses. Wires are down and names and particulars are unobtainable. At Putnam it is said several houses were blown down and four people seriously injured. Word was brought by passengers on the south-bound Santa Fe train that two persons were killed, but it is impossible to confirm this report. The telegraph and telephone wires were rendered useless by the wind and all attempts to reach Putnam, Newton or affected points have proven of no avail. West of Clearwater, in the country northeast of Adams, it is reported that a strip of country five miles long was swept by a storm at 6 o'clock last evening and several farmhouses, barns and other buildings were blown down. No casualties are reported from there.

Revolt Dying Out.

News of the Northwest

SPRING PLANTING.

Snowstorm Interrupts Work on the Farms.

Langdon, Minn., April 14.—Seeding that has been quite general here for the past few days has been considerably interrupted by a heavy fall of snow, which covers the ground. The weather is cold and disagreeable, the ground being frozen, so that farmers have been able to seed only a part of each day.

Sparta, Wis.—A heavy snowstorm has prevailed throughout this section since noon Wednesday. About six inches has already fallen. Reports from all surrounding towns indicate that the storm is general. Farmers take it as a great benefit to the land and growing grain.

Marshfield, Wis—A heavy snowstorm is raging. Snow has fallen to a depth of twelve inches.

Lake City, Minn.—Nearly two inches of snow fell over this section of the state, causing a serious interruption to seeding operations, which had been general throughout the county.

Stewartville, Minn. — The weather this week has not been favorable to farm work. Some grain is in the ground. Snow has been falling since yesterday. There will be no more seeding this week.

Kasson, Minn.—Seeding and spring work in general has begun in this vicinity. But owing to its freezing nights the farmers are making slow progress with their seeding.

UNKNOWN MAN FOUND DEAD.

A Bullet Wound in His Body Indicates Manner of Death.

Rices, Minn., April 14.—An unknown man was found dead on the shore of the creek back of Little Rock lake, most of his body being in the water, having apparently lain there for several days. A shot-wound was found on his body. Word was brought to the village by two boys. Under instructions Dr. Rathburn took charge of the body. It is supposed that he is the man who fired the two shots at the Pike boys on Saturday night, one of which took effect in the fleshy part of Frank Pike's arm, the shot going entirely through the arm.

COPPER NEAR SPARTA.

Rich Discovery of Ore That Assays High.

Sparta, Wis., April 14. — Copper in paying quantities have been discovered in the bluffs in the Kickapoo valley, near a little place called Avalanche, some twenty miles south of this city. KIRBY ACQUITTED.

The Jury Returns a Verdict of Not Guilty.

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 17. — After being out about eleven hours the jury in the Kirby case brought in a verdict of not guilty, thus ending one of the most remarkable cases in the criminal annals of the Northwest, a case which has been in the federal courts for more than three and a half years. This was the fourth trial of the case. The first resulted in a disagreement on the part of the jury. The second resulted in a conviction, but an appeal was taken to the United States court, which granted a new trial. This was held last October, but before the jury had agreed upon a verdict one of the jurors, unable to withstand the severe mental strain to which he was subjected, became temporarily insane, necessitating the discharge of the jury and the continuance of the case to the present term.

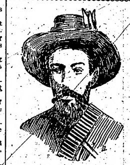
BIG BATTLE FOUGHT

PROBABLE THAT GEN. RUNDLE HAS HAD A FIGHT.

News of the Engagement May Be Expected at Any Moment—Impossible to Learn the Position of Affairs at Bloemfontein or When the Advance Northward Will Begin — Dispatches Are Conflicting—Renewal of Boer Activity in All Parts of the Theater of War.

London, April 23.—It is quite probable that by this time Gen. Sir Henry Rundle has fought a decisive battle with the Boers. He intrenched himself Saturday to await the arrival of Gen. Campbell with the Sixteenth brigade. The commander arrived Saturday evening and news may be expected at any moment. It is still impossible to ascertain the position of affairs at Bloemfontein or to learn when the long expected advance northward will begin. The dispatches conflict regarding the state of the preparations. For instance the Bloemfontein correspondent of the Chronicle says that the troops have been supplied with winter clothing and that the Modder river has fallen sufficiently to permit cavalry to cross. The Standard's representative says almost the exact opposite. Present indications, however, point to still further delay. Without attaching undue importance to the stories from Lourenzo Marques concerning the strength of the Boer forces, it would almost seem that the former estimates of 30,000 were rather low. During the last few days there has been a renewal of Boer activity in all parts of the theater of war. The tenacity of the enemy around Col. Dalgety proves that considerable forces are still there. Lord Roberts has ordered Lord Methuen to retire from Boshof, probably for the same reason. The presence of a Boer force at Frankfort looks like an endeavor to cut off Methuen, who may next be heard of as retiring upon Kimberley. The Boers are said to half encircle Bloemfontein to the eastward in a crescent formation. There have been several outpost affairs in that vicinity. The Eleventh division, under Gen. Pole-Carew, and the Fourth cavalry brigade are operating toward Sannazport.



Maj. Gen. Schalkburger, Gazetted Vice President of the Transvaal Republic to Succeed Gen. Joubert.

In Natal there is no diminution of Boer activity. It is reported that Sir Charles Warren is to be appointed governor of the Free State. Nothing is known regarding Sir Redvers Buller, but there is little doubt regarding his removal, and rumor has it that Lord Kitchener will get an important independent command.

The Boer peace commissioners are understood to have been disappointed by their visit to The Hague, but to be determined to visit Berlin and Paris before going to Washington.

Steyn Pleads With Burghers.

London, April 23.—The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Morning Post, telegraphing Friday, says: President Steyn's address to the burghers was an impassioned speech. He implored them to continue their resistance until the result of the efforts of the Boer peace commissioners was known.

Ambulance Corps Takes Up Arms.

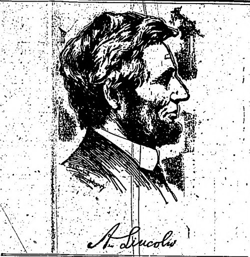
London, April 23.—The Daily News has the following from Lourenzo Marques, dated Friday: It is reported here that Gen. Dewet has been killed. Other European ambulance corps beside the Irish-American are taking up arms in behalf of the Boers. The latter are unable to obtain smokeless powder. Trenches are being constructed for eight miles around Pretoria. There are sixty-nine guns in position at Kroonstad, and seven French guns at Pretoria. Twenty-five mines at Johannesburg have been charged with dynamite and the Johannesburg fort has been dismantled.

Boers Show Renewed Activity.

London, April 23.—A dispatch to the Times from Johannesburg, dated Saturday, says: The Boers are displaying renewed activity. Five guns were used freely to-day from four different positions against our Surrey rifles, and from the southeast comes sound of heavy cannonading. Officers and men are on duty day and night and the recent heavy rains have made operations a test of pluck and endurance.

Kansas City Making Rapid Strides.

Kansas City, April 23.—Progress in the reconstruction of Convention hall is being made with rapid strides. The tons of twisted steel and debris have been removed from the site, much masonry involving the outside walls has been replaced, and this morning the Gillett-Herzog Company of Minneapolis, which is to erect the steel structure, put its force of men to work. Night work will be done to fulfill its contract calling for the erection of the ponderous steel trusses by June 15.



A. Lincoln

LINCOLN REPUBLICAN PARTY.

The Name Under Which The Silver Republicans Will Hereafter Act In National Politics.

Work of the Lincoln Republican League. Final Consummation at Kansas City on July Fourth.

St. Paul, Minn., April, 1990.

For several months past national leaders of that great body of patriotic Americans known as Silver Republicans, have been assisting in the crystalization of a movement to broaden the lines of that organization, so as to cover the newer issues and questions which have arisen since the silver men left the Republican party in 1896. In this work they have had the encouragement and assistance of many Republicans who remained in the party after 1896, clinging to the delusive hope that it would shake off the sinister influences and after all, in some way, be led back to Lincolnism and its former position in the regard of the country, but who have at last come to the parting of the ways, and refuse to be completely Hanna-McKinleyized. The work, now extended to all sections of the country, has been performed for the most part by the Lincoln Republican League, by which those initiating the movement have been known. The League has been most numerous in the middle Western States, and the greater part of its work has been conducted in Minnesota, chiefly by E. S. Corser, of Minneapolis, and his associates of the Minnesota Silver Republican national committee, of which he is the national committeeman for Minnesota, and of which national committee Mr. Corser is one of the executive officers. At the last meeting of that national executive committee this object and work of the League was approved, and since then the steps for organization of the Lincoln Republican Party have not only been rapid, but the work has been assisted in all parts of the country by Republicans leaving and making ready to leave the old hulk of Hannaism. The stage of open action having now been reached, the following outline of what has been done, and what is to be done is of great interest.

The Lincoln Republican League was a natural growth, resulting from the cleavage from the Republican party of 1896, of a host of its best members, because of the final treachery of that party to its repeated national declarations of loyalty to bimetallism. The growth of the League was however greatly enlarged during 1899, by the adoption of an imperial policy by the McKinley administration, and by the appalling development of trusts.

So marked was the growth of the Lincoln Republican sentiment, as ascertained by the League in a wide correspondence, that at Chicago, in November, 1899, when the program of the League was presented and urged upon the silver republicans, it met with general favor, and it became evident that when the National convention of the Silver Republicans should meet in 1900, that its platform would be greatly enlarged and nationalized, and that as a natural and easily comprehended distinction between Lincoln Republicanism and Hanna-McKinleyism, a new party called Lincoln Republican would absorb and replace the Silver Republican organization. To that end the work has proceeded, with such results that it may now be announced as a certainty that when the Silver Republican National Convention shall meet in Kansas City, on July 4th, one of its earliest determinations, will be the adoption of the name Lincoln Republican as its future distinctive party designation. This action was forecast in the call for the convention issued by the chairman of the National Committee, Hon. Charles A. Towne, which call was made to include those who heretofore and in the past, having been members of the Republican party, refuse to approve of its present policies as announced and pursued by the McKinley administration.

This first national convention of the Lincoln Republicans will be a large and very impressive body. It will have an attendance probably exceeding fifteen hundred delegates, and these will be impressive by their personnel. The national patriotic societies will be largely represented by their membership among the delegates. The Society of Colonial Wars, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Sons of the Revolution; the members of the Loyal Legion and of the Grand Army of the Republic, will be largely in evidence.

The convention is to be held in the Auditorium Opera House, near the Auditorium Convention Hall, in which the Democratic National Convention meets. The Lincoln Republican Convention will be conspicuously marked by its adherence to Lincoln. The decorations of the hall will make this a main feature, and the display of Lincoln portraits, flags and devices will only be subordinate to the Americanism which will dominate, in a profuse display of the American colors.

The delegates will wear badges bearing the legend "Lincoln Republican National Convention," and a portrait of Abraham Lincoln. It is probable that street parades of the members of the convention will add to its dramatic interest, while in the selection of its presiding officer, and in the addresses delivered, the very highest type of American citizenship will find expression.

As for the platform, judging from sentiments gathered from all sources, its general declarations may safely be forecast as follows:

It will declare for bimetallism, and for the restoration of gold and silver as standard money, with equally unrestricted coinage, and debt-paying power. It will, however, recognize that the gold standard is fixed upon the nation for a period, and that the financial question is, in the campaign of 1900, necessarily subordinated to another of paramount importance. It will declare against the policy of forcible territorial aggrandizement, which has become the one corner stone of the McKinley administration, despite the pledge of the President, and the purpose of the nation, condemning "forcible annexation" as "criminal aggression."

It will demand independence for the Filipinos, with protection for the Philippine Republic, extended by this greatest American Republic. It will demand the restoration of the "Great Americanism" of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln, with the old-time American independence, and the dethronement of the "Little Americanism" of McKinley, Hanna and Roosevelt, existing under the protectorate of English Toryism.

The platform will, it is believed, in dealing with the trusts, demand the removal of protective duties from all products which enter into trust monopolies; and with a further purpose of protection for the people, and hostility to special privileges, it will favor public ownership in all instances where it shall be shown that the public can thereby be best protected from private monopolies. It will favor a graduated income tax, and the principle of the initative and referendum, and it will most emphatically declare against the financial legislation enacted by the McKinley administration, by which the sovereignty over the nation's money has been surrendered to a banking syndicate.

It will declare in favor of civil service reform, and denounce the treason of the McKinley administration to the past declarations of the Republican party against use of offices as party spoils, and the shameless use of the offices in the gift of this administration to carry the elections by administrative corruption.

It will undoubtedly warn the nation against the surrender of the Republic to Commercialism; and against the supplanting of government "by, of and for the people" by a plutocratic oligarchy. It is certain that in every line of its platform it will endeavor to recall this nation to the Americanism of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln.

As to candidates, it will with one voice declare for Wm. J. Bryan as its presidential nominee, and will probably, with the same unanimity, present the name of Hon. Chas. A. Towne for the Vice Presidency, subject to the decision of a joint committee of conference, representing the Democratic, People's and Lincoln Republican parties.

That this is a movement of great significance at the present juncture, needs no further proof than a mere knowledge of what there is behind it of patriotic determination and enthusiastic purpose. Well did our great national leader Bryan say that the Hanna-McKinley imperialism would drive more men out of the Republican party than any former policy of recreancy to public interest. The Lincoln Republican party will be one of the means by which they will come out. The organization is fully equipped for the further work before it. Its means are in hand for all the expenses of the Kansas City convention, and for commencing publication of the literature it will use. The latter will be a series of Lincoln Republican booklets, some numbers of which are already prepared.

Former Republicans in all parts of the State or country in sympathy with this movement can get in touch with the League by addressing E. S. Corser, Minneapolis, Minn.

FOURTH OF JULY

FORECAST OF MINNESOTA'S PART IN THE COMING NATIONAL JUBILEE AT KANSAS CITY.

Minnesota Democratic Convention to Name Delegates—Points From the Meeting of the State Central Committee. Programme For Organization of the Lincoln Republican Party — "John Brown's Body"—Points From National Headquarters at Chicago—What Chairman Rosing Found There—State and Twin City Points and Pointers—Note and Comment of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, April 23, 1900.

The first Democratic gun for Minnesota is fired in the calling of the state convention to select delegates, called by the state central committee in its meeting of Thursday. There was a very full attendance of committeemen, and in the exchanges of members outside of the committee action, there was expression of complete satisfaction at the situation, state and national. Not a murmur of discord was to be heard at the meeting, and that spirit of harmony as well as enthusiasm prevailed which marks the forces of Democracy everywhere this year. The date of the convention was fixed for June 20, the the county conventions for the 14th, as of greatest convenience to the people of the state. The state convention will be at the Exposition building, Minneapolis. The farm work will not hinder at that time, while it will not be too far from, nor too near to, the big Fourth of July celebration at Kansas City. Among sentiments prevailing, aside from harmony and enthusiasm, is the absolute unanimity in support of Bryan. It is certain that not even the suspicion of any other name lurked in the mind of any member present. Another thing is the absolutely solid ranks with which we come up to the battle, and in vain was the inquiry made, through all of the sections of the state represented, for information of the loss of a single man from our ranks of 1896, in the national, and 1898 in the state campaign. On the other hand numerous accessions to our ranks are reported. Such is an indication of how the Minnesota Democracy enters the fight of 1900.

The apportionment gives a large convention, 1,183 delegates. These will select 18 delegates to Kansas City, two from each of the seven districts and four at large.

Very important is deemed the committee's approval of the new plan for constituting the state central committee, which will be chosen one from each county, instead of by judicial districts. Thus the counties obtain direct representation in the working organization. These committeemen are to be chosen at the county conventions, as well as a county central committee. Thus the whole working machinery of the state is in order as soon as the county conventions are held, without, as before, waiting for the usual late fall conventions.

A significant feature of the Convention call is the broad invitation given all "conservative reform citizens of the state, irrespective of past political associations," to unite for "pure economical and constitutional government," as well as those who "favor the republic and oppose the empire," to join in sending delegates.

There was among the committeemen not a little amount of talk concerning the Towne candidacy for the vice presidency. In substance it was that if such action should result from the canvassing that is being made of the situation, none would be more delighted than Minnesota Democrats. More than one committeeman spoke of the lofty sentiments expressed by Mr. Towne, so different from many men when dazzling prospects of personal preferment are held out before them. All appreciate his ability, high character and the strength which he, if selected, would bring to Mr. Bryan's ticket; and if that shall prove the wise determination of the national conventions, certain it is that none will be more pleased than the state Democratic organization.

Did you plant a tree on Arbor Day? If not stop the press and do so now.

State Chairman Rosing spent some time during the week with the management of the national campaign at Chicago, and brings good report of the work that is being done, and the prospects as viewed at headquarters. He commends in high terms the chairman of the executive committee, Hon. J. G. Johnson, and Secretary Walsh, for the thoroughness and executive ability shown and their wide grasp of the work in hand. A well-equipped force is rapidly extending the work to all parts of the country.

Mr. Rosing also met Mr. Willis J. Abbot in charge of the national press work, and speaks quite as highly of the work of Mr. Abbot's press bureau.

Mr. Rosing heard from one and all the same reports of confidence in coming success.

As was announced in this letter would be the case the programme for the great movement of transforming the Silver Republican into the Lincoln Republican party has now been widely published. This is unquestionably one of the most important movements that the present generation has seen, if ever it has been equalled for devotion to principle and probable comparative results. Not a day passes but some Republican is recorded in Minneapolis or St. Paul as having decided to stand by his old party no longer. If the little incident of taxation without representation, as to Porto Rico, can so open the eyes what will not happen when the full iniquity of Hanna-McKinleyism dawns on those who have hitherto clung to the party of "Honest Old Abe Lincoln?"

"Honest Old Abe!" His name will be the sign manual of this great movement for salvation of the republic. It will be the "in hoc signo" of the allied conventions at Kansas City, and his picture will adorn all of the large amount of campaign literature, which is already issuing from the League press. This feature of the coming campaign will remind many a Lincoln Republican of the days of the "Wide Awakes" and other features of the campaigning of abolition times.

Speaking of abolition days, the colored people of Minneapolis are planning for a grand observance of the anniversary of John Brown of whose "soul" there will be so much of "marching on," in this campaign for liberty for all men of all races, in all climes.

The addresses which ex-Governor Altgeld of Illinois is delivering in different sections of the country must be productive of great good. His Albany Jefferson banquet speech is one of his greatest. And a hopeful sign of the times was that the "anarchist" was cordially received by and made the guest of one David B. Hill. The latter is certain some day, and we believe in the near future, to step out into the new light and truly say, "I am now a real Democrat."

Whenever a month passes that there is not some kind of a political banquet among the Minneapolis hosts of Bryan why then it is a very cold day for Banquet Baldwin. And so, he has been at it again, and the Bryan club remembered Jefferson's birthday, with a feast, of both sorts (for soul and body), with that never tiring defender of the faith, C. D. O'Brien of St. Paul, as the principal speaker.

The Twin City commercial travelers applaud the course of Mr. Dowe, of New York, in resigning from the body which it was the apparent scheme of the Hannaites to make a Republican campaign tool.

Apropos of the traveling salesmens' views, the following from a Minnesota traveling man, in the American Artisan, is right to the point:

"While the great trusts have felt the prosperity, and through control of the raw material and output, have paid rich dividends upon watered stocks, the consumer has not felt the first blush of even the newspaper prosperity. As a dealer put it a few days since, prosperity has not yet reached the masses, and long before it shall reach them I fear the great Hipogat will have sucked the orange dry, leaving only the dry crusted rind for the consumer and him who stands at his gateway holding the supplies he may never call for; in short, while the trust owner seems well protected and fortified about, the bag holder (the retailer), seems to be at the mercy of fate."

The meager report given in the Associated Press of the speech of Senator Hoar on imperialism, indicates that it was a great effort, marred only, perhaps, by the senator's futile clinging to the hope that he will drive his party into the right action. It's too late, senator. Your idol is dead—its eyes is sot!

And, speaking of Senator Hoar, several Twin City letters were written him in approval of the principal portion of his speech. The Minneapolis anti-imperialists will send a formal resolution of thanks.

Angus McKinnon, only son of Alex McKinnon of the state board of grain appeals, has just been elected editor-in-chief of The Gopher, the brilliant little organ of the University of Minnesota. The election of Mr. McKinnon is considered a triumph by the very active anti-imperialists of the old "U," and indeed, it is becoming more and more noticeable that the vigor and brain of the university, in quality as well as quantity, leans far away from the McKinley-Hanna policy of the administration.

We have received the following:

"Editor Reform Press Bulletin:—A national bank defender denies some of the points recently stated by you in the Bulletin, especially that, substantially, under new banking law, the government (the people) furnish the money gratis that the national banks loan to the people and make their interest upon. Will you repeat the facts briefly?—Otter Tail County Farmer.

Reply:—Take the case of one of the new banks which may be organized in Otter Tail, under the Nelson amendment permitting banks with as small capital as $25,000.

With this capital of $25,000 must be purchased $25,000 of the 2 per cent bonds, which must be sent to Washington and placed on deposit there, whereupon the Department prints and sends back to the bankers $25,000 in crisp new national bank notes. The bonds remain in Washington and draw their regular interest, and the new notes are ready to loan out. Of course there is some slight deduction, such as the premium on the bonds, and the charge of one-half of one per cent on circulation. But substantially the capital has been doubled, has it not? Yes, doubled, and the capital removed from all taxation of any kind!

This is the way the thing piles up for the bankers. Not only has their capital been doubled by law at one stroke, but instead of paying anything, either in interest or taxes, the people pay them one and one-half per cent for the privilege of giving them 100 per cent more capital than they had raised to do business on! The one-half of the doubled capital they proceed to loan to the people at whatever rate of interest they may conclude to charge, under the many ways which legal rate of interest can be exceeded without it being found out or punished; the other half is doing business for them in Washington by regular interest called for by their coupons.

His satanic majesty may not run all the newspapers in the country, but no one can deny the fact that no newspaper can be printed without the aid of the "devil."

The chief French railroads have removed all the advertising billboards from along their routes, so that the many strangers who visit France this year will be able to scan the beauties of the landscape without incessantly being reminded of the virtues of wares they do not need. Americans will note the reform with pleasure, and may be moved to say, with Sterne, "The order this matter better in France."

President Frost of Berea College tells of the success of a Kentucky mountain girl who taught school in a particularly unpromising district. A native observer praised her enthusiastically, saying that to look at her you would think she was having "the finest kind of a time." Possibly some teachers in favored regions miss the highest success because to look at them you would think they were having the worst kind of a time.

Value of Diamonds.—An idea of the great increase in the cost of diamonds imparted by the labor of polishing and mounting, as well as by the profits of traders, may be obtained by comparing their price at the mines in South Africa with the prices in the jewelry shops. A diamond weighing one carat, mounted in a ring may cost the buyer $100 or more, but at Kimberley the average value of diamonds is only $6.33 per carat. The value, of course, varies with the size and purity of the stones, but the total value of the 22,343 carats of diamonds found in the Transvaal in 1898 was only $212,812, an average of $9.32 per carat.

Puerto Rico's exportation of coffee is larger in volume than that of any of the other native products of the island, and, according to Gen. Roy Stone, much of the coffee is sold as genuine Mocha and Java. The average Puerto Rican agriculturist, whatever his deprivations otherwise, is usually the possessor of a coffee-patch, which he cultivates, and from which he secures a sufficiency of the berry to supply the needs of his family. He bakes the berries till black, and pounds them into powder in a mortar. The beverago resulting therefrom has the color of ink and the consistency of broth. Since the close of the war, some of the natives have learned to prepare coffee for drinking purposes after the American fashion; but most of them practice the ways of their fathers.

In the light of recent discoveries one of the greatest wonders of the heavens appears even more wonderful. There is a small class of variable stars, less than twenty in known number—the most conspicuous member of which is Algol, the "Demon" of the Arabs—which at brief intervals suffer a partial eclipse from the interposition of dark or invisible companions revolving around them. Mr. Roberts of Cape Colony and Mr. Russell of Princeton, working independently, have lately shown that all of these bodies are surprisingly light in their composition, hardly more than whirling clouds. "In only one case can the limiting density exceed half that of water, and in six cases it is less than one-tenth that of water. The average is one-sixth that of water. This density these stars can not exceed, although they may fall far below it. The density of our sun compared with water is 1.41. The possibility exists that the Algol stars may each have a denser nucleus surrounded by an enormous cloudy envelope.

The border line between gifts and bribery has been so often crossed that scrupulous officials seldom accept a gift of intrinsic value. A late president of the United States, who had nearly two hundred curious and historic canes, used to say that such gifts necessitated the offer of neither "the ministry to England nor the post-office at Podunk." Not all gifts, however, are of suspicious complexion. For example, the check of one hundred thousand dollars recently sent to the president of a street railway company by certain prominent members of the corporation was a notable token of their trust in his integrity and of their appreciation of his devotion to the interests of the corporation and the public. The gift is probably the largest ever made by a corporation to a single salaried officer. That the recipient not many years ago was a brakeman, and that he owes his permanent advancement to no influence but his own industry, ability and faithfulness, is sufficient protest against the too common assertion that boys of today have "no chance."

The reciprocity treaties recently negotiated by the executive have not found favor with the senate. In the case of the arrangement with the Argentine Republic the time limit fixed within which the treaty must be ratified passed without action by the senate. Those with England relating to the West Indies would have lapsed in the same way had not the British government agreed to an extension of the time. The time limit in the French treaty was March 24, but it was extended with the consent of the French government.

Evidences of the preparation for the grand national contest for control of the government during the next four years are now to be found everywhere. Caucuses and conventions for the election of delegates to local, state and national conventions draw the attention of every man of whatever party to the culminating political duty which he is to perform in November. Discussion of "issues" grows warmer, and consideration of statesmanship of prospective candidates becomes eager and pointed.

A CHILD WHO SEES THINGS UPSIDE DOWN

She Reads, Writes and Does All Things as if Her Brain Were Inverted.

There is a 7-year-old girl in Alviso, Cal., who lives in a world all her own. Nobody would want to share her world with her, because it is a topsy turvey one—so very topsy turvey that it makes the head dizzy just to think about it. Little Mary Terry sees everything bottomside up and backward. The experiences that each day brings to this child in real life are more remarkable than those which befell Alice in Wonderland, for Alice was fiction and Mary is fact. This sole inhabitant of topsy-turveydom is the daughter of a Portuguese rancher near Alvarado. For two years she has attended the Alviso public school. She is a pretty child, shy and graceful, with rosy coloring and black hair. Her case puzzles the wise men of the west. So far as is known, a similar instance has not been brought to the attention of science. It was nearly a year before her teacher, Miss Carrie Parrish, discovered the strange peculiarity of little Mary. The first six months' work in the receiving class consists mainly of the teaching of English. From the first Mary appeared timid and seemed slower of comprehension than the other members of her class. Nobody could understand why she did not learn faster. For a whole year her strange hieroglyphics appeared utterly meaningless to her teacher, who could only wonder at their invariable incorrectness. One day a certain method in their madness became apparent to Miss Parrish. Then she discovered that her little pupil was not only writing everything upside down, but was reversing everything that she wrote. If you will take a sheet of paper, write your name on it, turn it upside down, reverse the sheet and hold it up to the light you will see what Mary Terry sees when she has the pleasure of beholding your signature. Since the date of her discovery it has been a perpetual struggle for Miss Parrish to keep pace with her pupil's peculiar point of view, and after patient effort, most praiseworthy on the part of a teacher who is in constant charge of four and five different grades of pupils, Miss Parrish has succeeded in making the little girl understand that to be herself understood she must reverse and invert what she sees. It would seem as if Mary were not less but more gifted than the average child to have been capable of understanding the complex and difficult command laid upon her, though the testimony of experts is all on the other side. This is, however, reasoning by analogy, as the writer has so far found no identical case in optical annals, spiegelschrift or mirror-writing, which is found to be common among half-witted children, being the nearest approach to this perversity of vision. In cases of mirror-writing, unconsciously produced as a correct copy of ordinary writing, paralysis of the right side is often found.

A simple inversion of things, without the accompanying reversion, is a fairly common conception, and the attempt to conceive of the various physical and psychical phenomena consequent on living in an upside-down world has been made the subject of practical experiment in San Francisco, when G. M. Stratton, A. M., professor of psychology at Berkeley university, made his famous looking glass experiments. But neither of these reached the unique point of view which is Mary Terry's peculiarity. The other day at the school, in looking at the words on the blackboard, she seemed to be trying to peer over them—to the other side, which is exactly the mental attitude necessary to the ordinary observer for the conception of the origin of Mary's kind of writing.

It is apparently impossible for her, until she has seen over the letters, to understand their meaning.

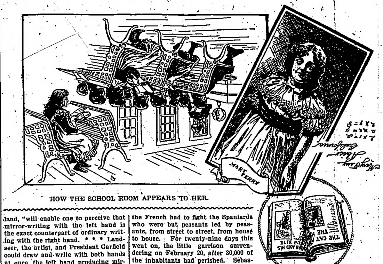
Imagine the mental gymnastics required of that little head.

It was amusing to see Mary hold her reader indifferently upside down or downside up, reading equally well in either case. In the samples obtained of her work will be found examples of most of these inversions. The spiegelchrift, "the good," was copied correctly from the board, from the teacher's spiegelchrift. It will be observed that the best script produced is in the specimen copied from upside down writing done by the teacher. Undoubtedly the most singular specimen is copied from ordinary script. Here a still more curious inversion occurs. In the name "Terry," the T is first written reversed, then comes the "yrre," also in reversed and inverted script and reversed spelling. There are occasional lapses of a letter, and it will be seen that "a" and "c" seem most difficult to produce. The drawings show some little feeling for line. Observe the stick in the boy's hand and the buttons on the man's coat.

With the kind permission of her principal, Joseph Diaz, the writer spent a day in school with Mary. All the examples of her work shown were done as ordinary lessons during the school routine, with slight variations.

Dr. George H. Powers expresses his belief that the defect in Mary's make-up is mental, rather than physical. That as an image reflected on the retina is inverted, and that as it is a mental effort only which enables man to see things right side up, it must be a mental lack in Mary's case which hinders her from seeing as the rest of mankind sees. He said he had never heard of a similar case in all his practice and reading.

"A little reflection," says W. W. Ireland, "will enable one to perceive that mirror-writing with the left hand is the exact counterpart of ordinary writing with the right hand. * * * Landseer, the artist, and President Garfield could draw and write with both hands at once, the left hand producing mirror-writing."



HOW THE SCHOOL ROOM APPEARS TO HER.

A WOMAN HUNTER OF RENOWN

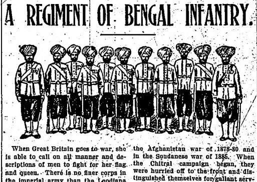
Mrs. Cardeza Has Traveled 700,000 Miles After Game and Pleasure.

One of the wealthiest women in America and perhaps the greatest sportswoman in the world is Mrs. Charlotte D. M. Cardeza, who is almost constantly touring around the world on her yacht, the Eleanor. She is a hunter of America's big game, the moose and the caribou, and has shot as many as six of the latter in the woods of Maine alone. She has a hunting lodge in that state at Mt. Kineo, and there she goes hunting every fall. She frequently hunts in Newfoundland. Mrs. Cardeza owns a home at Germantown, a cottage at Newport, has an estate in the West Indies and keeps a suite in a New York hotel the year round, but loves best of all the rough pine lodge built by the men of the Eleanor's crew in the forest at the foot of Mt. Kineo. The yacht Eleanor is the largest in the world owned by a woman and is palatially equipped. In this she travels everywhere; to China today, to India tomorrow, and next week, perhaps, to New York City. The Eleanor's log shows 700,000 miles at the present time. She has twice steamed around the world, and the ship's papers bear the custom house seals of nearly every port known to the seafaring man. Besides being a pleasure craft, the Eleanor is something of a gunboat. For cruising in the South sea, where armed pirates sometimes make trouble, Mrs. Cardeza has armed her floating home with a gatling gun, magazine rifles and more than one brace of revolvers. The fifty men in the crew could stand off 5,000 cannibals of Polynesia and put them to utter route in less time than it takes to tell it. From topmast to keelson the trim Eleanor is a magnificent boat, a water palace about which all may dream, but which few people are fortunate enough to possess.

New Metal, Albradium.

Since the wholesale production and consequent cheapening of aluminum, which within living memory was worth more than its weight in gold, many useful alloys have been made. Among these one of the most recent is albradium, a perfectly white metal of attractive appearance, which can be made into plates, tubes, rods, or ornamental castings. The new metal is said to be free from corrosion, and to be extremely durable, while its price compares favorably with brass, German silver, bronze, etc. As a set-off against these obvious advantages it may be noted that in most aluminum compounds a great difficulty is found in the matter of soldering and in obtaining perfect screw threads.—Chambers' Journal.

A REGIMENT OF BENGAL INFANTRY.



When Great Britain goes to war, she is able to call on all manner and descriptions of men to fight for her flag and queen. There is no finer corps in the imperial army than the Loodiana Sikhs, who were raised in India in 1846, and were for a long time known as the "Gordon Sikhs." These fine, dark-skinned soldiers, specimens of whom are shown in the accompanying illustration, have seen service under the union jack in China in 1860, and in the Indian mutiny. They fought in the Afghanistan war of 1878-80 and in the Soudanese war of 1885. When the Chitral campaign began, they were hurried off to the front and distinguished themselves for gallant service. Their regiment is, as its name denotes, a class one, and is recruited entirely from Cis Sutlej Jat Sikhs, a purely agricultural class of peasant proprietors, whose traditions allow them to follow nothing but the plow or the drum. Splendid in physique and stout of heart, they make ideal soldiers.

A DESPERATE RESISTANCE.

Saragossa's Defense Was One of the Most Stubborn in History.

When Napoleon left Spain in 1809, leaving his brother Joseph in possession of Madrid, he seemed justified in thinking Spain was his. Yet but a few weeks after Joseph Bonaparte found that the town of Saragossa still defied the French. The French army invested it, and on January 22 successfully stormed the walls. Then the real fighting began. Every street was barricaded, every house a fortress, and the French had to fight the Spaniards who were but peasants led by peasants, from street to street, from house to house. For twenty-nine days this went on, the little garrison surrendering on February 20, after 30,000 of the inhabitants had perished. Sebastopol was besieged by the French and English armies for eleven months, commencing October 17, 1854, to September 9, 1855, but the hardships were endured by the besiegers, not the besieged, who had houses to live in and plenty of food. Three of the worst sieges of modern times were of very short duration when compared with Kimberley's gallant stand of four months. During the Indian mutiny, Cawnpore surrendered to Nana Sahib on June 25, 1857, after a stand of only three weeks. But the surrender was not made by the British but the native garrison, and so the latter were let go free by Nana Sahib, while but three of four Europeans managed to escape the butchers of Nana Sahib, although that prince had given his word of honor that the whole garrison should be allowed to depart. Lucknow during the same war held out for eighty-six days from July 1 to September 25, when it was relieved by General Havelock, while the French garrison of Badajoz, during the Peninsular war, withstood the British under Wellington from March 16 to April 6, 1812.—London Daily Mail.

MARRIAGES IN BULGARIA.

The Price of Wives Varies from $200 to $1,500.

There are few places within the limits of semi-civilization that boast of more interesting marriage customs than Bulgaria. Every young peasant wishes to marry as early as possible, as he is of little importance in the community until he has a wife. But he is not in danger of forming an alliance in opposition to his parents' wishes as his earnings belong to them until he is wedded, and his wife must be bought and paid for according to her station in life. His parents usually give him the necessary sum as soon as they can afford it, so that the restriction is less galling than it seems. A "wife purchase" varies from $200 to $1,500, in proportion to the wealth of the contracting families, for the marriage is strictly a family affair. In addition to this, sum a smaller amount is given to the bride's mother for her personal use. After the pecuniary arrangements have been made by the proxies, the betrothal takes place on either a Wednesday or Thursday. It consists of the exchange of written pledges regarding the sum to be paid by the bridegroom on the one hand and the household furnishings to be supplied by the bride on the other. Rings there are blessed by the priest and exchanged by the couple, the fiancee kisses the hands of the guests assembled and retires with her young friends to a feast prepared in another room. The young people then dance outside the house and sing. The fiancee's presents are then produced and their value estimated by the father of the bride. These consist of shoes, headdress and necklace of coins, silver belt, bracelets and other jewelry. The father usually regards their value as insufficient, probably to enhance his daughter's worth in her suitor's eyes, and the lover adds coin by coin until an agreement is reached. The marriage does not take place until six months after the betrothal. During the week preceding the day set for the wedding the house for the young couple is furnished by the bride's parents. Then her home is cleaned and whitewashed and every hidden store brought out for decoration. Cakes are made and sent around as invitation cards, requesting the recipient to come to the wedding on Sunday, the invariable wedding day. The articles composing the trousseau are hung up for inspection on cords stretched across the principal room on Friday by the feminine part of the community. On the following day two of the bride's friends come to help her dress her hair, plaiting it in minute braids, not to be undone until after the ceremony. Then the village maids come with gifts of sweets and flowers and all sit down on the floor to a dinner of vegetables. On Sunday the bride is seated in state in all her gorgeous apparel and with a spangled red veil over her face, to be seen of all the village folk. She wears all the ornaments given her by her fiancee and as many more as she possesses. The religious ceremony is that of the Greek church, and may take place in the church or in the home of the bridegroom's father. After its performance the party returns to the home of the bride's parents, where the wedding feast is held. Singing and dancing follow until time to escort the bride to her new home.—New York Tribune.

Harder to Hit Soldiers in Battle.

"On the battlefields nowadays it is only when we come to the bayonet charge that the men fight shoulder to shoulder," remarked an English army officer recently. "In order to minimize the risk of their being hit the men fighting are at other times kept a distance apart. Thus the bullet that just misses one man does not strike his neighbor. The order being so open, and the men thus spread out over a considerable extent of ground, it sometimes hapens, especially when—as in the present war—many officers are killed, that a number of men find themselves without any commander. But the modern soldier has enough 'fighting intelligence,' as it is called, to go on carrying out operations till he again has a leader. In battle the men under various commanders often get thoroughly mixed up; but that has no effect on them. They instinctively obey any commander; and in South Africa it has recently occurred that soldiers have fought gallantly under officers whom they never in their lives saw before."

When Macdonald Met Wales.

There have been many versions of the conversation said to have taken place between the prince of Wales and Gen. Hector Macdonald, when the latter returned to England after Omdurman; but a correspondent, on the faith of a friend of the general's, vouches for the following as being the correct version, says the London Chronicle. The prince asked "Fighting Mac" how it was that they had not met before. "Pardon me, sir, I think we have," was the reply. "Where can that have been?" asked the prince, surprised. "When you were in India, sir, I did sentry-go outside your tent." "But why was a sentry needed outside my tent?" The answer, which need not be reported here, caused his royal highness considerable amusement, but when he had regained control of his features he held out his hand and said, "General Macdonald, you were doing sentry-go in 1875, and now you are a general in the British army. I am proud to have met you." Those who know the prince of Wales' felicity of praise will have no difficulty in accepting the final remark, at all events, as authentic.

A Patriotic Woman.

Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer, who died recently at Saratoga, N. Y., raised and distributed during the war of the rebellion over $136,000 worth of supplies for the soldiers, and she often rode along the front line of battle in order to gather up and care for the wounded as they fell. She gained a national reputation as the organizer of the diet kitchen. It was while in the hospitals at Chattanooga, in the winter of 1863-64, that she carried out her plan for supplying food for the men whose condition in the hospitals was the most serious. The government furnished the staple articles, and the Christian commission provided the delicacies and cordials and the nurses to superintend the diet kitchens. These diet kitchens were first introduced in the department of the Cumberland and in that of the Mississippi, and with such excellent results that Mrs. Wittenmyer was urged to establish them in the army of the Potomac, which she did in the winter of 1864. This branch of the hospital service has become permanent, and is recognized by the government officials in this country as almost indispensable in time of war.

New Uses for the Roentgen Rays.

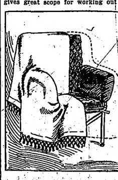
Dr. Neville Wood records in the London Lancet a case in which a considerable over-growth of hair on a woman's face was removed by applying the Roentgen rays. There were ten sittings per week of ten minutes each, the face and neck being protected with a lead-foil mask, except where the rays were intended to act. After fourteen exposures, it was noticed that the darker hairs had lost some of their luster, and in a week's time there was an obvious lessening in their number. The hairs became brittle and pale in color, with atrophic bulbs. There was a slight reddening of the skin during this period. After forty-five exposures, the whole of a very thick downy and hairy growth had disappeared, except nine hairs which remained at least a week after the total removal of the others. They were found, however, to be readily separated at the bulbs, being retained in position by a more superficial part of the root-sheath. After cessation of the treatment, only a few thick hairs had returned, and these were removed with the well known process of destroying them by the electric needle. Dr. Wood is of the opinion that the treatment is neither disfiguring nor painful, and thinks that about twenty will clear the ground for the use of the electric needle, and that between thirty or forty exposures will probably result in permanent baldness. The rays also promise to be of service as a curative agent in the treatment of certain diseases of the skin. It seems certain that cases of lupus are much benefited, if not cured, by being treated by periodic applications of the X rays, and the hope is also held out that obstinate cases of eczema, ringworm, etc., will prove amenable to the same treatment. At Copenhagen a number of cases of lupus have been successfully treated by exposure to sunshine, and as the Roentgen rays have an effect like sunshine on the skin, it is thought that they may prove equally efficacious.

The Speed of Cable Messages.

In operating long cables very delicate instruments are required, and the currents arriving at the receiving end are very feeble in comparison with those employed in land line signaling. The longer the cable, naturally, the feebler the impulses ariving at the receiving end. A short cable, a cable of under 1,000 miles being generally considered a short cable, gives a speed of signaling amply sufficient for all purposes, with a conductor weighing about 100 pounds to the mile, surrounded by an insulating envelope of gutta-percha weighing about an equal amount. When we come to a cable of about twice this length it is found necessary in order to get a practically unlimited speed, that is, a speed as high as the most expert operator can read it, to employ a core of 650 pounds of copper to the mile, insulated with 400 pounds of gutta-percha to the mile. These are the proportions of copper and gutta-percha in the 1894 Anglo-American Atlantic cable, which is considered the record Atlantic cable for speed of working and has been worked, by automatic transmission, at the rate of some forty-five words a minute. The type of cable proposed for the Vancouver-Fanning section of the British Pacific cable, as designed by Lord Kelvin, is to have a core of 552 pounds of copper and 368 pounds of gutta-percha to the mile and is calculated to give a speed of twelve words per minute over a length of 3,560 miles. It is not considered safe to adopt a much heavier core than this for the reason that the weight of the complete cable with a core that should weigh more than about half a ton to the nautical mile would be so great that picking it up for repairs from a depth of 3,000 fathoms would be an extremely difficult and hazardous operation.—Scribner's.

Novel Folding Bed.

Everyone knows how closely that old time, comfortable chair, which is colloquially spoken of as a "sleepy hollow," comes to forming comfortable sleeping quarters, but it was the fertile imagination of an inventor of New York city that discovered that there lurked in it all the possibilities of the ideal folding bed. In the first place, such chairs are usually heavily and softly padded, so that disposes of the most troublesome feature, namely, the stowage of the mattress. Then they are always large and roomy, and that gives great scope for working out a comfortable and capacious single bed. Next the draperies are usually heavy, and very extensive, and the upholstery need not be very elaborate, so that is still another advantage such a chair possesses for the transformation contemplated. This can very easily be done by arranging the arm pieces on hinges and brackets. One can be changed to a convenient angle for the pillow rest. The back is disposed of so as to form a continuation of the seat, and thus make the frame of the bed, while the other arm is disposed of in any manner convenient.

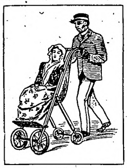


Novel Life Preserver.

An improved or protected breeches buoy has been invented by Lieut. C. H. McLellan, inspector of the life-saving service on the Jersey coast. The favorite method of landing shipwrecked people when the wreck lies near enough to the beach to enable the surfmen to shoot a line over the vessel from the shore is the use of the breeches buoy, which is simply a big cork life-preserver, fitted with a short pair of canvas trousers or trunks. The shipwrecked person puts on this preserver and the buoy is hauled back and forth from the wreck by men on the beach by means of tackle. All objections to this old buoy will be overcome by the new and protected preserver designed by Lieut. McLellan, which will soon be introduced all through the service. Surrounding the breeches, through which a person thrusts his legs, is a canvas bag. This affords an extra protection against the sea. There is a valve at the bottom, through which any water that comes over the buoy is automatically ejected. It is said that women show much less hesitancy in trusting themselves to the new-style buoy than to the old one.—New York Mail and Express.

An Invalid Derry Cart.

A radical change in the character of the coach employed to take baby out for an airing has taken place within the last few years, and the great convenience of the Derry cart has suggested the possibility of constructing a folding invalid or infant's cart on the same principles. The illustration shows how this idea has been worked out by an inventor of Hamburg, Germany. There may be two wheels in front and two back, as shown, or the three-wheeled arrangement so popular for the up-to-date automobile may be used. The support for the patient is formed of canvas, which extends from the axle to the cross bar of the extension pieces that are used as handles for the patient's attendant. A foot-rest is provided with means for adjusting its height to accommodate the length of limb of the occupant. The peculiar construction of the frame and the canvas support adapt it to fold up into a very compact space, which is a great advantage compared with the ordinary invalid's chair, which is usually so unwieldy that it cannot be stored in a living room with any convenience.



A Clever Device.

An inventor of Schweinfurt, Bavaria, has invented a new machine for the sorting of steel balls, which prevent the cracked balls being passed as perfect. Formerly it was tried to sort out the cracked balls (which cannot be avoided even by using the best quality of steel) by skillful workmen examining each ball by the aid of a magnifying glass. This entails a great deal of work and time, and is after all not reliable, as many of the defects cannot be detected by a magnifying glass. The working of the machine is based on purely physical laws, especially the law relating to rebound of elastic objects. In brief it consists of a cylinder provided with a piston, which moves up and down upon a fixed axle. The balls are placed on the top of this piston and they are raised by mechanical means and are allowed to drop over the edge of the cylinder down an inclined flange. The balls all describe a parabolic trajectory which is practically independent of the condition of the balls. The balls then rebound upon an impact surface and those having the desired degree of elasticity clear a stop or barrier formed by a ring, while balls which owing to a defect in hardness or homogeneousness have an inferior degree of elasticity, strike the barrier and fall back into the central space. This is a very ingenious and clever invention.

Three Stars in One.

The North Star has recently attracted much attention from the fact that in September, 1899, Prof. W. W. Campbell of the Lick Observatory, Mount Hamilton, Cal., announced that it is really three stars, which appear as one. Even the big telescope, with its glass a yard across, at his observatory, could not tell that, as the star is so far off; although the telescope can show a great deal of, the form and surface markings of the sun, moon and planets, and help us to see millions of stars not visible to the unaided eye. Prof. Campbell attached to this telescope an instrument called the spectroscope, which analyzes the light itself, and tells what it is made of, and whether the star from which it comes is in motion or at rest, and whether coming towards us or going away. He found by careful sturdy that Polaris is really three stars, though appearing to our eyes as only one, and that the three are revolving around one another, and that the group is approaching the earth at the rate of about seven miles a second.

An Electrical Range Finder.

The British war office has been testing a new electrical range-finder for the last two years. It was invented by an Australian, who says that it will give the range and bearing of a fixed or moving object, and at the same time will give information to any number of fortress guns attached by wire to the instrument, thus equaling 100 guns, for instance, to concentrate their fire simultaneously on a single ship.

VIVID WAR DRAMA PAINTED BY A FRENCHMAN.

Tells All About How the British Empire Becomes Effaced from the Earth.

The fever of war is abroad in France. The public prints show it and the temper of the people on the boulevards is not a whit less martial. The most remarkable illustration of this, however, is found in the last issue of Le Monde Illustre, a Parisian magazine which might be compared to Harper's Weekly in this country. The Paris publication contains a story headed "The End of England." It is a plausible and circumstantial account of a great war, begun by an overt act of England, and resulting in the downfall of the empire. At its end Ireland is freed and becomes a republic, the British are hemmed in, in England, her possessions are divided among the powers, and in this way, the author asserts, universal peace is assured. To further simulate reality, photographs and photographic illustrations accompany the article, which is from the pen of Henri de Noussane. Living soldiers and statesmen are the personages of the story. There are Roberts and Kitchener, Rosebery, Sir Charles Beresford, as well as Gen. Marchand of France. The preface of this political cataclysm is laid at Kouck (Koushk), on the Afghanistan frontier. Its date is July 16—for the story is circumstantial even to dates as well as to places, atmosphere and the names of living men. Thus, on July 16 a band of Afghan bandits—200 in number—fall upon the railroad at Kouck, slay the attendants and set fire to the rolling stock and station. The news arrives in Russia two days later. At the same moment the ministry is informed that the ameer, Abdur-Rahman, has been slain by his nephew, who has been elevated to the throne. It is known that the dead ameer was about to sign a treaty granting Russia permission to extend the Trans-Caspian railroad from Merv through Herat to Kandahar, and as the assassin usurper has appointed a British agent his premier the influences are obvious. Instantly upon the arrival of the information the czar retires to his palace of Gatchina. Gen. Dragomirow and the minister of war are summoned. In Paris a fever of excitement seizes citizens and officials alike. The exposition has been a disaster; the British are blamed. All the world looks toward Russia. For six days the czar is silent. Dispatches show that troops are being hurried by both England and Russia to the Afghan frontier. M. de Montebello, the French ambassador at St. Petersburg, is in conference with the czar at Gatchina. On the morning of July 24 the czar moves. He transmits an order to Gen. Sobeleff to move at once upon Herat. At the same instant Great Britain orders her ambassador to leave Russia; on the following day the Russian ambassador leaves London. War has begun. It is a foregone conclusion that Herat falls, and of this the author says: "The fall of Herat is a date always to be remembered in history. At this point began a war which was to change the entire face of the world."

Admiral Fournier commands the French fleet. His sealed orders, opened at sea, tell him that he is to meet the Russian fleet at Bizerta, and that the English squadron must be led to expect that he is still at Toulon. But on arriving at Alexandria there is a surprise. The British flag no longer floats over the city. Instead, the banner of Egypt waves in the breeze. But all is explained. Lord Cromer has been assassinated, the khedive has seized the three British battalions, and Mourad Bey, the minister of war, has seized the Suez canal. In addition, the cable code of the British is in the Egyptian's possession, and for five days it answers London's demands that all is well. In the meanwhile the Mediterranean squadron of the British, under Admiral Fisher, is on its way to destroy the French fleet, supposed to be at Toulon. Moreover, the sultan of Turkey, alarmed by the turn of affairs, has permitted the Russians in the Black sea to pass through the Dardanelles to join the French. Menelik, emperor of Abyssinia, accepting the opportunity, advances along the upper Nile, seizing the British posts and occupying Fashoda. The French and the Russians, joining fleets and forces, fortify the Suez canal. On the 19th an attack by Admiral Fournier upon Malta reduces it, and the fleets of Russia and France cover the sea. But, curiously, on that same day Admiral Fisher opens fire on Toulon. The blockade of Toulon is also organized, and Sir Charles Beresford is dispatched to bombard Marseilles with the Anson, the Peerless and the Isis, thus withdrawing a portion of Admiral Fisher's forces. On August 28, in the midst of this bombardment of fortifications, the English fleet is suddenly and unexpectedly assailed by the combined forces of France and Russia. A dreadful sea fight ensues. For once—on paper—the English fleet is overwhelmed. Ship after ship is sunk. Sir John Fisher and Sir Charles Beresford, with thousands of other officers and seamen, are slain, and one ship only—the Royal Sovereign—escapes the general destruction. Highly satisfied with the afternoon's work, the French and Russian fleets enter Toulon for casual repairs. In the colonies disaster treads upon the heels of disaster. Great Britain't colonial possession is doomed. After a few minor victories over French holdings she is further menaced by the march of the Russians. India is on fire again, the Sepoys reproducing the scenes of the mutiny of old. Dragomiroff has arrived at Herat, prepared to take full command of the operations. Every hand is aroused against the English flag. On August 7 her army approaches Gericheh, about ninety kilometers west of Kandahar. Two days later the two forces hurl themselves upon one another.

Kandahar falls, Lord Roberts is killed and India arises against the British, laying waste with fire and the sword Delhi and Benares. Three hundred million Hindoos revolt against their old-time conqueror, and men, women and babes are tortured and slain. The English are effaced, says the Frenchman, in the same way that England sought to efface the Boers.

At home the channel is closed to the British. Already France and Russia threaten. On September 7 the semaphore station at the Lizard telegraphs that a fleet is in sight. It is maneuvering west of Scilly, with Queenstown as its objective. Admiral Sir Harry Rawson is left no doubt. It is the combined fleets of Russia and France moving upon Albion. It has come victorious from the Mediterranean, and to strike a first blow by liberating Ireland.

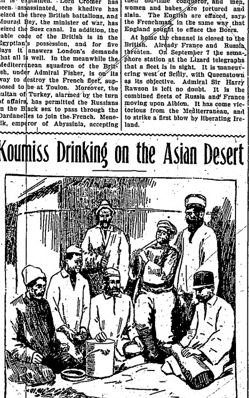
Queenstown, with all its defenses, stripped to add to the strength of the channel fleet, is bound to fall unless the opposing fleet be stopped. Realizing this, Admiral Rawson determines to oppose the invader at the Scilly islands. But while he is off looking for the allied fleets they steal into the channel, and when he returns are awaiting. He is trapped. In vain he seeks to break the cordon.

The French submarine torpedo boats, rising ghostlike from out of the depths, launch their unseen torpedoes against the flanks of his battleships. One by one they lurch from the water, turn over with their shells battered in and sink to the bottom of the sea. Thousands of seamen, mad with terror, leap into the waves. Of all the glorious fleets of England not a ship is left.

But great is the resistance when the French land at Brighton. The first to land is Colonel Marchand—now a general in command of the French forces. Sad to say, the French avant-historian sees fit to slay him. He is shot in the head at Brighton and dies upon the field of battle.

In Dublin the republic is proclaimed. Queenstown turns out en masse to greet the Russian and French invasion. The picture shows the quays and foreshore crowded with thousands of shouting men, waving the Irish flag, entwined with those of Russia and France. The invasion presses onward. London falls at last. At the head of the victorious army General Jamont Fournier, elevated to the dignity of admiral of France, retires, with an exclamation point after his name. On September 20 England falls, and the whole world groans and is glad. The treaty of London signed on October 25 readjusts the map. Each country is represented by its plenipotentiary—for England, Lord Rosebury and Sir Henry Campbell Bannermann; for Russia, the Grand Duke Surgius and Count Mouravieff; for France, M. Deschanel and Admiral Caillard. What happens is this: The colonies of England are divided among the powers, Canada coming to us, Ireland, India and Australia setting up for themselves as republics.

Koumiss Drinking on the Asian Desert



The national intoxicant of the nomadic inhabitants of the great Asiatic steppes is a specially prepared koumiss, a drink, by the way, which is made from fermented mare's milk. These Asiatic nomads live in tents and exist in a very primitive manner, their staple diet being mutton and their beloved koumiss. The illustration shows a number of these Khirrghiz people enjoying themselves in the orthodox manner. Each skin or tub of koumiss is broached to the accompaniment of songs and dances and the music of reed pipes.—Correspondence of the Chicago Inter Ocean.

SHE WAS ABSORBED.

An Amusing Anecdote of Mary Somerville, the Author.

An amusing anecdote is told of Mary Fairfax Somerville, the famous writer and scientist. While at her work, either in research or in writing, she would become so intent upon it that she was utterly oblivious of her surroundings. This power of concentration grew upon her so that her family often laughingly referred to it, and it led to some very funny incidents. One day her friend, Harriet Martineau, the authoress and political economist, went to visit her. Mr. Somerville received the visitor, and explained that it would be almost impossible to make her presence known, as his wife was writing. However, he led the guest into the room where Mrs. Somerville was busily engaged at a table. Several members of the family, and some friends were present, but they were talking without fear of disturbing the writer. Mr. Somerville stood by the table, opposite to his wife, and began, in a loud voice, to address her; but as she paid no attention to him, he began to use abusive language, calling her lazy; saying that she was not industrious, and adding many things that kept the company laughing, for they all enjoyed the joke. Everything he said, however, fell upon deaf ears, and Mrs. Somerville worked on, utterly regardless of his presence. Suddenly he ceased speaking, and the unwonted silence made her look up. "Pardon me," she said, in the quaintest surprise, "did you say something?"

When the Clocks Stopped.

Capt. John Thompson of the four-masted barkentine Doris died and was buried at sea Feb. 14. The vessel was bound from Baltimore to Bahia, Brazil, and arrived out Saturday, when a cablegram was received announcing the death. Mr. William E. Kirwan, ship chandler, broke the news to Mrs. Thompson Sunday at her home. Mrs. Thompson makes a startling statement in connection with the captain's death. She avers that at 6:15 o'clock on the morning of Feb. 14 all the half dozen clocks in her house stopped from some unknown cause. Next day the clocks up-stairs in the bedrooms started again of their own accord, but the dining room and kitchen clocks remained at a standstill.

SUBMARINE BOATS

Easily Detected by Balloons Soaring Directly Above Them.

Should the submarine boat take the place in naval warfare that some nations expect, one of the chief precautions taken by the world's navies will be an immense increase in the number of balloons, with duly trained staffs to work them, carried by war vessels. The balloons carried by these battleships are of exactly the same material and pattern as those in use in the army, only smaller. They have a use far in advance of any mere long-distance observational purpose, for, though the wake of a submarine boat sunk deeply in the water can only be traced with difficulty from such an elevation as that afforded by a ship, both such wake and the boat itself can be seen with absolute and undeviating clearness from a captive balloon. This is the result of a scientific and optical law, and when ship balloons were first put to the practical test in regard to this matter, the results attained were of the most surprising kind. Even where the water is distinctly cloudy, objects of a much smaller kind than a submarine boat, and painted of neutral color, could be seen from a balloon with the utmost clearness at a depth of five fathoms, or thirty feet, though the surface was rough. No submarine boat could in the daytime get within striking distance of a threatened ship that had a balloon without being observed.

Think Exercise Unhealthy.

A story is going the rounds that when William Evarts asked the other day to what he ascribed his long life and excellent health he replied: "I don't know, unless it is because I don't take any exercise." This has been taken as one of Mr. Evart's jokes. Those who know the venerable gentleman best recognize the answer as absolutely true. Mr. Evarts takes no exercise. He has carefully avoided exercise for many years. When he went from his house to his office he would not walk a block; he would take a carriage no matter how short the distance. Mr. Evarts isn't the only public man who has a theory that physical exercise, added to mental effort, is a waste of tissue, which tends toward debility and shortening of life. Joseph Chamberlain is a conspicuous example. He spares himself all physical effort, so far as he can. He will not walk up a single flight of stairs if he can help it. Senator Hanna is, perhaps, the most notable exponent of this principle in Washington. Vigorous as he is in speech and in mental effort, the senator is seldom seen save in an attitude which suggests physical repose.

Fox Raising in Maine.

The first effort ever made to raise foxes for their fur has passed the stage of experiment and the men who conceived the idea are congratulating themselves on their success. The experiment was tried on a farm at Foxcroft, Me. While they raise various varieties of foxes the fox which they hope to breed to the greatest extent is the blue fox of Alaska, whose fur is so valuable. The animals occupy two acres divided into three yards and nine smaller individual pens. These yards are enclosed by three tons of wire fencing. These fences extend from below the ground to from ten to 15 feet above, with an overhang at right angles, on the inside at the top. This prevents the foxes from making their way over the fences. Dens were built in the ground in regulation fashion, and the foxes live as comfortably as they would if forced to dig their own homes.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Two Ways of Farming.

There are two ways of farming being followed in this country, one way is called "farming by brute force" and the other is called "farming by the aid of brains." This thought is brought out by the remark that a certain locality in the United States cannot hope to hold its present position in the competitive production of agricultural products, because the farmers in that locality are all farming by brute force. Not only are the men working in the fields, but the women and children also are working in the fields. The sons and daughters of these farmers are being robbed of their privileges in this land of schools, while for a time they help their fathers make a hard living. It is also reported on good authority that, even with the whole family working long hours every day, the returns are not commensurate with the efforts put forth. Yet the men that farm this way will succeed in paying for their farms, though they will send out their sons from those farms utterly unable to cope with the great progressing world around them. The daughters will be broken down in health by the time they are of age, and will have that condition as the only reward for their years of service in the fields. This is no mere theory, but the writer has seen it demonstrated in real life. This style of farming is not the kind that has built up the country, it is a late importation from rural Europe. It is a detriment and a menace to every community where it is practiced. The farmer that works the adjoining section and sends his children to school and permits his wife to live and dress as a woman should finds the other farmer a hard competitor in that he is always underselling his neighbors, since he has the labor of his family to help him produce below average cost. Ultimately this farmer will disappear from the face of the earth, but while he remains he is an inconvenience both to his competitors and the community in which he lives.

It is a foregone conclusion that the man that farms by the help of brains is the coming farmer. He is destined to drive out the man that farms by brute force, and the more rapid the change the better will it be for the country. The farmer with a high order of intelligence will make his fields bring forth such crops as the other farmer never raised; his sons and daughters will be set free from the "drudgery" of farm life, but will find in the air and sun of the farm the place of all others where their souls can expand and glow. The new farmer reaches out to others of his kind and allies himself with others to gain mutual ends. The farmer that knows no method but that of brute force is incapable of combining effectively with any one or for any purpose. A new era has dawned for agriculture, and every man that refuses to recognize the changing conditions, and the new requirements will find himself out of harmony with progress as it touches him. He will be entirely incapable of adapting himself to new situations as they arise. It is full time for all farmers to abandon the kind of farming that succeeds only by blind exertion and take up the new way, which promises to accomplish more with less expense of muscle.

Horticultural Observations.

We hear some talk of the combination of small growers to better market their products. The term would better be "co-operation." Certain it is that the fruit men will gain much if they are able to properly co-operate. The markets are sometimes over-supplied merely because there has been no system in forwarding fruit. It frequently happens that one city has such a big supply of fruit that the producers get nothing out of it, while some other city is short in supplies. Moreover, shortages frequently exist in small cities simply because too many growers have their eyes only on the large markets.

There is not a year when fruit is produced in large quantities that a big per cent of it does not go to waste. This is very largely due to lack of system in shipping and selling. The customer on the other hand does not often reap the benefit. The retailers wherever they can by mutual consent keep up the price to the consumers, arguing that it is better to have some of the fruit rot than to lower the price and get the people in the habit of expecting low prices. When the commission man makes returns to the grower or shipper he figures in his losses in rotten fruit and spreads it over all the consignments. So the grower has really to suffer the loss of rotten fruit from his neighbor's consignment.

The grower at the present time loses sight of his fruit after it gets into the hand of the commission man. A good system of co-operation would make it possible for him to follow his fruit to the consumer. The abuses of delivery of fruit will not cease till that can be done. As it is, the honest fruit man is plundered at every turn because he is compelled to share with the dishonest one in his reputation as well as in his losses. The man that sends green peaches to market is likely to get about as good a reputation for them as the man that sends fairly good fruit, for the reason that the two are often mixed before reaching the consumer and the latter gets two baskets of peaches each with good peaches on top and green ones in the bottom.

Size of Drain Tile.

The users of drain tile are becoming more and more to use the larger tile. For a good many years farmers have dug ditches for and used 2½-inch, 3-inch and 3½-inch tile. Now they have come to see that 4-inch tile does better service and costs little more than the other. The smaller sized tiles are being discarded to such an extent that some of the manufacturers this year will make no tile smaller than 4-inch. The movement is a step in advance. It costs just as much to dig a ditch for a 3-inch tile as for a 4-inch, and that is the principal cost of the tile drain. Small tile becomes easier clogged with the sediment. In case the frost gets at it and chips off some of the inside it is the easier to fill up, especially where the fall is sufficient to give considerable current, which in turn washes into one piece of tile the chips from many. The larger tile carries off the flood water much more rapidly than the smaller tile and the amount of air thus drawn into the soil is considerable. The men that are going to put in tile drains this coming summer will do well to contract only for large tile. Doubtless some of the manufacturers or their agents will have on hand small bore tile that they will want to get rid of and will make strenuous efforts to induce farmers to buy. It will be well for farmers in such cases to remember that the other fellows are merely trying to "unload" on them. Even a large reduction in price should fail to induce intelligent farmers to put in a tile that will not do the best of work.

Comparative Rainfall of States.

With the exception of Vermont, the New Engand states are well supplied with rainwater. Vermont has a fall of only about 29 inches per year. The rainfalls of the other states follow: Maine, 42 to 50; Massachusetts, 47; Rhode Island, 46 to 50; Connecticut, 50. Of the middle states, Delaware has the smallest fall—32 inches. In New York the rainfall is from 38 to 45 inches, according to location; New Jersey, 42 to 46; Pennsylvania, 37 to 42; Maryland, 44. The south Atlantic and the gulf states are all well supplied with water, as the following shows: Virginia, 44 to 52; West Virginia, 46; North Carolina, 54 to 69; South Carolina, 57; Georgia, 48 to 55; Florida, 56 to 63; Mississippi, 57; Louisiana, 52 to 64; Tennessee, 51 to 56; Kentucky, 50; Alabama, 53 to 64. Texas has a good supply of water in the eastern portion, it varying from 36 to 45 inches. Arkansas is well supplied for a state in its latitude and longitude, the annual rainfall being from 42 to 53 inches, according to location.

Southern Illinois has a rainfall of 43 inches, central Illinois a rainfall of 40 inches and the northern part of the state a rainfall of 36 inches. Indiana has a fall of 45 inches; Ohio a fall of from 31 to 41 inches. The other western states follow: Minnesota, 16 to 32; Wisconsin, 32; Iowa, 37; Missouri, 38 to 48; Kansas, 20 to 38; Oklahoma has a fall of about 21 inches. The rainfall of the semi-arid states is as follows: Idaho, 13; Wyoming, 8 to 12; Utah, 8 to 17; North Dakota, 14 to 19; South Dakota, 27 to 37; Colorado, 8 to 14; Nebraska, 17 to 20; Arizona, 3 to 16; New Mexico, 13 to 17. The rainfall of the Pacific states is as follows: California, 11 to 25 inches, according to location; Oregon, 9 to 49; Washington, 27 to 92; Nevada, 9. The District of Columbia has a fall of about 44 inches. When a man is to go into farming and intends to settle in some state where the natural conditions will be favorable, he should give due weight to the question of rainfall. A fall of an inch per week is considered ideal for agricultural operations, provided the fall is fairly even in its distribution throughout the year.

Health of Live Stock.

In Illinois live stock is generally healthy. In Johnson county there is complaint of an unknown disease among horses. A few cases of hog cholera are reported from Gallatin, Mercer, Morgan and Henderson counties, but no general epidemic. Some milk fever is reported among cows in Hancock and Madison counties, and some tuberculosis in Dewitt county.

In Ohio hog cholera is reported from Montgomery and Cuyahoga counties, but not to an alarming extent. Muskingum county reports lung diseases among horses, while Geauga county has a light touch of pinkeye in the same animals. Influenza among horses is reported from Stark county. In Portage county roup among poultry prevails to a considerable extent. In Hardin county the sheep are troubled a good deal with head maggots.

Indiana reports show sore throat among the horses in Wells county and some hog cholera in Parke county.

Michigan reports some hog cholera in Oakland county.

In Missouri cholera exists in Carroll, Greene and Andrews counties. In Knox county there are a few cases of blackleg.

In Kansas hog cholera exists in Cherokee, Atchison, Reno, Nemaha (very bad), Anderson, Dickinson and Douglas counties. Pinkeye among cattle exists in Sedgwick county. Blackleg prevails in Anderson, Butler, Lincoln (very bad), Ellis, McPherson and Roooks county.

In Kentucky blackleg is reported in Garrard county, and also hog cholera. In Marshall pinkeye exists.

Cow Pea Vine Silage.

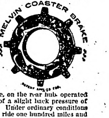
A leter from Thomas C. Crenshaw, Jr., one of the railroad commissioners of Georgia, published in Hoard's Dairyman, carries some interesting and important information relative to the cow pea vine as a silage plaint. Mr. Crenshaw writes:

"Regarding cow pea vine silage I desire to say I have a round wooden silo, twenty feet in diameter inside measurement and thirty-five feet high. I got the plan of my silo from page 16, bulletin No. 59, issued by the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment Station. I have filled my silo twice with cow pea vine. I cut the vines in lengths from one-half inch up to six inches long, when I put them in the silo. If the vines were put in the silo without being cut up, they would form an entangled mass and make it difficult, if not almost impossible, to take them out for feeding purposes. I have succeeded well in the ensiling of cow pea vines. I consider such silage not only first-class, but superior to any and all kinds of silage. It keeps well and makes a most excellent feed. I have never found as much as a handful of unsound cow pea vine silage in my silo, after taking off the top covering. My cows are very fond of it; they eat every particle that is fed to them, which is of itself an advantage over corn silage, as cows will occasionally leave some of the hard chunks of corn silage."

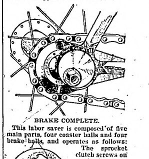
A NEW BICYCLE BRAKE.

The New Melvin Automatic, Coaster a Boon to Bicycle Riders.

A new invention is put on the market this year by F. M. Smith & Bro., of St. Paul. The coaster has been tested for nearly two riding seasons, and has been perfected until it is believed to be the best free wheel coaster and brake made at the present time.

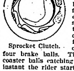


The mechanism is simple and automatic. Any child can understand and operate it at first trial. By means of this device a bicycle rider may coast, with feet at rest, on still pedals and at the same time have perfect control of a powerful pedal brake, on the rear hub, operated by means of a slight back pressure of the pedals. Under ordinary conditions a rider can ride one hundred miles and only pedal about half that distance. The working parts are compactly contained inside the rear hub sprocket, leaving only the brake clamp to show on the outside which does not detract from nice appearance of wheel.



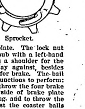
BRAKE COMPLETE.

This labor saver is composed of five main parts, four coaster balls and four brake balls, and operates as follows:



Sprocket Clutch.

The sprocket clutch screws on to the hear hub with a right-hand thread, and forms a shoulder for the sprocket to rotate upon. The coaster balls are forced into the clutch by the four brake balls. This insures the coaster balls catching the clutch the instant the rider starts to pedal forward. Now to apply the brake requires a slight back pressure on the pedals. This starts the brake balls up the inclined grooves in sprocket, and brings them in contact with brake plate. The lock nut screws on to the hub with a left-hand thread, and forms a shoulder for the brake plate to play against, besides acting as a guide for brake. The ball retainer has two functions to perform: One of them is to throw the four brake balls against the side of brake plate when back pedaling, and to throw the brake balls against the coaster balls when pedaling forward or remaining stationary. This is an important factor in coaster brakes, as the brake balls force the coaster balls into clutch, making it impossible for coaster balls not to act instantly when starting to propel the machine forward, no matter at what speed the rider may be coasting.



Sprocket.

The additional weight is about three ounces. They will fit any hub.

The Stamp Question.

Meaning that she should purchase a few stamps ahead and not be bothering the druggist every day in the year, he said:

"Don't you know that a druggist doesn't like to sell stamps in that way?"

"Is it possible he is afraid I won't pay him?" she questioned, spiritedly.

"Pay him?" he demanded. "What do you mean?"

"Why, I purchased four yesterday, and as I forgot my purse I asked him to charge them—the mean thing."

"Have mercy!" he cried. "Woman, spare me any more!"—Indianapolis Sun.

A Filipino Tartar.

Lieut. Col. H. H. Sargeant, U. S. A., tells many enjoyable war stories. Once when instructing some men, he asked, "When you are on the skirmish line and suddenly encounter the enemy what would you do?"

"Fall flat." "And what next?" "Stay there."

On another occasion he was questioning a man respecting his absence for six hours.

"I was chasing a Filipino an hour, sir."

"How about the other five hours?"

"The Filipino and his friends were chasing me, sir."—Philadelphia Post.

Macauley the Wit.

During the time when Lord Disraeli was startling sober Englishmen by his eccentricities of dress, Lord Macaulay, that was to be, was electrifying his dull-witted constituents by his witty sallies and repartee. Having been defeated in 1847, he ran again for parliament in 1852. For a change he was the popular candidate. One day while standing on the hustings, side by side with his opponent, he was violently struck by a dead cat. The man who threw it immediately apologized, saying he meant the cat for his opponent. "Indeed," said Macaulay, "then I wish you had meant it for me and struck him."—Collier's Weekly.

Beechers vs. Smiths.

Once upon a time Rev. Mr. Thomas K. Beecher of Elmira, brother to Henry Ward Beecher, got into some sort of a quarrel with a man named Smith down at Cohoes. Thomas K. Beecher wrote the presumptuous man a defiant little note, saying curtly:

"Do you want to get into a quarrel with the Beecher family?"

And the man wrote back with a snarl:

"Do you want to fight with the Smith family?"

And no Beecher could stand that. Thomas K laughed and hastened to make terms.—R. J. Burdette in Los Angeles Times.

Helping the Cat.

A little girl drew a dog and cat on her slate, and said to her mother:

"A cat oughtn't to have but four legs, but I drew her with six, so she could run away from the dog."

A DROP IN PRICE.

The Miner Took Less Than He First Asked For His Claim.

"These fabulous stories you hear," said a Colorado man, "of the wonderful discoveries made and prices received for claims in the mining regions bring back to my mind a story that used to be told in the earlier days of Colorado.

"A young chap had there located a claim in which he had every confidence that ore existed, but try as he would he was unable to locate the precious metal, and little by little he became sicker and sicker at heart until at length there came a day whose closing was marked by clean discouragement on his part. His last piece of bacon was eaten, his last stick of gunpowder fired and his credit utterly used up. Still he believed the ore to be there, but he recognized the utter futility on his part of trying further to get at it. Lonely and out of spirits, just at sunset he stood at the door of his cabin looking for the last time over the scene of his useless efforts, when down the winding trail came a stranger astride of a broncho. Taking in the situation at a glance, the man reined in his cayuse and called out to the lonely figure in the cabin doorway, 'Say, pardner, what will you take for that played out claim of yours?'

"Hope sprang up and gleamed from the miner's eyes as he firmly replied: 'Played out nothing. It'll take $1,000,000 cold to buy me out.'

"The stranger slowly gathered up the reins. 'I'll give you $8,' he said tentatively.

"'All in cash?' queried the late prospective millionaire eagerly.

"'Yep,' was the response.

"'The claim's yours,' on the part of the mine owner closed the transaction."—New York Tribune.

SAM HOUSTON'S SECRET.

Why He Left His Wife and Joined the Cherokees Is a Mystery.

"A mystery in which the American people were once deeply concerned was that which shadowed the life of one of the most remarkable characters of the country," writes William Perrine in The Ladies' Home Journal. "In 1829 Samuel Houston, or, as he called and signed himself, 'Sam' Houston, was governor of Tennessee. It was in the midst of a campaign for re-election to the gubernatorial chair that Tennessee was startled by a report that he had resigned his office. He had been married to the daughter of an influential family. Three months afterward she returned to her father's house, and her husband resolved to pass the rest of his life in the wilderness.

"Houston betook himself to the tribe of Cherokees in the Indian Territory. He adopted their costume, appearing in all the trappings of an Indian brave, letting his hair grow down his back and visiting Washington with a buckskin hunting shirt, yellow leggings, a huge blanket and turkey feathers around his head. No one could induce him to reveal the secret of his metamorphosis and his abandonment of the ways and habits of civilization. He married again after he emerged from his Indian life, and he lived to be an old man, dying in the midst of the civil war, but no one was ever able to persuade him to unlock the mystery of his life. Nor would his first wife, who also married again, throw any light on the mystery."

Poaching Eggs.

Break an egg carefully into a coffee cup and sprinkle it lightly with salt and pepper. Have ready a small stewpan containing some boiling beef tea which has been nicely seasoned. Carefully slip the egg into the pan and poach it in the usual way. When it is done, place it on a rather thick round of buttered toast. Thicken a small quantity of beef tea quickly with a little corn flour and pour it over the egg.

Another way of serving a poached egg is as follows: Break a new laid egg into a buttered teacup, season it with salt and pepper and place the cup in a stewpan containing sufficient boiling water to reach rather more than half way up the cup. As soon as the egg is set turn it carefully on to a piece of hot, buttered toast. While the egg is cooking boil a small quantity of cream in a saucepan, season it with a little celery, salt and pepper and add a teaspoonful of chopped parsley to it. Pour the cream over the egg and serve at once.—New York Post.

Taffy's Retort.

A Welshman, walking through a fashionable street in London, noticed on a door a bell. At the side of the bell were these words, "Please ring the bell."

Taffy went and rang the bell. In a second a powdered little footman appeared and asked him what he wanted. "Nothing," said the Welshman, "but I rang the bell because it says so."

"Oh," said the footman, with a smile, "I see you come from the country where nannygoats grow on gooseberry bushes!"

"Yes," answered the Welshman. "But in London there are more wonderful sights. You have only to ring a bell, and a monkey pops out."—London Telegraph.

MUTILATED MONEY.

SAVE THE FRAGMENTS AND UNCLE SAM WILL REDEEM THEM.

Even the Ashes of Burned Bills Are Successfully Handled by His Experts—Skillful Work In the Treasury Redemption Bureau.

One of the most interesting departments in the United States treasury is that devoted to the redemption of mutilated currency. To it are sent all varieties of bills in every conceivable stage of mutilation. It is seldom that the experts cannot decipher the burned crisps or piece together the myriad fragments. The collection is a curious one, changing every day with kaleidoscopic rapidity.

The burning of a note usually brings out its design in a sort of metallic relief upon its surface, and by means of a glass and other implements and also a full and complete knowledge of the intricate designs, no two denominations being alike, on every note issued their face value is learned with incredible dexterity.

Some arrive in fairly good condition, some shrunken and water soaked, others scorched black and twisted out of shape; many are merely thin, tiny black flakes, and in one case now under consideration the evidence consists of a small handful of black powder, which the affiant swears was $65, accidentally blown into the fire.

Often the mischief has been done by mice, handfuls of the tiniest of pieces attesting the evil ways of the rodent. Babies are another source of trouble, maniacs, victims of drunken frenzy, plowshares, sawmills—in fact, the strangest and most unheard of accidents are occurring all the time. But in a great majority of cases the money has been burned, for a common practice among people who are their own bankers seems to be the keeping of their funds in unused stoves. A cold day comes, the fire is lighted by some unsuspecting person who "didn't know it was loaded," and the owner suddenly finds that he had money to burn in spite of himself.

In one instance a man having $7,000 in government bonds, besides notes and gold, kept them in a tomato can which he placed in the elbow of his parlor stove. While he was plowing his fields company arrived, his wife had a fire kindled, and shortly he made the unpleasant discovery that his riches had taken wings. Had he sent the money just as it came from the stove, wrapped in cotton, it might have been saved, but in endeavoring to separate it it became so churned and ground up that the department was able to identify only about $2,000 for him.

An old woman who had accumulated about $600 was one night at her devotions, when the candle in some mysterious manner was overturned in the midst of the money. Now, history does not relate why it was there or whether she was returning thanks or paying a bit of homage to Mammon, but at any rate it was destroyed, and as she threw the ashes away and at the instigation of her friends picked them out again there was only enough left to return about $100 to her.

But much more fortunate were an old couple in the west. The man had been a soldier, and by the long accumulation of years they had saved a little sum, when one day the wife in going to look at it found that the mice had left only a pile of carefully sawed fragments. Almost distracted, she took it to the bank, reporting that the last time she had counted it the sum had been $275, mostly in tens and twenties. It was sent here, the tiny bits sorted and arranged as only experts can arrange them, and the necessary three-fifths of every note was found. But the best of all was that instead of $275 it was discovered that the old people's savings amounted to $350, which amount was finally sent to them, much to their joy.

Of course the greatest precaution is necessary, and the affidavits must leave no doubt as to the utter and entire destruction of the missing parts of the notes. In one case of this kind a farmer sent from Kansas some greenbacks amounting to $50, only half of each note being intact. The rest, he declared in a strong affidavit, had been destroyed and also stated in what manner, but on consulting the books it was found that one-half the sum had already been paid to another person who had sent the other halves of the notes from another part of the country. Consequently but $25 was returned to him.

Thereupon the cashier who had transacted the business for the farmer wrote such an indignant letter, saying the government had impugned the honesty of the claimant and that he would prove him in the right, that the affair was put into the hands of the secret service, the proofs exhibited and the imprudent farmer fined $1,000 for false swearing.—New York Tribune.

Christening Florida.

As to why Ponce de Leon gave the name Florida to the territory now known by that name, the Florida Farmer and Fruit Grower quotes from an old book published in 1763: "Gave it the name of Florida because it was first seen in Easter, called Pasqua de flores in the language of his country, or as Herrera alleges, because it was covered with flowers and the most beautiful blossoms." And The Farmer adds: "Those who have seen the Easter season in Florida and the wealth of flowers which still commemorate and adorn its return can well believe that both these reasons influenced the giving of its name."

The House is in open revolt against the administration plans of preventing action on the Nicaragua Canal bill at the present session. 250 members, half democrats, have signed petitions to Speaker Henderson, asking that a rule be reported for the consideration of the Canal bill on the first of May. Warning Against Forest and Prairie Fires

Office of State Forest Commissioner.

ST. PAUL, MINN., March 21, 1900.

Chapter 196 of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota for 1895 (Act of April 18th) constitutes Supervisors of towns, Mayors of cities and presidents of village councils Fire Wardens, and it is made their duty to take precaution to prevent forest and prairie fires, and if they occur, to go and extinguish or control them; and in emergencies to call upon any able-bodied male person, over eighteen years of age, to assist. Reports of such fires with particulars tending to fix responsibility therefor shall be made within reasonable time—usually within a week. The Forest Commissioner is required to provide and sign an abstract (as herein) of the penalties under said law, and it is made the duty of the County Commissioners of each county to cause said abstract to be published in at least three issues of the official paper in their respective counties each year between the 15th of April and 1st of November, and they are hereby instructed to publish this notice entire. Under said law.

The following are liable to a penalty not exceeding $500 or imprisonment in the state prison not over ten years or both:

Any person who maliciously sets or causes to be set on fire any woods, prairie or other combustible material whereby the property of another is destroyed and life is sacrificed.

The following are liable to a penalty not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding three months.

Any person refusing, without cause, to assist fire wardens in extinguishing forest or prairie fires.

Any fire warden who neglects to perform his duties.

Any person who wilfully, negligently or carelessly sets on fire, or causes to be set on fire, any woods, prairies or other combustible material thereby causing injury to another.

Any person who shall kindle a fire on or dangerously near to forest or prairie land and leave in unquenched, or who shall be a party thereto.

Any person who shall use other than incombustible fire wads for firearms or carry a naked torch, firebrand or other exposed light in or dangerously near to forest land.

Any person who shall wilfully or heedlessly deface, destroy or remove this or any other warning placard posted under the requirements of the above mentioned Act.

Any railroad company wilfully neglecting to provide efficient spark arresters on its engines; or to keep its right of way to the width of 100 feet cleared of combustible material; or which shall fail to comply with other provisions of Section 12 of the above mentioned Act.

The following are liable to a penalty of not less than $5 nor more than $50:

Any railroad employe who wilfully violates the provisions of Section 12 of the above mentioned Act.

Any owner of threshing or other portable steam engine who neglects to have efficient spark arresters, or who shall deposit live coals or hot ashes without extinguishing the same.

Gold Lined Geese.

According to the United States consul at Chung-King, China, in the department called Yung-pei, Chih-li Ting, gold is found in abundance by washing in the valley near the city. The inhabitants of the neighborhood keep large flocks of geese to work the goldfields for them. When the geese are found to be very heavy, they are killed and their maws emptied of the gold contained therein. A flock of geese is sometimes worth a good deal of money, but geese dressed ready for eating are very cheap indeed—from 15 to 20 cents each.

Usurped a Right.

Professor John Snelling Popkin was professor of Greek at Harvard some years ago, and he was not without a nickname, which he accepted as a matter of course from the students, but, hearing it on one occasion from a man of dapper, jaunty, unacademic aspect, Professor Popkin exclaimed: "What right has that chap to call me 'Old Pop?' He isn't a student of Harvard college."

The Real Thing.

Daisy (taking her first meal in the country)—Mamma, what is the matter with this currant jelly?

Mamma (in a whisper)—Hush, dear! It's real currant jelly.—Chicago Tribune.

A Sudden Summons.

Monday forenoon at 11:45 April 23rd 1900, after an illness of only a few days the spirit of Rev. I. N. Vernon, pastor of the M. E. church of this place, returned to its maker. His death was a great shock to his many friends as the fact that his condition had been critical for two days previous to his death was known or realized but by few. He complained of feeling unwell Thursday and retired to his room, called for the doctor who pronounced Rev. Vernon ill with appendicitis. Dr. Blomburgh being the attending physician wired Dr. Watson of Red Lake Falls and Dr. Dunlop of Crookston who arrived Sunday afternoon and held a consultation. Although to the three physicians and intimate friends the serious nature of his illness had become known and the result anticipated.

Rev. I. N. Vernon came to this charge last September from Manitoba where he has been married a few days previous to his arrival here and was possessed of those sterling qualities of character which command the respect and esteem of all and his untimely death will be the cause of deep sorrow on the part of all who knew him.

Deceased was a member in good standing of the Modern Woodmen of America lodge of this village joining sometime last December, in which organization he carried $3,000 life insurance, so his young wife is well provided for.

The funeral services was held yesterday at the M. E. church, the Rev Forbes officiating assisted by the Rev. Myhers of Thief River Falls. The Woodmen had charge of the funeral, and after the service, escorted the remains to the depot from where it was shipped to St. Marys, Ontario, Canada, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon's former home. Mrs. Vernon accompanied the remains.

Oscar Nelsson on Miller Jacklin of Roseau are here to-day enroute to Red Lake Falls.

Mrs. McAndress, mother of Landlord McAndress of the Hotel Markham arrived to-day from St. Thomas, N. D.

County Commissioner Hansen was here a few hours yesterday enroute home from a trip at the county seat.

Messrs. Robbecke, Dobner, Richardson and Grundy were among the Woodmen of Thief River Falls who attended the funeral of the late Rev. Vernon yesterday.

Two marriages will take place this afternoon, one is that of Mr. Samuel Dainard to Miss Anna Hanson, and the other that of Mr. Wilbert Taylor to Miss Phena Dainard. The Spectator along with their many friends wish the two young couple much joy throughout married life.

Several threatening prairie fires had the right-of-way in this vicinity last week and several persons were scorched pretty badly while saving their buildings. There is a heavy fine for setting fire and someone will be made an example of. Elsewhere in these columns you will find the fire wardens notice.

The five quarters a day was inaugurated Monday at the large mill of the St. Hilaire Lumber Company. The mill will be run the fifth quarter Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, thus allowing the men getting in seven days per week. This will be kept up until the night force is put on which will be sometime next month.

Little Leonard Larson, aged nine years accidently shot his mother at Crookston last Saturday while playing with a small rifle. Death ensued almost instantly. The small boys in this village handle their 22's in a reckless manner and their parents should see that the younger members of the family were not allowed to handle even the small air guns.

Dentist.

—Dr. J. H. Thomas, the Crookston dentist will be at Hotel Markham, St. Hilaire, May 25th and 26th prepared to do all kinds of up to date dental work in all branches. All work warranted. Remember the dates 25th and 26th.

—The Spectator is for sale at $1.50 a year strictly in advance.

Drainage Convention.

On the 10th of next month an important meeting will be held at Grand Forks, N. Dak., the object of which will be to induce congress to improve the Red River and tributaries so as to prevent overflows in the spring and early summer. A survey was made several years ago with an object of improving the Red river for commerce, but as the work would cost $800,000 the matter was rejected because commerce did not warrant the expenditure. The spring flood of 1896 was a dear lesson for the farmers living along the Red Lake and Red rivers and no doubt the one thousand delegates who have been appointed to attend this convention will take a lively interest and do all in their power to get the necessary appropriation.

Capt. Kratka, who owns a large farm three miles north-east of here arrived Thursday from Lansing, Iowa, with a car load of horses, farming implements and some household furniture. He was accompanied by his sons Will and George. By next year Capt. Kratka proposes to have the finest arranged farm in the county.

The Modern Woodmen at their last meeting passed a resolution to open the charter until July 1st, and Deputy W. A. Case will endeavor to double the membership. There are 65 members in the camp at present and as the Deputy is known to be a hustler we predict a large increase. Deputy Case will be in town the most of the time and those desiring to secure a certificate in the best fraternal insurance company in the world will do well to interview him.

—Go to Rapp & Post for harness and harness supplies.

Mr. McKinley has gone off on a pleasure junket, but Boss Hanna is working over-time. He is fixing up the platform that will be adopted by the Ohio republican convention, next week, and he is trying to figure out whether the country can be enthused by a little jingoism in connection with the failure of the Sultan of Turkey to keep his promise to pay $90,000 for property belonging to American missionaries, which was destroyed several years ago by a Turkish mob. If he decides that jingoism is advisable, Secretary Hay will probably give the Turkish minister his passport, and the republican press will be filled with spreadeagleism about the determined stand the administration has taken for the protection of American missionaries and their interests. Mr. McKinley can find time to go away for a week, but this task isn't as heavy as that of Boss Hanna, who has started out to try for four more years of autocratic power and hasn't any time to waste on pleasure.

TAX JUDGMENT SALE.

Pursuant to a Real Estate Tax Judgment of the district court, in the county of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, entered the twenty-first (21st) day of March, A. D. 1900, in proceedings for enforcing payment of taxes and penalties upon real Estate in the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, remaining delinquent on the first Monday of January, 1900, and of the statutes in such case made and providad, I shall, on the first Monday, being the

at 10:00 o'clock in the forenoon, at my office, in the court house, in the city of Red Lake Falls and country of Red Lake Minnesota, sell the lands which are charged with taxes, penalties and costs in said judgment, and on which taxes, penalties and costs shall not have been previously paid.

[SEAL] Adam Zeh,
Auditor Red Lake County, Minnesota.
Dated at Red Lake Falls this 12th day of April, A. D. 1900.

—If you are troubled with rheumatism take the Imperial Blood and Rheumatism cure. It will positively cure all diseases arising from impure blood, and is sold under an absolute guarantee to benefit or money refunded. Call for free sample at the New Drug Store.

FORFEITED TAX SALE.

State Auditor Dunn Issues a Circular to County Auditors.

Suggestions regarding the forfeited tax sale which will take place in May were sent to the county auditors last week in a circular by State Auditor Dunn. As this is the first sale of the kind since 1881, constant inquiries have been received. The rules laid down effect 40,000 pieces of property through the state, of which 17,000 are in Ramsey county. Auditor Dunn's circular is as follows:

Parties wishing to redeem their property from the sale should be permitted to do so up to the precise time when a tract is taken up and offered for sale, but not thereafter. Under no circumstances allow redemption to be made after bidding has commenced.

Should any tract sell for more than the original taxes with ten per cent interest and costs of this sale, as shown by your list, the excess or surplus should be credited to the county revenue fund. In no event should the excess be paid over to the original owner of the real estate.

State lands held under contract with the state (school, university, internal improvement lands, etc.,) upon your forfeited list should be sold the same as other lands. Purchasers of such lands, however, only acquire a tax title which allows them to be substituted to the rights held by the original purchaser of the land. See section 3932 of the Statutes of 1894. By paying up in full all delinquent interest, and taxes to date a special land certificate on such tracts will be issued by this office.

Purchasers at this forfeited sale should make immediate payment to your treasurer. All tracts not paid for should be reoffered before you adjourn the sale.

The making of the certificate is very important. Section 5, chapter 322 Laws of 1899, contains the form which must be followed. It would be preferable to include only one description as advertised in each certificate. The law, however, permits more than one description in a certificate when sold to the same purchaser. But when that is done the certificate should show the exact amount for which it was sold. Read carefully the case of Brown vs. Setzer, 39 Minn. 317.

The certificate issued by you is entitled to record the same as a deed to real estate, but the subsequent taxes must all be paid, the same as with other conveyance.

Each step thus far under this forfeited tax sale has been carefully taken. Let the same care continue to the finish.

It is hoped that every tract may be disposed of, thus clearing the tax books and making live taxable property in the future.—Pioneer Press.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that all manure and rubbish must be cleaned up and hauled away from all lots within the village limits on or before the 5th day of May 1900, or the same will be removed at the expense of the lot owner.

Dated at St. Hilaire this 17th day of April 1900. Dr. A. F. Blomburgh, Health Officer.

To cure a cough in one day take the Imperial cough syrup. Guaranteed to cure. For sale at the new Drug Store.

The Best in the World.

We believe Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best in the world. A few weeks ago we suffered with a severe cold and a troublesome cough, and having read their advertisements in our own and other papers we purchased a bottle to see if it would effect us. It cured us before the bottle was more than half used. It is the best medicine out for colds and coughs.—The Herald, Andersonville, Ind. For sale by the Imperial Drug Store.

We Handle Everything.

Start the Day Right
And everything will go smoothly. The proper way to start the day is by coming around to our store and ordering a supply of groceries for the day, such things as you may need. It will take you but a few minutes, and we feel sure you will not regret it.

HER HEART'S SECRET;

Or, UNDER A SPELL.

CHAPTER XI.

In a Dream.

"She is sleeping," said Fannie, stepping softly to her brother's side, as he re-entered the house after his interview with Dr. Bond. "She is sleeping so quietly and sweetly now, I am sure she will be better when she awakens. I have darkened the rooms as the doctor told me and left her alone. Oh, brother, brother!" and Fannie clasped her hands upon Herbert's arm and looked up earnestly into his face, "weren't you frightened almost to death? I was. I thought that angel girl was dying, sure enough!"

"You are very easily frightened, dear," said Herbert, lightly. "I have seen ladies faint before."

"You need not pretend to be so philosophical," said Fannie, archly. "I saw your face, sir, and you were as white as a sheet. Come, Bertie, tell me the truth. I'll be the most trustworthy of confidants. Don't you love her a wee little bit? Good gracious, if the boy isn't blushing like a June rose! Ah, I've caught you, and I'm so glad, Bertie—so very, very glad!"

"Glad! Of what?" asked Herbert, bitterly. "That your brother has been a fool? Evidently, your friend has not made you her confidant, or you would know that her heart and hand are already engaged."

"Engaged? Sybil engaged" exclaimed Fannie, with an expression of unfeigned dismay. "Why, brother, you must be dreaming. Sybil doesn't care a fig for any man in the world—or did not a month ago. I've heard her say so a dozen times. When all the other girls used to be whispering of their beaux and lovers, she would never say a word, only that proud lip of hers would curl disdainfully. And she told me with her own lips, just before school broke up, that she had never given love or marriage a thought in her life."

"In such matters, can a young lady's word be always depended on?" asked Herbert, cynically. "I believe a little connivance is considered pardonable. Miss Wraye told me, only last evening, that she was engaged to—to another."

"I can't believe it! I don't believe it!" said Fannie, excitedly. "You must have misunderstood her, brother. You don't know Sybil as I do. She is the soul of truth. And she told me—in one of these rare moments—for it is very seldom that Sybil opens her heart—she told me that her life had been too full of sorrow and darkness for the dreams and hopes of girlhood to find a place in it! And then she added, with her sad, sweet smile, that she had never given a thought to love or marriage in her life. I remember it so clearly," concluded Fannie, clinching the matter with girlish decision, "for Helen Lee had been married that day, and everybody was raving about her diamonds and her laces, and she had sent Madam Fleury a great piece of the wedding cake to cut for supper, that was so rich it made us all sick."

"And this was just before your school broke up—just before she came here?" said Herbert, eagerly.

"Two days later," answered Fannie, positively. "I can't be mistaken, for I have Helen Lee's cards for the 20th of June. And so I'm quite sure," added Fannie, as, with a bright smile, she looked roguishly up into her brother's face, "that if she had fallen in love, it has been since her coming here."

A light stole over Herbert's face as he gazed affectionately at his sisterly comforter. A momentary ray of hope seemed to break through the dull, gray cloud that had settled upon his life.

Might he not, indeed, have misunderstood Sybil's broken, incoherent words? Was not her calm confidence to Fannie more to be relied upon than her timid, nervous refusal of last night? Could he hope still—hope that in some far-off, shadowy future, Sybil might learn to love?

"Fannie," he said, after a moment's pause, "I would not intrude, dear, upon the sacred confidence of friend to friend. But if it be not a betrayal of such confidence, can you tell me aught of Miss Wraye's friends—of her home? I do not ask from idle curiosity, but from an earnest and friendly interest. Father, very naturally, has questioned me regarding your intimacy with Miss Wraye, and when and how it was formed—I being, in a great measure, responsible for her presence here—as your guest."

"Papa is so queer and poky about some things," pouted Fannie. "I'm sure Sybil is as good, and a great deal better than I am, if her father isn't as rich and grand."

"Her father? Then she has a father living?" said Herbert, quickly.

"I don't know; I suppose so," said Fannie, doubtfully. I know she wears a locket with his hair in it—but gracious knows whether he is dead or alive. Sybil is so queer she never speaks of herself or her relatives, and I am sure it was none of my business to inquire what she didn't choose to tell."

"And she never spoke to you of her home, her friends?" said Herbert, in a disappointed tone.

"I don't think she ever did," said Fannie, reflectively. "I always fancied she had lived in the country somewhere, she knew so much about trees and plants, and could teach Madam Fleury more about botany than that old friz-pate ever knew herself. Somehow, brother, I don't think the dear girl's home is a very happy or pleasant one, and I hope"—Fannie smiled up again into Herbert's face—"I hope it won't be very long before some nice fellow offers her another."

And with this somewhat unsatisfactory conclusion, Fannie flitted away to her flowers, having changed her brother's stoical endurance of the inevitable into all the unrest of suspense.

He must know, from Sybil's own lips, the meaning of her contradictory words—he must know if she were fettered or free; for Herbert Clive was the soul of manly honor, and the betrothed wife of another seemed almost as far removed from him as if the nuptial vow had been already spoken before God and man.

All through the summer day the windows of Fannie Clive's boudoir remained closed, and the well-trained servants passed the door noiselessly. Evening came, and still Sybil seemed to sleep, until Dr. Bond's carriage drove through the gate, and it was necessary that he, at least, should see her.

Then, very softly, Fannie stole into the darkened and perfumed room; very gently drew aside the snowy curtains.

The pillows still bore the impression of Sybil's head; her handkerchief and vinaigrette lay upon the floor beside the sofa; but, with a low cry of dismay, Fannie recognized the fact that Sybil herself was gone!

General excitement and surprise ensued. The open side door, leading to a balcony, showed the means of escape, and even Dr. Bond's usually imperturable countenance betrayed signs of anxiety.

"Quick!" he said, in an undertone, to Herbert. "To the river, where you saw her last night! I fear she has gone there. And—and the opiate has not yet ceased to act! Hurry, for God's sake; for she knows not what she is doing—she is still in a dream!"

The doctor's tone and look, even more than his words, added wings to Herbert's steps. He sped down the river path, spurred on by a thousand fears.

Down the steep declivity, through the shadowy grove, the young man sped, scarcely knowing how he passed over the ground. Hope seemed to have taken new life in his heart. Love, that he had believed crushed and despairing, sprang up in immortal strength. Sybil, in deadly peril, seemed all the world to him again.

The doctor's suggestion proved correct. On the narrow stretch of silvery sand that formed the river beach, Herbert found the wanderer.

She was seated on a huge rock, that had fallen, ages past, from the steeps above, and had been washed by the waves until it was smoothed and polished as if by a master's hand.

Her beautiful hair fell about her shoulders, unbound by the usual fillet; her cheeks were flushed unnaturally, and the soft gray eyes had a strange, far-away look in their limpid depths, that showed Sybil was, indeed, in a dream.

Sky and water glowed with the rich beauty of the summer sunset, and the fair girl, seated by the rose-hued waves seemed a different being from the pale wraith who had glided through the moonlight the night before. For there was a smile upon Sybil's lips, a tender radiance in her far-off gaze. She was happy in her dream.

"Sybil!" cried Herbert, delighted to find his treasure safe—"Sybil, you have frightened us so! Why did you fly away? Will you not come home with me?"

"Home!" she repeated, softly—"home. Ah, how sweet a word! Have I, indeed, a home?"

"Poor child—poor little homeless dove!" said Herbert, pityingly.

"He loves me!" repeated Sybil, softly, to herself—"he loves me! His voice is low and sweet, like distant music—so sweet to ears that have heard only the bitter, jarring notes of hate and revenge. Love, love! The word is so strange and sweet—so strange and sweet! Why must I shut out the beautiful sound? Why cannot I, too, love and be loved? Father, father, take from me my cruel heritage! Give me woman's sweetest, dearest, holiest right—the right to love! I, who have never loved—I, who have never hoped to love. Herbert, Herbert! Ah, there is music in the very name!"

Herbert held his breath and listened. She seemed unconscious of his presence, or conscious only as it suggested or accorded with her train of thought. Was it wrong to take her thus at a disadvantage—wrong to steal from her the secret she guarded so jealously—wrong to read a blissful hope in her tender smile, her beaming eye? What lover, even be he chivalrous and honorable as Herbert Clive, could stop to reason here?

"It is so sweet to love," she continued, softly—"so sweet to know that an eye brightens, and a lip smiles, and a voice breathes low music for you alone! Fannie's love was precious to me; but this—this would seem God's own priceless gift—Heaven upon earth! Ah, I might believe, I might hope, if I had the blessed right to love!"

"Sybil, Sybil!" Herbert sprang forward to her feet, forgetful of all other things but the rapturous conviction her words conveyed. "Sybil, is it true, or am I, too, dreaming? Oh, my love, then let us dream forever—let the waking never come!"

But, alas! with his very words, the dream was o'er. She started up with a frightened cry; looked around her in bewilderment. The flush faded from her cheek, the dreamy light from her eye.

"Where am I?" she said, passing her hand over her brow. "I have been asleep so long. Where am I?"

"Ah, here is my lost patient!" said the voice of the old doctor, as he came puffing and panting down the hill. "Ah, you are wide awake now, I see! You did not know you had fallen into the hands of such a grim old wizard. You gave me quite a fright, my dear. I had no idea my little pills would hold you in so potent a spell."

But Sybil did not understand. She only looked from one to the other, with wide-open, startled eyes.

The roseate flush on earth and sky was changing slowly into the purple hues of twilight. The illusory brightness had vanished—Sybil's dream was past.

CHAPTER XII.

Witches' Cave.

More than a mile below the grassy slope that was crowned with the stately mansion of the Clives, ran a dark ravine, so wild and lonesome in its wooded depths as to defy the most venturesome speaker of the picturesque from exploring its recesses.

A little stream brawling through a rocky channel, made the spot musical with its clamor; but beside the gurgle and splash of the waters, the warble of the wild bird that could trill unbroken melodies from its sequestered nest, and the hum of a thousand lower creatures of the wood, no sound was heard in the darksome hollow, that seemed a bit of Nature's rebellion against the taming hand of man.

And yet the hand of man had thrust itself even there. In the darkest center of the ravine, where the tangled vines and sturdy undergrowth made approach almost impossible—at a spot where the little streamlet, widening into a tiny crystal lake, seemed to sleep for a moment ere it hurried on to meet the sweeping river—was a strange structure, half-natural, half-artificial, known by the ominous title of the "Witches' Cave."

The cave itself was a deep but narrow fissure, the bed, perhaps, of some long-dry streamlet, and was popularly supposed to stretch, by its many ramifications, for miles beneath the surface of the surrounding hills.

Just at its opening was built a rude hut, of rough-hewn logs, so overgrown with vines and mosses as to be scarcely distinguishable from the work of nature around it.

It was twilight of the second evening after Sybil's swoon, and an old woman sat beside the few embers on which she was preparing her evening meal—so old, and dry and withered a creature that it was impossible to define her race or color.

Her skin was of a sort of ashen-gray, and seamed and wrinkled almost out of human likeness; her cheeks and lips had long ago fallen in around her toothless gums; her grizzled eyebrows met above the two sunken sockets, within which there burned, with a strange, unnatural fire, a pair of fierce black eyes.

She wore a coarse, though clean, cotton dress of a bluish color, and the few gray locks that escaped from the snowy turban on her head were stiff and straight.

As she sat stirring the mixture on her fire with a forked stick, and crooning to herself some queer old rhyme, she might have easily passed for one of those "weird women" who, cursed with unnatural power, live and die outcasts from their kind.

All around seemed to carry out the ideas suggested by her appearance. The only furniture in the hut were a couple of rude stools, a huge, flat stone, that might have either for altar or table, and the mats that were doubtless intended for the old woman's bed.

Strange skins of all descriptions hung from the rafters—snakes' and lizards', as well as squirrels' and deer's; bundles of herbs were drying in every corner; while, most remarkable of all, from the center of the rough ceiling hung a huge stalactite, that caught the red glimmer of the fire and flung it back over the room in a sort of lurid glow.

Suddenly the old woman lifted her head, with the quick, startled movement of a wild creature of the wood. She had heard a step, though the light footfall, that scarce rustled the fallen leaf, could be distinguished by no other ears.

For a moment she listened, then, nodding her head several times, began stirring the porridge again.

"It is her—ha, ha!—it is her," muttered the ill-omened old being, with a discordant laugh. "She'd like to keep away from old Rizpah if she could, but she can't. The spell is on her, in her blood, and in her bones and in her heart. It was born in her, and it was bred in her; and she can't get away from it with all her book-learning and her knowledge. She has to come back to old Rizpah at last!"

Even as she spoke, a slight form shadowed the threshold—a young girl, with a soft, white mantle flung over her muslin dress; and the Capuchin hood drawn over head and shoulders, entered the hut, and, flinging away the temporary disguise, displayed the pale, exquisite features and floating hair of Sybil Wraye.

"Rizpah, is father here?" she asked, breathlessly.

There was no answer. The old woman continued her low crooning, as though she could not hear.

"Ripah," repeated Sybil, in a louder voice—"Rizpah! can you not hear me?"

"I hear you," was the quiet rejoinder. "Look around you. Can you see him here? Rizpah has no parlor or drawing room, wherein honored guests can wait."

"Ah, you are cross this evening!" said Sybil, in a gentle voice. "Are you suffering, Rizpah?"

"At eighty one is always suffering," was the reply; "but no more than common—no more than common."

"I have been sick myself—a little," said Sybil, sinking down on the deerskin mat before the fire. "They gave me medicine that made me forget myself and it frightened me. I was afraid that I might have said something that—that—But papa is safe? You are sure he is safe, Rizpah?"

"Safe enough," was the old woman's answer. "Why do you fear for him, child? Have I not read his fate a thousand times in the silent stars, in the running waters, in the whispering leaves? Have I not cradled him in my arms, nursed him from my breast? Have I not loved and cared for him with a love fiercer, wilder, stronger than that of the mother who bore him? If I do not fear for him, why should you?"

"Why should I?" echoed the girl, sadly. "Because I have not your faith or your superstition, Rizpah—because—"

The young girl shuddered. Strive as she would against it, this old woman's wild, dark creed had been one of the influences that had shaped her life.

"Aye, aye," continued Rizpah, "I know—I know! I was taught to read the stars and the waters by wise men, in my own land; and when your father was put in my arms, five-and-forty years ago—in my arms, that were uplifted to curse those who had torn my own baby from their clasp—my heart, that was full of bitterness against all mankind, opened again to the white-faced babe, and I learned to love him, even as my own flesh and blood! He kept Rizpah from growing mad with her grief; he drew the poison from her bosom; and when she sang him to sleep with the songs of her own race, she forgot her wrongs and again was happy. And when he, too, was wronged—when they robbed my nursling of his name and his birthright, when his mother died of a broken heart in my arms, and his father left him, beggared and desolate—then old Rizpah's strong right arm stood between her boy and want, and the child grew and thrived, wild and fierce, and strong as those whom the she-wolf suckles and rears—grew up to claim and win his own. And he will win it!"

"Rizpah," said Sybil, taking the withered old hand within her own snowy palms, and speaking gently and tenderly, "I know what papa owes to your noble devotion; I know what I likewise owe to it. But, oh, Rizpah, think of what his life has been! think of the long, weary, bitter years spent in those fruitless efforts to gain his own! think of the manly prime wasted in wicked plans for revenge, justice—call it what you will! think, Rizpah, of what peace, what happiness, what safety, we have lost! and, oh, in pity for your nursling, cease to urge him, by your wild hopes and dark prophecies, on the road to ruin! Let us fly from here, all of us; the air itself seems heavy with danger. Let us fly from here. Would to heaven I had never come near this fated spot!"

"You talk like your mother," said old Rizpah, scornfully, drawing her hand from Sybil's grasp—"like your mother, whose blood ran cold and weak in her veins, and who was never the fitting mate for my boy. She was like the dove in the eagle's nest, striving ever to keep him always quiet. At first I thought you had more of your father's bold spirit. I thought you had learned from him how to hate his foes; I thought that, with the serpent's cunning, you had stolen into their house, and I boasted that one step was gained. But you are no serpent, to strike your fierce sting into the foot that tramples you; you are the weak woman that will not turn, even when crushed. Go! Rizpah scorns you!"

The young girl's pale face flushed slightly at the old woman's bitter tirade. But she glanced at the withered face, and its haggard, half-wild expression made her patient again.

Sybil remembered the days when this poor, old, half-crazed being had been the strongest prop of her father's fortune — the faithful, unwearying nurse of her dying mother—the watchful guardian of her own childish sports—servant, friend, fierce, outspoken counsellor, all in one. And now, tottering on the verge of the grave, homeless and friendless, because he whom she had served so long and faithfully had neither home nor friends, it was little wonder that poor old Rizpah's failing mind fixed itself with fierce tenacity upon the wild hopes she had encouraged for so many years, and that she strove to strengthen her failing powers by recurring to the dark superstition of her youth.

"I am neither the serpent nor the worm, Rizpah," Sybil said, with a good-humored smile. "I came to Clive Towers much against my will, and only because a lovely, innocent girl, who has surely never harmed me or mine, asked me to come as her guest."

"Her guest! their guest!" repeated old Rizpah, bitterly. "You, who should be mistress there, seated at their table and breaking their bread! Child, child, it is a wonder you did not strangle at the first mouthful. It is a wonder their wine and water did not poison your blood! There is no hate like kindred hate, even as there is no love like kindred love. Ah, if you had been a boy! But your poor, weak mother could only give life to a puling girl!"

"Would to heaven I had died when she did!" said Sybil, clasping her hands passionately; "for I live an accursed life, shadowed by danger, darkened and embittered by hatred and revenge. There is no light for me, no beauty, no"—oh, the thrilling pathos, the heart-break of the words—"no hope!"

"Aye, there is hope!" said old Rizpath, catching the last word—"there is hope, child. Have I not told you the stars have said it? Aye, there is hope for you. Listen to me!" She bent her withered face close to Sybil, while the cuning gleam of madness lit her deep-set eyes. "For three years I have lived in this spot alone, and often well-nigh starving. For what, eh? For what? Look here"—the old woman took Sybil by the hand and led her to the back of the hut, where, lifting one of the skins, she disclosed the dark, narrow opening of the cave, through which came a cold, damp draught of air—"look here. These feeble steps have tracked that cave through all its windings, and it leads—ha, ha! where, think you, it leads? To the wine vaults that underlie the proud towers of the robber Clive! Let them close their gates and bar their doors against the rightful heir as they will, but his daughter sits at their fireside, and his foster-mother watches them like the fox in his burrow, with this in her breast!" and Rizpah flashed the blade of a small, keen dagger before Sybil's affrighted eyes. "Aye, before another Clive grasps his father's ill-gotten wealth—before Robert Clive's son which belongs of right to the child of my child—this dagger shall drain the last drop of life-blood from the breast of the robber's heir!"

SHRINKAGE OF THE DEAD SEA.

Level of This Famous Body of Water Is Gradually Falling.

The level of the Dead sea is steadily falling on account of the large volume of water tributary to it, which is now absorbed by irrigation enterprises. The sea was formerly much larger than at present, as is shown by the old beaches stretching at various altitudes around the whole basin. Since the middle of the century its level has been very slowly rising till quite recently, but now it is falling again.

The phenomenon is not due to natural causes, but to the steadily-increasing quantity of water that is taken from the Jordan river for irrigation purposes. There are other smaller streams flowing into the sea, and they, too, are being utilized by the increasing number of farmers, who are diverting all the water they can get to the lands and are relieving the monotonous aspect of the former arid and lifeless region with many verdant fields.

The latest travelers say that some of the salt deposits covering the bottom of the whole lake may now be seen above the water in the shallower parts and near the shores. This is a new aspect in addition to the deposits of salt crystals that have always been observed on the shores. But even though this dessication go steadily on, it will take a long time to dry up the waters, for it requires a sounding line over 1,300 feet long to touch the bottom in the deep northern part of the lake.

She Discharged a Duty.

Many simple people who obtain marriage licenses of city clerks imagine that the clerk in some way becomes responsible for their marriage and that they are in duty bound to report to him afterward and let him keep track of their affairs.

A Salt Lake paper reports that a tall, gaunt woman, with ginger hair and a somewhat fierce expression of countenance, lately came to the county clerk of Boxelder county in that state.

"You're the man that keeps the marriage books, ain't you?" she asked.

"Yes, ma'am," he answered. "What book do you wish to see?"

"Kin you find out if Jack Peters was married?"

Search developed the name of John Peters, for whose marriage a license had been issued two years before.

"I thought so," said the woman. "Married 'Lize Waters, didn't he?"

"The license is issued for a marriage with Miss Ella Waters."

"Yep. Well, I'm 'Lize. I thought I'd ought to come in and tell you that Jack Peters has escaped."—Youth's Companion.

A New View.

"It just struck me," said Dismal Dawson, as he felt about in the bottom of his pockets for a few grains of tobacco, "that me an' the distilleries is in active opposition."

"What?" shouted Everett Wrest, almost with energy.

"Ye see, the stuff they're busy puttin' up is the stuff I'd like to be busy puttin' down."—Indianapolis Press.

They May Be.

"Do you think that rabbits' feet are lucky?" Teaspot asked.

"I do if they are rapid enough to carry the rabbit safely away, from the hunter," replied Mullins.—Detroit Free Press.

DAIRY AND POULTRY.

INTERESTING CHAPTERS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

The Creamery Business.

(Condensed from Farmers' Review Stenographic Report of Missouri Dairymen's Convention.)

John Mingle spoke on the creamery business. In part he said: Before starting a creamery there should be made a canvas of the surrounding country to ascertain if there are enough cows to support a creamery. Then the patrons should get together, if the creamery is to be a co-operative one, and arrange to get their machinery direct from some reputable manufacturing concern, and not through some creamery promoter. The manager should read up on his business, and to do this should take a number of agricultural papers. It should be understood from the beginning that the manager is to do the managing—this will save a good deal of misunderstanding.

Q.—What is your experience with the combined churn and buttermaker? I find that unless it is very carefully used it is hard to keep in proper condition.

Mr. Mingle.—My experience is that, placed in the hands of a competent user there are few faults to be found with it; but with an incompetent maker it will not prove a success. If I were going to put in a creamery and did not know that I would have a man that knew his business I would not put it in; but if I thought I could get a man that knew enough to do the work I would certainly get a combined churn and buttermaker.

Q.—Do you get a larger yield of butter with this kind of a churn than with the other?

A.—I do not know that I ever do. With carefulness the yield is about the same.

Mr. Cobb.—Will you explain to the audience the way the patrons are handled?

Mr. Mingle.—My plan of dealing with the patrons is simply this: We require them to deliver the milk every day if possible, and we take a sample for testing every time milk is delivered. We make a composite test and we do not hesitate to call the attention of the patrons to it. We are particular to satisfy the patrons that they can depend on this test. Then we watch our separator to see it does good work. We encourage the patrons to bring milk by showing them how much profit there is in bringing milk to the creamery. To-day we have 100 patrons and they are producing 6,000 pounds of milk per day. We have paid off something like $1,700 in debts in 15 months and now have a surplus in our treasury.

Q.—What did you pay last year for milk?

A.—I think it was in the neighborhood of 65 cents. Our milk now averages about 4 1-10 per cent. fat. The cows are of all kinds.

Q.—What do you do when you get tainted milk at the weigh cans?

A.—We send it back generally, but we have to learn how to handle each patron, and sometimes we take tainted milk, even though we have to pour it into the slop. We do that only when they first begin, for we do not want to discourage them.

Cruelty in Handling Poultry.

In an editorial on cruelties practiced on poultry the Rural New-Yorker says: The R. N.-Y. has had occasion of late to comment on the cruelties inflicted on live poultry, closely packed into crates, during transportation and exposure for sale. The sufferings of these cramped and crowded fowls are plain to all who are obliged to frequent the markets, but even the agents for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals apparently do not see their way successfully to cope with this evil, and it is not likely to be lessened until some means are taken to induce the transportation companies to make more favorable rates for carrying live animals. Another growing abuse is undoubtedly fostered by the great amount of literature describing the profits of poultry now being issued. Everywhere, in town or village, in the back lots of the residence districts, one can see narrow yards, fenced in with the pitiless wire netting, the barren and filthy enclosure crowded with disconsolate and drooping fowls, half fed and never sufficiently watered, whose owners, deluded by unreliable and unpractical writers on egg-production, are wondering "why hens don't pay." A flock of fowls may run at large about a farmyard and get no attention from the owner, but their life is one of independent and well-fed bliss, compared with the draggled and starved prisoners in many village yards, because they have at least access to many of the bounties of nature. Poultry-keeping, both with profit and pleasure, is entirely possible in the narrow limits of a town lot to those who have intelligence and kindly feeling enough to study and anticipate the wants of confined fowls and sufficient energy to carry out the necessary details, but in the hands of the average town dweller it is little less than slow murder. One can fancy a time when only persons of approved fitness will be allowed to own or handle these helpless creatures, but such a restriction will mark an epoch in true civilization yet to be attained.

Hair Concretions.

There are several different forms of calculi found in the stomachs or intestines of domestic live stock but of these the least understood are unquestionably the "hair balls" found in horses and the "wool balls" found in lambs. We also not infrequently come across hair balls in the stomachs of calves and there can be little question that they are the cause of some of the fatal forms of impaction and convulsions of these young animals.

In lambs there are two sources of wool balls. When the shepherd forgets or neglects to remove the tags of wool from udder of the ewe at lambing time it is no wonder that the lamb takes wool into its stomach along with the milk and it may in this way get enough to set up a serious case of impaction. The way to prevent this accident is apparent from what has been said and should a case be experienced the only possible way of helping the sufferer, and it rarely succeeds, is to administer a full dose of raw linseed oil and follow up with stimulants to keep the patient up until the medicine acts.

The other way in which lambs take wool into their stomachs is also very easily prevented. When the ewes are clipped the "ticks" migrate to the fleeces of the lambs and at once cause the little animals so much irritation and misery that they bite at their sides and often pull off and swallow tags of wool. This may be prevented by dipping the lambs shortly after the ewes are shorn or dipping the ewes a few days before the shearing.

Calves get hair balls in their stomachs by sucking the ears of the other calves with which they are penned and the cause is, in many cases, going too long without food. Young calves require a little food often and if they are provided with it there will be less trouble from this cause. The hair balls in calves and other animals are also sometimes composed of the fine hairs which are to be seen upon the husks of bearded oats, barley, and wheat but more commonly from crimson clover that has been cut too late when the flowers have ripened and the hairs have become strong and furnished with sharp "stickers."

The concretions from the clover plant are most often found in horses, and we have seen specimens that were larger than an osage orange, and such balls are often the cause of unexplainable cases of colic that prove promptly fatal as there is no way of removing the obstruction from the intestine.

When used as a green manure to be turned under, or when fed to stock in the form of hay cut before the flowers have matured there is reason and profit in raising crimson clover, but it is a foolish and dangerous practice to feed the hay remaining after the threshing of clover for seed as it is full of fiber which can prove either digestible nor nutritious and is very likely to produce hair balls and the fatal form of impaction mentioned in the foregoing.

The limey concretions found in the bladder and urinary passages of all animals are as a rule due to the continued drinking of permanently hard water, and in rams from the consumption of mangels and other roots.

English Butter Market.

It is interesting to note the contest among the nations for the English butter market. The principal nations engaged in this contest are the United States, Denmark, Canada, Australasia, France, Holland, Germany and Sweden. A number of other countries send butter to London, but the English reports class them under "Other countries" and so the exact figures are not obtainable. England's butter bill for last year was in excess of 17,000,000 pounds, the largest it has ever been. The fact is explained to some extent by English writers who say that there was last year a great shortage of grass in England, as well as in the west of Europe. This also accounts in part for the fact that last year Sweden, France and Denmark lost ground, sending to the English market less butter than during the previous year as follows: Denmark, 1898, 1,465,000 cwt.; 1899, 1,430,000 cwt. France—1898, 416,000 cwt.; 1899, 353,000 cwt. Sweden—1898, 294,000 cwt.; 1899, 245,000 cwt. Australasia made a remarkable advance, it being: 1898, 228,000 cwt.; 1899, 386,000 cwt. Canada made a still greater advance as follows: 1898, 156,000 cwt.; 1899, 250,000 cwt. The percentage of increase from the United States was still greater, the figures being: 1898, 66,000 cwt.; 1899, 159,000 cwt. Holland made a slight gain, her sales being: 1898, 269,000 cwt.; 1899, 284,000 cwt. The total imports of butter into England during the two past years were: 1898, 3,209,000 cwt.; 1899, 3,389,000 cwt.

Shall We Cease Coloring Butter?

For a number of years now the dairymen of this country have been fighting for a law in the whole country preventing the coloring yellow of oleomargarine. In most of the states the agitation has failed to gain the point desired. The argument that seems to appeal to the common people is that if butter is permitted to be colored why should not oleomargarine also be colored. Of course the answer is that butter is not colored to represent anything else, but that oleomargarine is. Nevertheless, the query is very effective in blocking the efforts of the dairymen to get legislation. It is a slow process for a few thousand dairymen that are carrying on the fight to button-hole several millions of people and set them right. The process is so long that we will never see the end of it. The easiest way to settle the color matter is for the dairymen to ask for a law preventing the coloring of any food product, butter and oleomargarine included. The color of butter can be sufficiently controlled by feed and breed to make it a secondary object with the farmer. It will be a money-making play for the farmers to swap off the right of coloring butter against the right of others to color oleomargarine.

Pre-Disposition to Tuberculosis.—There has long been an idea that some breeds of cattle are more pre-disposed to tuberculosis than others, but this is now being disputed by some advanced thinkers. It has been asserted that the Shorthorns, Ayershires and Jerseys are particularly susceptible to attacks. The writers in question declare that it is merely because those cattle have been kept in conditions more favorable to the spread of the disease than others. In United States Jerseys have been found quite numerously affected, but here they have been largely confined for long months in close unhealthful barns. In the island of Jersey and in all the Channel islands, where the cattle lead outdoor lives, the disease is almost unknown. One investigator says he has never known a Channel island cow to react to the tuberculin test.

A HINT FOR SPRING.

When Housekeepers Are Brightening the Interiors of Their Homes.

Now that the backbone of this remarkable winter is broken, housekeepers are remarking the dingy look of the home interior. The question of new wall coverings is up. Paper is dear and short lived; kalsomines are dirty and scaly; paint is costly. The use of such a cement as Alabastine, for instance, will solve the problem. This admirable wall coating is clean, pure and wholesome. It can be put on with no trouble by anyone; there is choice of many beautiful tints; and it is long lasting.

GENTLE LITTLE KING.

IS ALFONSO, EUROPE'S YOUNGEST RULER.

He Is Clever, Intelligent, a Great Reader and Fond of Music — Has an Income of $1,500,000 and Lives Simply.

Poor little Alfonso of Spain, from whom we seized the remnants of the vast colonial empire of his ancestors, is a dreamy little king with seriousness and sorrow in his looks. In his short life he has seen misfortune fall heavily upon his country and his house. Alfonso XIII. is the youngest ruler in Europe. He was born in 1886, six months after the rather sudden and little expected death of his father. The great care bestowed upon the kingly baby by his mother has not gone unrewarded, for the king has now entirely outgrown his constitutional delicacy, and is a healthy and strong youth, although still small for his age. He bears himself with a peculiar languor, but his dreamy smile is very winning and he is almost worshiped by his entourage. He is clever and intelligent, holds a commission in the army, and is generally seen in uniform. He takes, in spite of his youth, great interest in military affairs, and when a child a boy regiment was formed, of which he was in command. This corps was recruited from the best families in Spain, numbered about 450 youngsters, and included a good band.

Alfonso XIII is fair, with curly hair and deep blue eyes. He is already a great reader and student, and has perfectly mastered four languages besides his own, among them being English, which he speaks without the slightest accent. Before he entered upon his 11th year, when his women attendants gave place to a controller, equerries and valet, he had an English governess. Two English governesses were retained at a high salary at the palace—one for the king and one for his sisters. The king occupies a large and splendid suite of apartments in the royal palace at Madrid and has his own household. The youthful king is passionately attached to his mother and sisters, and with his soldier boys at his command his life is not, and never was, as lonely as it would necessarily appear, considering the strict rule of the court which forbids his majesty to mix with common mortals. Alfonso is fond of music, having no doubt inherited this love from his mother. His at present only rare visits to the royal opera, at Madrid, afford him the greatest pleasure. Two years ago he also witnessed his first bull fight, an obligation no Spanish monarch may neglect. It is reported that the king looked upon this duty more as an ordeal than otherwise. The education of the youthful king was and is a difficult task, as his person is sacred and no punishment can be administered. The late war with the United States, with the frequent and universal disasters, caused the boy king's heart unspeakable grief, and in spite of his youth he spent many sleepless nights. It was a sad and pathetic spectacle to see this young occupant of one of the oldest thrones, surrounded by his sorrowing and deeply afflicted mother and sisters, trying to inspire them with hope and courage under such gloomy circumstances.

According to the laws of Spain the monarch becomes of age and succeeds to full power when he completes his 18th year. Before Alfonso XIII. reaches that age he will have traveled a great deal, as it is intended that he must visit every court in Europe; thus he will complete his education, which is intended to fit him for the difficult position of the reigning King of Spain. He will be wealthy, as his state allowance is $1,500,000 a year, with various palaces, castles and villas to live in rent free, and during his minority savings were and are still effected, for the queen regent does not allow waste, and the home life of the Spanish court is simple. The royal family never rise later than 6 a. m., and at 8 breakfast is served to them. Open-air exercise and studies occupy the time of the king till 1 o'clock, when lunch is partaken of. After another short course of study mother and children take a driving. Dining is at 8 o'clock, and it is only during the last year or so that the king dines in the evening and retires late; formerly he retired regularly at 8 o'clock.

The Officious Person.

If there's anybody on earth more annoying than another it is the officious person. In some instances even young girls are guilty of officiousness. They start out winningly by desiring to be of service; they know just how they can fix this, that or t'other in a way to be a thing of beauty and a joy forever, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. Perhaps it's your hat, perhaps it's your plants. And perhaps, alas! you succumb. If it's your hat, she has some new-fangled way of recurling the feathers, which is chiefly valuable as an escape valve for her enthusiasm. You put the ruins in the ash barrel, and think many things about unsolicited favors, and also of that homely old "If you want a thing well done, do it yourself."

Lincoln's Keen Sense of Humor.

Colonel Hay, who in writing Lincoln's life declared that his time was largely occupied in destroying mots falsely attributed to the president, repeated one recently told to him which he believed to be genuine. A man from Buffalo went to the white house and said, as he shook hands: "We in Buffalo put our trust in God and Abraham Lincoln." "Well, my friend," said the second in the partnership, as he passed his visitor on, "you are more than half right."

A Naval Officer's Opinion.

MACKEREL SCARED BY SHIPS.

Theory of the Fish's Disappearance by an Old Fisherman.

Of late years mackerel have not been seen off the eastern coast of Maine. One explanation was given by a prominent fisherman of Southwest Harbor, who said: "We used to catch mackerel by the thousands down our way years ago, but the warships scared them away. You know they run in schools, and once they get scared from a certain locality they never again run that way. That's the only reason I can find they don't come our way nowadays." Less is known about mackerel than of any other of our common food fish. It is known that the fish migrate northward in the spring and southward in the autumn, and that they come from some unknown place that is secret to all of our experts. In May an enormous school strikes the coast of Yarmouth, N. S. This school evidently is separate from the southern army that advances from the southern coast. From the size and general character of the mackerel off the Yarmouth coast it is believed that, as they have no connection whatever with the great schools from the south, they must come from out of the deep sea to the east. When the southern schools have advanced as far as Nantucket, they suddenly disappear, leaving no trace behind them. Then the veteran mackerel fishermen pick up their traps and repair to the bays indenting the Massachusetts coast, for it is there the mackerel will next appear, where they stay in more or less numbers until well into August. The roving habit of the mackerel is thus shown. Besides these general movements they have certain erratic habits that confound the fishermen and experts. They disappear from one place and reappear in the strangest manner. There is no accounting for these movements any more than there is in explaining their migrations. Old fishermen who have grown gray in the work say that the mackerel are the most mystifying of all our salt water fish. They have learned to read the signs of their coming and going, but they cannot explain them, nor can they account for their habits. They pursue them with a sort of intuition. One may be a good fisherman of other denizens of the deep in a short time, but to capture mackerel large experience is required.

FROZEN IN THEIR TRACKS.

Large Story About Weather From West Virginia.

There is on exhibition at a general store in Marlington, W. Va., a curious and unusual tableau group, says the New York Herald. It is nothing less than a setter dog and a dozen quail, all frozen and in the attitude usually assumed by birds and dogs when brought into close quarters in the woods. The exhibition occupies the entire shop window, and has attracted much attention, though the warmer weather may spoil it soon. The dog belonged to Judge William Green. During the very cold weather just after the beginning of February Judge Green took a young setter out to the woods to give him an outing, thinking he might see a few birds and further the work of training the setter. He took no gun. It was the closed season for game birds. While going up a valley between Peterson's Mountain and a short ridge, where it was extremely cold on account of the sharp wind, Judge Green missed the dog. He hunted for half an hour, but could find no trace of the animal. He returned home, thinking the dog had preceded him, but the animal was not there. Nothing was seen of the dog until Thursday, when the judge went back into the mountains to make another search. In the thicket where the dog had last been seen, but securely hidden by the evergreens the judge discovered the animal, standing with his nose pointed fairly ahead and as natural as if alive. Half a dozen yards away were about a dozen quail, all of them frozen. The setter had scented the birds and stood waiting for his master to come. The dog, in his instinctive effort to locate the game for his master, and the quail, in their fear to move in the dog's presence, had all frozen to death. There has been no thawing weather under the lowering brow of the mountain since the day the animal met the quail. The judge gathered up the frozen dog and quail, brought them to town and placed them on exhibition.

Visiting Cards for Dogs.

"I want some very small cards engraved," said a fashionably attired woman in a Philadelphia stationer's establishment the other day. "Yes, madam," said the attendant, "about this size?" indicating a sample card. "No, no," replied the woman, "much smaller than that. I want them about the size of the baby cards that mothers used to send out several seasons ago when a new baby was born." She finally selected the size she wanted, and the attendant asked what name was to be used. "Fido Smith," was the reply. "And in addition to the address I want 'Wednesday' engraved on the opposite corner." "Did you say Fido?" asked the young man. "Yes," said the woman, "Fido Smith. You see the cards are for my little dog. I don't know whether you know it or not, but it's quite the proper thing now for women who have dogs to take them calling upon other women who have dogs, and of course, you couldn't do that without leaving the cards. Wednesday is my at home day, and Fido receives all his little dog friends with me on that day. Now you know all about it."

Chauncey M. Depew was walking down Fifth avenue the other day with a certain politician, who was trying to induce the senator to give him some railroad passes. He was making an impassioned statement of the reasons why his needs should receive the enlightened consideration of Mr. Depew, when an old, tattered beggar interrupted him to get something in his turn, from the senator. "Look here," said the politician to the beggar, "you work the other side of the street; this is my side." Mr. Depew laughed and gave the politician the desired passes.

Why Cats Don't Like Music.

Cats must be like the characet in Shakespeare who said: "I am never merry when I hear sweet music." Prof. Karl Schmidt has three pet cats, one of which is fondly called "the baby," though it is about two years old and nearly as big as a calf. These pets live high, on portehouse steak, and the only thing which detracts from their perfection in the eyes of their owner is the fact that when the Quintet club rehearses they howl piteously. It is not the piano they mind, but the other stringed instruments. Dogs generally love music, and Prof. Schmidt's friends have been trying to understand the wherefore of the musician's cats hating music. "Why, it's easy to understand," said a deep thinker. "How would you like to listen to tunes played when the strings were made of the delicatessen of your fellow beings? I guess the melody would awaken sad fears and thoughts. I don't plame the professor's pets for yowling at his lack of consideration for their feelings."—Louisville Times.

True Gratitude.

Soon after the first distribution of committees in the house of representatives Representative Foster of Chicago was introduced to Speaker Henderson. He had received but one committee appointment, and that an obscure one. He remarked:

"I am on a fine committee, Mr. Speaker."

Mr. Henderson beamed.

"I am very glad, Mr. Foster, you like your appointment," he said. "I always like to please the gentlemen of the house."

"Oh," said Mr. Foster, solemnly, "I refer to the committee of the whole. You know I am a member of that."

While the speaker was gasping for breath the new member from Chicago added:

"At the same time, if you are very anxious to please, I would not object to being in your debt for some other good committee."

"Dear Sir—Pe-ru-na has been my salvation. It has given me back a beautiful voice, a gift of God; it has brought me once more to my old profession. I can talk now, and sing, where before I could scarcely whisper. Can you wonder at my delight? I wish every person who is suffering as I suffered might know Pe-ru-na. Only those who have been afflicted can ever know the intense satisfaction and gratitude that comes with a complete cure. My voice was completely gone. April 15 I felt so elated over the restoration of my voice that I inserted an advertisement in The Star for vocal pupils. The advertisement, which cost me 65 cents, brought me five pupils, and that was the beginning of my present large class. Yours gratefully,

"Annie Wyandotte."

A congestion, inflammation or ulceration of the mucous membrane, whether of the head, stomach, kidneys, or other organ, is known to the medical profession as catarrh. It is known by different names, such as dyspepsia, Bright's disease, female complaint, diarrhoea, bronchitis, consumption and a host of other names. Wherever there is a congested mucous membrane there is catarrh, acute or chronic.

MISS CLARA STOECKER.

Miss Clara Stoecker says: "I had chronic catarrh for over a year. I tried many remedies, but found no relief until I saw an advertisement in the paper of your treatment for chronic catarrh. I tried it and I think I am now well. I recommend Pe-ru-na to all my friends who are afflicted with catarrh." Miss Stoecker lives at Pittsburg, Pa.

Mrs. Margareth Fritz, Wilcox, Okla., writes: "I extend my sincere thanks for the good advice you have [illegible] me. [illegible] not [illegible] I would [illegible] living now if it were not for you. I had suffered with flow of blood for four months, and the doctors could help me but little. They operated on me three times. It was very painful and I only obtained little relief. I was so weak I could not turn in bed. Then I applied to Dr. Hartman. I did not know whether he could help me or not, but I followed his advice, and used only three bottles of Pe-ru-na and Man-a-lin. Now I am well and as strong as I ever was, thanks to your remedies." Pelvic catarrh has become so frequent that most women are more or less afflicted with it. It is usually called female disease."

Johnnie's Responsibility.

Johnnie's father was leaving home on business. Just before starting, he said to the child:

"Johnnie, while I'm away I want you to take great care of mother. I leave her in your charge."

That night when Johnnie knelt at his mother's knee, saying his evening prayer, he said, as usual:

"Please, Lord, bless grandma and take care of her; bless father and take care of him; but you needn't trouble about mother, because I'm going to take care of her."

He Believed It.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucus lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucus surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The More Synonymous.

It is told of a retired farmer that, after returning from a continental tour, on which he had long set his heart, he was narrating, one evening, to his friend, the doctor, how he had visited "the majestic Lake of Geneva and trodden the banks of Blue Leman."

"Excuse me," interrupted the doctor, "Lake Geneva and Lake Leman are synonomous."

"That, my dear sir," replied the farmer, "I know very well; but are you aware that Lake Leman is the more synonomous of the two."—New New York Tribune.

Kaiser as a Boy.

The present German emperor, when a small boy, attended the wedding of the Prince and Princess of Wales. He was under the charge of his two uncles, the Duke of Edinburg and the Duke of Connaught. As may be expected, young William fidgeted sadly, and consequently received an occasional warning tap on the shoulder. But how he did revenge himself! His uncles were in Highland dress, and the future emperor slyly knelt down and bit into their bare legs with great earnestness.

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate.

Washington, April 18. — For more than three hours yesterday Mr. Hoar, the senior senator from Massachusetts, occupied the attention of the senate in a speech in opposition to the policy of "imperialism," upon which he maintained this government had embarked. As prepared, the address was 50,000 words in length, but Mr. Hoar omitted much of it owing to an incipient attack of grip from which he was suffering. He spoke for three hours, and while it was a tremendous strain on him, the more important passages of the argument were delivered with force and vigor. The speech was brilliantly written, was illuminated with splendid rhetorical figures, and was rich with citations from history. One of the notable parts of the address was the eulogy of Aguinaldo. Mr. Hoar did not liken the insurgent leader to Washington, as has been done heretofore, but to Kossuth, Oom Paul, Joubert, Nathan Hale and other builders of the church of liberty. In statecraft he likened Aguinaldo and his associates in the leadership of the Filipinos to the best minds ever produced in the Asiatic race — a race which handed down to us the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, the poetry of David, the eloquence of Isaiah, the wisdom of Solomon and the profound philosophy of Paul. One of the most effective parts of the address was his fancied roll calling of some of the distinguished statesmen of the United States on the question of the retention of the Philippines. He began with George Washington and closed with William McKinley, each in a sentence giving the reason for his vote. Every vote was in the negative, except that of Aaron Burr, who voted "yes," and explained: "You are repeating my buccaneering expedition down the Mississippi. I am to be vindicated at last." When the name of William McKinley was called he replied: "There has been a cloud before my vision for a moment, but I see clearly now; I go back to what I said two years ago: 'Forcible annexation is criminal aggression; governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, not of some of them, but of all of them.' I will stand with the fathers of the republic. I will stand with the founders of the Republican party. No."

The effect was dramatic as Mr. Hoar pronounced his peroration; the stillness in the chamber was intense. Applause swept over the galleries, but it was hushed quickly by the president pro tempore.

The House.

The second day's debate upon the naval appropriation bill in the house was confined closely to the subject matter of the bill, and was, as a rule, devoid of interesting features. The questions of armor plate and the building of warships in government yards attracted most attention. General debate was closed yesterday and to-day the bill will be read for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The House.

Washington, April 19.—The debate on the naval appropriation bill under the five minute rule yesterday drifted into politics and for a good portion of the afternoon members fought hammer and tongs across the political aisle. The partisan rancor almost culminated in a sensational scene between Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, the champion of the administration, and Mr. Williams of Mississippi. Some of the Democrats began worrying Mr. Hawley of Texas by pointedly asking if the president had not changed his mind on the Porto Rican tariff question, and Mr. Grosvenor finally threw himself into the breach. Mr. Williams made an interruption that drew a sharp rejoinder from the Ohian about "the unfair advantage" taken by the Mississippian. This aroused the wrath of the latter, and after Mr. Grosvenor had concluded he made a stinging response in which he said parliamentary language would not permit him properly to characterize Mr. Grosvenor's offense. Later Mr. Grosvenor disclaimed intentional affront, and there the matter ended. Some progress was made with the bill, but most of the controverted points went over. A motion to strike from the bill the contingent fund of $500,000 for the navy department was defeated. A point of order against the appropriation of $250,000 for the new naval academy at Annapolis was pending when the house adjourned.

The Senate.

During almost the entire session of the senate yesterday the Alaskan civil code bill was under consideration. In this connection Mr. Stewart of Nevada delivered an address of nearly three hours upon the mining laws of the United States and their relation to the proposed amendment of Mr. Hansbrough as to the rights of alien locaters of claims. Mr. Nelson of Minnesota, Mr. Carter of Montana and Mr. Teller of Colorado discussed the pending amendment at length, both Mr. Nelson and Mr. Teller being particularly vigorous in their denunciation of it.

The Senate.

Washington, April 20.—In accordance with the recommendation of the president in his message sent to congress Wednesday, the senate yesterday passed a joint resolution providing for the administration of civil affairs in Porto Rico, pending the appointment of officers under the Porto Rican government law recently enacted. The Alaskan civil code bill was again under consideration, the debate continuing on the Hansbrough alien miners amendment. Mr. Carter presented formally his substitute for the Hansbrough amendment and delivered a speech in support of it. Mr. Spooner antagonized both the original and substitute amendments, holding that the courts ought to settle the conflicting claims without interference by congress.

The House.

The house spent practically the entire day debating a proposition in the naval bill designed to turn over to the navy the survey and charting of the waters in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines. The bill carries an appropriation of $100,000 for this purpose. Mr. Cannon, chairman of the appropriations committee, led the fight against it, arguing that such surveying of these waters as should be made, should be performed by the coast and geodetic survey, which, he said, could do the work better and cheaper. In the end the house sustained his view, adopting an amendment offered by him to appropriate only the regular $10,000 for ocean surveys. The chairman of the committee of the whole, Mr. Payne, overruled the point of order against the appropriation for the new naval academy, but an amendment offered by Mr. Cannon was adopted providing that before the money appropriated by the bill for the academy be expended plans for the whole improvement, not to exceed $10,000,000, be submitted and approved by the secretary of the navy.

The House.

Washington, April 21. — As a result of a protracted struggle in the house yesterday the provision of the naval appropriation bill to enable the secretary of the navy to contract for armor plate for the battleships Maine, Ohio and Missouri, now awaiting their armor equipment, at $545 per ton, the price asked for Krupp armor, is out of the bill, as is the provision to repeal the $300 limitation placed upon the armor by the current law. The fight came at the end of the consideration of the bill. Although the provision was obnoxious to the rule, all the minority members of the committee had agreed to it, but when the majority declined to allow the discussion of a proposition for the establishment of an armor plate factory they retaliated by raising a point of order against the two provisions above referred to, and they were ruled out. The exact effect of the action of the house is disputed. The appropriation of $4,000,000 under the head of "armor and armament" remains on the bill as well as the language of the proviso authorizing the secretary of the navy to contract for armor of the best quality for the Maine, Ohio and Missouri, the words stricken out being "at a cost not to exceed $545 a ton, including royalties."

It is contended by some that this empowers the secretary to contract for the armor without regard to cost. By others it is claimed that the provision will be ineffective unless the senate inserts the price. So much bad feeling was aroused by the wrangle over the armor plate provision that Mr. Underwood of Alabama began a filibuster after the bill was reported to the house, and finally forced an adjournment without final action on the bill. Before the armor plate question came up two amendments to modify the provision for the increase of the navy, which authorizes two battleships and six cruisers, were defeated. One proposed to add a provision for six gunboats and the other to strike out the provision for the battleships. The question of building ships in government yards did not reach a vote as the amendment offered to this end was ruled out on a point of order.

The Senate.

The senate had under consideration during the greater part of the day's session the conference report on the Hawaiian civil government measure. Mr. Cullom made an extended explanation of the changes in the bill. The report was the subject of sharp criticism. Final action upon it was postponed until to-day. The Alaskan civil code bill was up for a brief time, Mr. Bate of Tennessee delivering a speech in opposition to the pending Hansbrough amendment relating to the rights of alien miners. Mr. Foraker of Ohio pronounced an eulogy upon the late Lorenzo Danford, a representative from Ohio, and the senate adopted resolutions expressive of its sorrow.

The House.

Washington, April 23.—The animated controversy over the naval appropriation bill, which began Friday, was resumed Saturday, and after a brief consideration this important bill was passed. Mr. Underwood of Alabama, whose filibuster had brought affairs to a temporary standstill, explained there was no purpose to delay, only to insist that time be given for consideration and that a vote be taken on the government armor factory proposition. Mr. Vandiver submitted this proposition in a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to the naval committee to frame a provision for a government factory. The instructions were ruled out and subsequently the motion to recommit was disagreed to without division. The bill was thereupon passed without a record vote. The bill provides for two battleships, three armored cruisers and three protected cruisers. The $545 figure on the armor is stricken out. At 1 p. m. the house devoted itself to eulogies on the late Representative Settle of Kentucky.

The Senate.

Without the formality of a vote the senate adopted a resolution directing the secretary of war to inform the senate whether any officer of the army who is now or has been on duty in Cuba or Porto Rico, since the declaration of war against Spain has received any compensation for services other than his regular pay as an army officer, and to give the facts in regard to expenditures alleged to be extravagant in fitting up the governor's palace and government offices at Havana.

STORMS ARE PREDICTED.

Weather Bureau Warns the People of the Gulf Coast.

Washington, April 24.—The weather bureau last night ordered storm signals displayed on the entire gulf coast from Pensacola, Fla., to Brownsville, Tex., near the Mexican border line. On the gulf coast the forecast for Monday and Tuesday is for fresh to high winds from the southeast with thunder squalls. Heavy rains in the Southern states, causing further floods in that section are predicted for the next two days.

JAPS REFUSED ADMITTANCE.

Thirty Turanians May Be Sent Back to Japan From Seattle.

Seattle, Wash., April 24.—Thirty of the five hundred and sixty Japanese brought by the steamer Rio Juan Maru have been refused admittance to the United States by the authorities here, and if their opinion is concurred in they will be sent back to Japan.

Disciplined by the Kaiser.

Berlin, April 24. — When Emperor William arrived at Altona the other day to salute the prince of Wales, returning from Copenhagen to London, he was struck with the lack of suitable arrangements on the part of Lieut. Gen. von Schleitz, commander at Altona. After his return to Berlin the emperor issued orders giving Gen. von Schleitz six months leave of absence. The general has tendered his resignation and left the army.

Killed in a Drunken Row.

Chillicothe, Ohio, April 24. — James Stewart, a veterinary surgeon who lived at Londonderry, this county, was found dead in a street on the east side of this city with his head bruised. George Poe was arrested and confessed to having struck Stewart with a stone in a drunken row and killed him.

Turks Attack a Picket.

Frankfort-on-the-Main, April 24. — The Belgrade correspondent of the Zeitung says: A Turkish patrol fell upon the Servian boundary pickets near Vranja and shot one underofficer and two of his men.

Special Court to Try Rebels.

London, April 24.—The Law Journal says a special court will be constituted for the trial of rebels in South Africa, of which the lord chief justice, Baron Russell of Killowen, will be a member.

FOREST FIRES RAGE

GREAT DAMAGE DONE IN KITTSON COUNTY, MINN.

Twelve-Year-Old Girl Saves Two Babes From the Flames at Beaton — Many Settlers Have Lost Their All—In St. Louis and Itasca Counties the Fires Are Burning Fiercely and Great Damage Is Threatened—Carpio, N. D., Has a Narrow Escape From Destruction.

Stephen, Minn., April 24. — A great prairie fire is raging in Kittson county, this state, and already a large number of homes have been destroyed. The fire is the worst near Beaton, eight miles from here, and every settler in that locality has lost his all.

Annie Erickson, the twelve-year-old daughter of a farmer living a few miles from Beaton, has been made a heroine of the fire, she having, at the risk of her life, saved her twin sisters, two years of age. To save them Annie ran a mad race with the leaping flames, carrying with her on horseback the two babies, with whom she was alone in the house when the fire surrounded the place.

Nearly 100 farmers are now out fighting the flames, but unless rain falls soon the fire will continue to spread, destroying everything in its path.

WHOLE COUNTRY LIT UP.

Fires Raging in St. Louis and Itasca Counties.

Duluth, April 24.—The forest fires in the northern and western part of St. Louis county and the eastern part of Itasca county are burning fiercely, and settlers, the railroads and even the towns on the western end of the Mesaba range are threatened. The whole country is lit up between Hibbing and Swan River on the line of the Duluth, Mississippi River & Northern. It is in that section that the fires are most extensive and threatening. A portable sawmill belonging to Powers & Simpson, four miles northwest of Hibbing, has been destroyed. The camps have been threatened, but so far as can be learned the fire has not reached them. The fires extend, it is said, well up toward Cass lake and are increasing in area at a rapid rate. The underbrush is dry and the marshes have really little water in them and the tall grass is burning over on miles upon miles of territory. It is said to be working into the good timber in places, and unless rain comes within a few days there is danger of very extensive damage. The railroads are taking extra precautions to prevent the fire getting into the bridges and buildings, and settlers are doing everything possible to protect their property. It has been many years since the northern part of Minnesota has been as dry as at present, or when the possibilities of damage from fires was as great.

Later reports from the forest fires are very meager, but from the best information obtainable the worst of the scare is over and fires are dying down. The excitement among the settlers and inhabitants of the timber towns which was intense for a day or two, has disappeared. A good many thousands of dollars' worth of damage was done, however, and owing to the unusually dry condition of the underbrush and tall timber, danger is not altogether removed. Rain is anxiously looked for, and until it comes anxiety will continue. A report reached this city last night from Lakeside, a suburb six miles east, that timber a few miles north of there was burning, and fire appeared to be widening its area quite rapidly. The wind is from the south, but not strong, although enough to carry blaze in that direction.

MANY TOWNS IN DANGER.

The Fires Sweep Along an Extension of the Great Northern.

Grand Forks, N. D., April 24.—The timber region along the line of the Duluth extension of the Great Northern is in danger of suffering one of the worst fires it has ever known. Little snow fell there last winter and the unusually early spring has long since taken it away. Not a drop of rain has fallen this year and many of the water courses are drying up. High winds have prevailed all spring and the forests are dry as tinder. Small fires have been started here and there, but until Friday they did little damage. On Friday the wind attained a velocity of thirty miles an hour and the whole forest seemed to be aflame. The territory most affected lies north of Leech lake, and runs about sixty miles east and west. Most of the fires have been south of the track and the south wind has endangered more or less every town in the district. The places in the greatest danger are small way-stations which have no protection, and there are many of these which are doomed unless rain falls soon. The people of Eckles succeeded in fighting the fire away from their village and the town has been completely burned around, the fire having gone on north. Little valuable timber has yet been destroyed, but it cannot escape if the present weather continues.

Evangelical Centennial.

Sheboygan, Wis., April 24.—The centennial meeting of the Evangelical association was held here at the First Congregational church yesterday. Bishop Horn of Cleveland delivered the principal address.

Blew Her Head Off.

Plainview, Minn., April 24. — Miss Minnie Fisk, in a temporarily demented state of mind, took her life by the aid of a shotgun. Her mind had become partially deranged from continued sickness.

Child Burned to Death.

Royalton, Minn., April 24.—The four-year-old son of Charles Gakin of Buckman was burned to death in a shed yesterday. The boy was left in the shed asleep while Mr. Gakin was at work in another part of the field. A team of horses, harness and some farm tools also burned.

Farmer Has a Good Thing.

Stanley, Wis., April 24. — A farmer living six miles south of Stanley, brought into town a large piece of iron ore which he claims was taken from a ledge on his farm.

FLAMES ARE BEATEN BACK.

Carpio, N. D., Has a Narrow Escape From Destruction by Fire.

Carpio, N. D., April 24—A prairie fire which has hovered to the west of here for a day or two, shifting its course occasionally as the light winds prevailing varied in direction, has reached here. At noon Saturday it was remarked "that the fire was getting ominously near, and that the new school house built out in the prairie with deep grass under it and all around it, was in great danger of being burned."

About 2 p. m. down came the flames in several sharp-tongued points, galloping, jumping, racing, each point trying, apparently to outdo the other, and be the first to get at the dry pine lumber of the little new school house. The teacher saw the danger and dismissed the school, and her sixteen or seventeen pupils scattered for places of safety. On came the flames only a few rods away. The brigade of three firemen was suddenly augmented to thirteen. The section foreman on the Soo railroad seeing the danger, came with his willing hands and all fought until the day had been won.

THIRTEEN BUILDINGS BURNED.

Devils Lake Has a Disastrous Conflagration.

Devils Lake, N. D., April 24.—A second fire here Friday night. A strong wind blew from the south and at 11:30 p. m. fire started in the Tower house, the second largest hotel in the city, and the flames rapidly spread north, destroying thirteen buildings. The Tower house loss is $4,000; Peter Haley, farm machinery, loss, $2,000; Larue Miller company, loss $11,000; John Dealey, four dwellings, $1,000; Cockburn's barn, $1,000; Pattie's barn, $200; Hovey's blacksmith shop, $800; Blanchflower's livery barn, $1,400; Fox's barn, $800; Withey's building, $200.

In the afternoon fire destroyed Pierce's livery barn, two valuable horses perishing. Loss $2,500. At 9 o'clock in the evening Reid's hotel caught fire from a lamp, but the building was saved by the prompt arrival of the fire department.

DES MOINES SALOONS TO OPEN.

Consent Petition Sufficient and the City Council Passes Necessary Resolution.

Des Moines, Iowa, April 24. — The board of supervisors yesterday afternoon completed its canvass of the saloon-consent petition and declared it sufficient. Two hours later the city council passed the necessary resolution of consent, and the saloons will be reopened immediately.

LEAPS INTO THE LAKE.

Chicago Man Commits Suicide at Albert Lea.

Albert Lea, Minn., April 24.—A dramatic suicide took place here yesterday. About noon a man, supposed to be A. P. Cosgrain of Chicago, went to Boatman Marlett and hired a boat, rowed out into the middle of the lake, jumped in and was drowned before anybody could reach him. He was about thirty years of age.

INDUSTRIAL PLANTS BURN.

Disastrous Fire Visits the Village of Wilmot, Wis.

Kenosha, Wis., April 24. — A disastrous fire visited the village of Wilmot, in the western part of this county, wiping out every industrial plant. The town was absolutely without fire protection and the only protection was a bucket brigade. The loss is estimated at $50,000, with practically no insurance.

HIGH SCAFFOLDING BREAKS.

One Man Instantly Killed and Another Fatally Injured.

Pueblo, Colo., April 24. — By the breaking of a scaffolding ninety-five feet high on the dome of the new "stove" building, erected at the steel works, one man, F. D. Curtis, was instantly killed, and I. W. Stanton, a fellow worker, had both legs broken and his skull crushed. He will die.

Fire at Morristown.

Morristown, Minn., April 24. — The Knopf building, occupied by Laufenburger & Ebel, general merchandise, caught fire by the explosion of a lamp, and was burned with all its contents, including the hall occupied by the G. A. R. post, W. R. C., Masonic and Woodmen lodges. The Deuey building, occupied by Swift & Bidoli's meat market, also was burned. The flames spread so rapidly that several persons in the store escaped with difficulty. William Snyder and W. B. Bennett, clerks, were severely burned about the face and hands. Loss, $12,000; insurance, $10,000.

Barns Burned at Anoka.

Anoka, Minn., April 24.—The barns of the Mahany Transfer company were destroyed by fire, the damage being $1,300. The horses were all out at the time or a considerable number would have been burned. The residence of V. C. Pratt, adjoining, was damaged to the extent of $300. The fire was started by the explosion of a lamp.

Accidentally Killed by Her Son.

Crookston, Minn., April 24.—Mrs. L. A. Larson, wife of L. A. Larson, former state boiler inspector, was killed here yesterday by a shot from a rifle accidentally discharged by her nine-year-old son. The bullet penetrated the brain and death was instantaneous.

Good Brick Clay Found.

Fairmont, Minn., April 24. — Messrs. Bierbauer & Shingle of Mankato have purchased a tract of land in Fairmont and will as soon as possible open a brickyard, finding an excellent quality of clay in practically unlimited quantities. They have secured options on other suitable land adjoining, and will commence work May 1.

Anderson's flour mill, five miles south of Austin, burned recently. Loss $8,000.

Fire in an Opera House.

Mitchell, S. D., April 24.—Fire in the Grand opera house practically destroyed all of the scenery. The damage will amount to about $1,500, which is fully covered by insurance.

Convicted of Murder.

Sioux City, Iowa, April 24.—Ernest Meyer, who killed his brother-in-law Christ Bauer, March 10, was convicted by the jury yesterday. The penalty for the crime was fixed at $500 fine or one year in [illegible]

WIPED OUT BY FIRE.

Disaster Overtakes a North Dakota Town.

Edinburgh, N. D., April 22. — Fire wiped out the entire business portion of this city yesterday. Property to the extent of $400,000 was burned and two women perished in the flames. Smouldering ruins and burnt debris are all that remain to mark the location of this heretofore prosperous village; entire families are without homes and many were compelled to spend the night out of doors. The food supply is short and the homeless ones will undergo distress from hunger. Mrs. Jacob Lindall, wife of a former prominent merchant, and a bride of but a few months, and Mrs. B. Bjerson, were burned to death. They occupied rooms in a two-story building, and attempts were made to get to their apartments, but without avail. The origin of the fire was in the rear of Domstad & Co.'s drug store, and supposed to be from spontaneous combustion. The Robertson Lumber company lost its entire stock and buildings. Five general merchandise stores, two drug stores, one bank, two hotels, livery stables and many other buildings were burned. Two elevators containing several thousand bushels of grain are also burned. The railroad tracks are destroyed for some distance and trains will be delayed.

COUNTRY TOWN FIRE.

Moeville, Wis., Damaged to the Extent of $8,000.

Red Wing, Minn., April 22.—Fire at Moeville, Wis., seven miles from Red Wing, destroyed I. S. Moe's flour and saw mills, Larson's general merchandise store and Ingeberg's residence and barn. The loss is $8,000; partly insured. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Drainage Convention.

Grand Forks, N. D., April 22.—Chairman Guthrie, of the drainage convention committee, has been hard at work for the past two weeks sending out literature through the valley to those whom it is desired to interest in the convention to be held here on May 10. From replies which he has received he is convinced that at least 1,500 delegates will be in attendance, making this the largest convention ever held in the state.

Wireless Telegraphy on the Lakes.

Milwaukee, April 22. — Preparations are being made to give wireless telegraphy its first trial on the lakes. A station and a 150-foot signal mast are being erected at South Point for communication with the Racine lighthouse at North Point. Some of the Goodrich boats will also be fitted with apparatus for telegraphing the station as they pass there on their trip. It is expected the first test will be made next month.

Beet Seed Planter.

Winona, Minn., April 22. — Charles Knopp of this city has invented a machine for planting beet seed and other seed that must be planted in hills. The motion of the machine creates a draft of air and this picks up the seed from a pan and blows it out at the proper place. Mr. Knopp has applied for a patent. Those who have seen the machine consider it a very valuable invention.

Deed for Pine Land Filed.

Duluth, Minn., April 22.—A deed for the timber on 6,080 acres of land in Lake county, near Lake Superior, has been filed. It is from the Gatwick, Smith & Gryer Lumber company to Alger, Smith & Co., and John Millen, and is for $158,000. The timber will be sawed here.

Convicted of Robbery.

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 22.—In the United States court George Murphy, charged with robbing the postoffice at Dalesburg, was convicted. Judge Carland sentenced him to pay a fine of $100 on each of the two counts in the indictment and serve two years in the penitentiary.

THREE MEN KILLED.

A Dynamite Packing House Blows Up.

Bay City, Mich., April 22.—The packing house of the Ajax dynamite works, near the village of Kawawlin, this county, was blown up yesterday afternoon, killing three men. All leave young wives and children. Their bodies were torn to shreds, only enough being found to fill a bushel basket. Great trees were uprooted or torn to splinters and houses and stores in Kawkawlin were wrecked by the force of the explosion. H. H. Thomas of Bay City is the owner of the works. It is believed that the explosion, which is the fourth in seven years, was caused by one of the men dropping a pailful of dynamite on the floor. The financial loss is slight.

TWO REPUBLICAN TICKETS.

Party in Tennessee Divided Into Two Factions.

Nashville, Tenn., April 22.—Tennessee will have two Republican tickets in the field in the coming campaign. Likewise two sets of delegates will go to the national convention at Philadelphia. As expected, the state convention split here yesterday, the Evans contingent walking out and holding a convention of their own. W. F. Poston of Crockett county is its gubernatorial selection, while John E. McCallis is at the head of the state ticket named by the convention over which Congressman Brownlow presided.

MORE LIND REFORMS

FIRMNESS OF GRAIN AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION GIVES THE SOUTHWEST LOWER GRAIN RATES.

The Roads Yield Gracefully—First Fruit of a Full Board in Sympathy With Governor Lind—Other State Political Points—The National Field—Encouraging Outlook on Every Hand—The Coming Conventions—Twin City Gossip—Note and Comment of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, April 30, 1900.

The administrative event of the week has been the final adjustment of the controversy between the state railroad and warehouse commission and the southwestern roads, as to the rates on grain, being the conclusion of the commissioners' determined effort to bring the rates on flax seed and grain down to a fair basis.

After many weeks of consideration, and after a number of conferences between the railroad officials and the commission, the determined stand taken by the latter induced the companies to yield. They have now accepted the rates demanded by the commission which involves a reduction from 169 stations on the following roads:

All stations on the Hastings and Dakota, from Sumter to Appleton, inclusive.

All stations on Minneapolis and St. Louis, from Winthrop to Dakota state line, and from Winthrop to Iowa state line.

All stations on the Chicago and Northwestern, between Kasota and Dakota state line, including branches.

All stations on Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha in Minnesota west and south of Mankato.

All stations on Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul in Minnesota west of and including Wells.

All stations on Great Northern in Minnesota southwest of Raymond (near Willmar).

Eleven stations on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern.

From the 169 stations affected a few are selected to show the reductions in the various localities, as follows:

Table Showing Reduction April, 1900.

Redwood Falls	14	11½	2½	11½	11	½	11½	11	½
Marshall	18	14	4	14+	12½	½	13	12	1

The reduction ranges all the way from 5 to 25 per cent or more, and will average fully 10 per cent for the whole region affected. Anyone can figure out the net local benefit to farmers and localities. If a point, say Senator Miller's town of Luverne, ships 1,000,000 bushels of wheat in the season, the saving, which will range from $12 to $15 a car load, will not be less than $12,000 for the season. Governor Lind judges that the saving for the 20 counties of the Second congressional district will be at least $250,000, and be perhaps as much or more than all the state and county taxes paid by those counties.

This is the second reduction which the railroad commission has been instrumental in bringing about since Governor Lind's inauguration. Below is a table showing the rates in force Jan. 1, 1899, and the rates as now fixed by this latest reduction. For the sake of brevity only a few stations are selected.

Wood Lake	14	12	2	13	11½	1½
Marshall	16	14	2	14	12½	1½

This is the first time in the history of the railroad and warehouse commission that the commissioners have taken up the grain rates on their own motion without being pushed into it by the filing of a complaint.

The people will not be slow to recall how much they have lost in all the years that the high freight rates have prevailed under former administrations. The people will not be slow to approve of the firmness of the railroad and warehouse commission in insisting upon this act of justice. They will recognize that the commission has not only done its duty, but that its duty has not been to harass the transportation companies with unreasonable and unjust demands; but to make such demands as the conditions required and as the earnings of the railroads justified. That the commission has asked only what is fair and equitable is proved by the fact that the rates proposed by them have been accepted by the railroads and will go into effect at once. To have accomplished the subtantial reductions above cited within so short a time after getting control of the commission, and to have done it without resorting to litigation, conclusively refutes the claims so often made by former administrations, that they were doing the best that could be done.

The inquiry relative to merchandise rates is still pending. But it can be safely predicted in the light of what has already been done that it will be pushed to a final decision as rapidly as possible.

The coal rate case, affecting the same territory, is now before the supreme court. An early and favorable decision is confidently expected.

Apropos of Minneapolis they do say that Mayor Gray is driving the spikes of successful administration in every direction, and the Republicans themselves recognize that they have no man who can come within a mile of beating him. This and other auspicious circumstances cause the reform forces of Hennepin to set their stakes at the election of every man on the city and county tickets this fall. And if that is the case in Hennepin, it is even more so, if possible, in Ramsey. Ramsey, Hennepin, the state, and a clean sweep in the legislature, is the way it looks now.

With Minnesota landed this fall, and Bryan inaugurated next March, what veteran campaigner will not be willing to "step down and out?"

State Auditor Dunn has issued a circular to county auditors more than usually emphatic in defining their duties. Special stress is laid on the subject of assessment of corporations so as to cover taxation of franchises, in which Governor Lind's suggestions and the recommendations of the board of equalization are followed.

The auditor refers to the "plain duty" of the officers addressed, and now the query arises, will he, a la McKinley, follow the circular with a hint to pay no attention to it. But Plain Duty Dunn and Plain Duty McHanna are quite different "critters."

The Lincoln Leaguers report a great boon to their movement of organization of the Lincoln Republicans. No serious dissent from the movement is heard in any part of the country, unless it be in the extreme silver sections.

A fair expression of current sentiment is the following from Dr. Ohage, the veteran St. Paul Republican, who said: "For 25 years I have been a believer in the Declaration of Independence. I am for Bryan or any other good man who stands for that revered document, unless my party shall stand for it," which the same it wont.

Hanna is now very busy in the keynote business. "We know our business." "Keep mum and put up." Somehow they do not seem to gibe any better nationally than they will, in due time, in Minnesota.

Speaking of key notes, steam whistles and the like, it will soon be time for Van Sant's craft to loom up coming "around the bend."

And speaking of the commodore, a prominent Republican politician now located in the east, formerly near the head of the Republican machine, recently visiting in the state, declares that his party with Van Sant at the head will be buried deeper than it was with Eustis. This remark being by the writer repeated to one of the present goppite "war hosses" of the northern part of the state, the latter took a big bite of "plug," and said: "I ain't saying a word."

"What beats me," said another old-time Republican to the writer, "is the way the Lind administration keeps on piling up the good things with which to go to the people. This success of the grain and warehouse commission, in reducing the rates in the Southwest, will add thousands to the vote Lind received in 1898." "And," he added, "I don't say that I am sorry."

It is of course the season of the year when the dairy and food department is most interested in the new "bossy cow," and the fish commissioner harvesting fish eggs.

It is very sad that the state insurance department and the public examiner's department will go on closing those institutions that are unfit to deal with the public. The latest insurance scheme that Commissioner O'Shaughnessey was obliged to lay hands on had assets of 2½ cents.

Let's see. Philippine island reports are that the slaughter of Tagalos fighting for liberty, by McKinley's soldiers, has recently amounted to 1,000 per week. That would be 52,000 a year. The Filipinos number 8,000,000. Therefore at this very stiff rate it will require over 150 years to kill them all off, and meanwhile some more will come on.

G. S. O.

G. O. P. JOBSMITHS

They Exploit Official Reports of the State Labor Bureau.

Glimpses of G. O. P. "Prosperity"—Figures They Do Not Give.

Gov. Lind on the Porto Rico String Pullers—Other Political Matter.

The Republican jobsmiths of this State, whose sole occupation for years past has been to keep one another in office, maintain as a part of their equipment of a roorbach hatchery, in which falsehoods are incubated for wholesale dissemination throughout the State. The object of these falsehoods is, of course, to win recruits from the ranks of the unknowing and gullible ones to help said jobsmiths in office. The roorbach hatchery is conducted under the guise of a correspondence bureau, by individuals who find it desirable to conceal their identities.

Those departments of the State government which have been wrested from the clutches of these jobsmiths have been made the pivotal points around which to spin their yarns. Having come to shame in the matter of attacks on the bank examining department, the grain department and others, the labor bureau has been made next in order. In regard to that department the claim has been invented and set in circulation that "Labor Commissioner McHale," in their own language, "is engaged in the preparation of his annual report for publication as a campaign document." Following this statement is the streotyped song about wages being at present so high in consequence of the McKinley administration that it would be absurd to seek for improvement through a change of parties in power.

Now, the fact is that this entire claim is a web of falsehoods from beginning to end, and the wonder is that anyone can be found base enough to invent and put into circulation charges that have not even the remotest connection with facts. The statement in itself is not worthy of consideration; but, as a sample of the stuff with which the Republican leaders in this State bolster up their cause, it serves a purpose. It shows the utter lack of principle, the total disregard for truth and the moral depravity which characterize the manipulators of the so-called Republican party. It shows them to be political guerillas, with whom it is almost a disgrace to engage in a campaign.

The statements anent the labor department, chosen as illustrative in this case, are easily proven to be malicious falsehoods. In the first place there are no annual reports prepared or published by the labor bureau of this State. Such reports as are published, are compiled at the end of every second year and submitted to the Governor previous to the convening of the legislature. Commissioner McHale's term of office having commenced only a year ago last January, and his report not being due until the end of his term, in January next, by which time elections, both local and general, will all have been held, it is easy to see how absurd is the claim that said report is to figure in the elections to be held two months previous to its publication.

It should be borne in mind that the labor bureau is not now in charge of the Republican machine, which did not hesitate to prostitute the office and misrepresent State funds for the preparation and publication of gold standard treatises, to the exclusion of all other functions pertaining to the department.

As for this braggadocio about prosperity wages, which is forever brought forward to do duty as McKinley campaign material, it is found to be as void of truth as everything else emanating from the roorbach hatchery in question. An actual investigation of the pay rolls of the factories of the State gives the lie to all this buncomb about high wages. For the purpose of illustration, the writer has canvassed the pay rolls of sixteen of the larger manufacturing establishments of one of the Twin Cities. These sixteen establishments employ 2,192 people, or an average of 137 for each. About one-third of all these employes, or, in exact numbers, 706, are paid less than $5.00 per week, and considerably less than one-fourth of the whole number earn in excess of $10 per week. The total earnings of the entire number of employes in these sixteen manufacturing establishments amount to $15,808 per week, which divided by 2,192, the whole number of employes, gives an average of $7.21 per week, or $1.20 per day. Considering the fact that the labor here represented comes under the head of skilled labor, and that a certain percentage thereof is subject to more or less idleness during the year, it is very evident that, so far as wages are concerned, labor has nothing to thank the McKinley administration for, inasmuch as the laborers could not, at the present cost of living, very well keep body and soul together and remain at work if they were paid less than at present. It is, therefore, the very height of absurdity for anyone to point to the prevailing rate of wages as a recommendation for the present political administration. Indeed, it is an insult to the intelligence of the people, for it implies either that they are all fools, who cannot tell the difference between facts and bombastic phrases, or that they are serfs who should be grateful to the existing administration for the privilege of receiving enough compensation for their toil to prevent them from suffering actual starvation while laboring.

REASON OF IT.

Confirmation of Governor Lind's Interpretation of the Porto Rican Tariff.

While the whole country has been endeavoring to dig up the real reason for the Porto Rican tariff, and for McKinley's change from "plain duty free trade to 85 per cent tariff, no one has yet equally the clear interpretation made by Governor Lind, in an interview in the Minneapolis Journal of April 14, the Governor said:

"Why does Congress enact a tariff against Porto Rico and take Hawaii into the American economic as well as political system? It is well-known that Hawaii is a much more formidable contributor to the American sugar market than Porto Rico. The Porto Rico tariff cannot be defended as a revenue measure, because its own authors confess that it will not yield half enough revenue. I believe that the sugar trust dictates the Porto Rico tariff while favoring free trade with Hawaii. This is my reason: The sugar trust owns practically all the sugar lands of Hawaii; the sugar lands of Porto Rico are mostly held by small proprietors, eighty acres being a large farm. These farms are for the most part heavily mortgaged. To save them from foreclosure the military government has twice extended the date of foreclosure. The time is now up. If free trade were established, the sugar planters would have such easy access to the American market that they would generally be able to realize enough to meet the mortgages. But even the small tariff required by the law will so restrict freedom of trade that the sugar exports will be controlled largely by the trust, which has bought and will buy at its own prices. Consequently, the small planters will not be able to raise enough money to redeem their farms, which will be lost by mortgage foreclosure and will eventually pass into the hands of the sugar trust. By that time, the tariff will be a thing of the past and the sugar trust will not have to pay duties on the products of its own lands. AT PRESENT THE TRUST WANTS A TARIFF, SO THAT IT MAY GET CONTROL OF THE SUGAR LANDS; AS SOON AS IT DOES THAT IT WANTS FREE TRADE, AND THAT IS THE REASON WHY THE TARIFF WAS IMPOSED AT ALL AND FOR TWO YEARS ONLY."

Read the following confirmation of the Governor, being the Minneapolis Times correspondent's statement of action by the committee on insular affairs, Washington, April 22:

"Some facts have recently come to the knowledge of the members of the insular committee convincing them that it is absolutely necessary that safeguards should be thrown around the granting of franchises in Porto Rico without delay, to prevent practically all lands and all industries in the island being absorbed by a few great corporations, or possibly one corporation.

"IT IS UNDERSTOOD BY THE COMMITTEE THAT PLANS ARE ALREADY ON FOOT IN THIS COUNTRY FOR THE FORMATION OF A COMPANY TO BUY UP THE MORTGAGES ON PUERTO RICAN PROPERTY, WITH THE OBJECT OF GETTING CONTROL OF AS MUCH AS POSSIBLE OF THE SUGAR, TOBACCO AND COFFEE LANDS IN THE ISLAND. Promoters of this enterprise believe that in view of the depression in business that has prevailed since the American occupation, and especially since the hurricane of last year, most of the mortgaged lands will have to be sold."

Since this House committee action the Senate bill on the same matter has been amended so as to make the securing of all such franchises subject to the President himself, and thus the gobbling process will be just where it is wanted, in the hands of the President, whom the corporations interested will see to it is elected, if in their power.

We are more than pleased that our friend, John Swift, is in the editorial harness permanently, he having purchased controlling interest in that great labor paper of Minneapolis, the Union. John will make things hum, and his large connection with organized labor should make the Union in greater demand than ever.

Events in South Dakota confirm our idea that Brother Wheelock, with his Goppite bureau, would not be able to get up much anti-Pettigrew "steam." There has not been enough as yet, apparently, to make the thing give a "toot."

Everybody is praising the St. Paul Globe for its red-hot campaign for the Democratic city ticket, regarding it an earnest of what it will do for the State and National organization in November.

The Cass Lake Times very kindly invites the Anoka Union to get off the fence. Others say get on the earth.

LOSING PATIENCE

BRITISH GRUMBLE OVER FAILURE OF RECENT OPERATIONS.

No Further Hope of Capturing the Retreating Boers—Very Little Is Gained During the Past Ten Days From the Enormous Display of Force—Gen. French Finds the Boers Holding Hills East of Thaba N'Chu—Exhausting Operations Will Probably Entail Further Delay.

Thaba N'Chu, May 1. — Gen. French sent the Third and Fourth cavalry brigades on separate reconnaissances around the hills east of town. The enemy, it was found, held the hills strongly, though evidently only a rear guard, as no transport was visible. The Boers are now holding a very steep row of hills east.

-o-

London, May 1. — The only dispatch from Lord Roberts since yesterday was the usual list of deaths and sickness. The flood of newspaper dispatches today describing the present operations throws no light whatever upon the present position of affairs, or of the great question as to when the main advance is to begin. The Standard's announcement that Gen. French's cavalry are returning to Bloemfontein is clear proof that there is no further hope of capturing the retreating Boers and the London papers are beginning to display impatience at the practical failure of the elaborate operations of last week.

The Standard says: "It is disheartening to find that these elaborate maneuvers have brought so small a result."

The Chronicle remarks: "We are reluctant to criticise Lord Roberts, but it is impossible to shut our eyes to the fact that during the last ten days we have gained very little from our enormous display of force."

Without doubt these operations have been of a very exhausting nature and will entail further delay. The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Times, writing March 3, after the Paardeburg affair, describes Lord Roberts' army as a wreck, because it was without horses and without transport. There is very little from other quarters.

The sudden decision of the Boer peace delegates to go to America is attributed to the fact that the government of the Netherlands, after sounding all the European capitals, told them they had nothing to hope for from Europe.

Col. Dalgaty's force at Wepener numbered 1,700. His losses during the siege were 30 killed and 140 wounded. It is reported that there was an engagement yesterday at Karee Siding, but no details have been received.

Boers Will Make a Stand.

London, May 1. — The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Chronicle, telegraphing Saturday, says: A Cavalry reconnaissance three miles northeast encountered 400 Boers. The British drove them out of a kopje north of Karee. Our outposts are still harrassed by moving commandoes. In an outpost affair on Thursday several Boers were killed. The enemy will certainly make a stand at Kroonstad, where they have constructed miles of trenches.

Suited to Boer Tactics.

London, May 1. — The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Standard says: The Boers have taken every advantage of the mountainous nature of the country which marks their retreat to Ladybrand. Their manner of retiring is beautiful, and it is doubtful if they can be reduced in a district so suited to their tactics. I have visited the British outpost, the one nearest Brandfort. The Boers show the deepest anxiety to learn the probable action of our advance and they declare they will not fire a shot from Brandfort, as they wish to save the town from bombardment. The enemy are intrenched on the hills southeast of Brandfort, but they are not likely to make any serious stand until we reach Kroonstad.

Commandant Olivier Wounded.

Aliwalnorth, May 1. — It is reported here that Commandant Olivier was wounded at Wepener last Monday. Six New Zealanders, while scouting, fought six Boers, killing three and wounding three. One New Zealander was wounded. The inhabitants of Rouxville do not know to which government they belong as there is no civil administration there.

Boer Commissioners Coming.

The Hague, May 1. — The members of the Boer peace commission will sail from Rotterdam for the United States next Thursday evening by the Holland-American line steamer Maasdam. Dr. Leyds and Dr. Mutter will not accompany the delegates.

Forestalled by Botha.

London, May 1. — The Bloemfontein correspondent of the Standard, under Friday's date, describing the manner of Gen. Botha's retreat which enabled the Boers to evade being surrounded, says: Gen. Botha arrived at Dewetsdorp Thursday and immediately dispatched a commando to oppose Gen. French's column. We appear to have been forestalled by Botha by just twenty-four hours. According to the latest reports from Thaba N'Chu the enemy are still withdrawing their wagons and guns.

British Will Hold Thaba N'Chu.

Bloemfontein, May 1. — It is understood that the British will continue to hold Thaba N'Chu owing to its strategic importance, especially with a view of checking future raids. The commandoes that had recently been operating in the direction of Thaba N'Chu are melting away, the Boers quietly returning to their farms and many of them taking the oath of allegiance. Experience has shown, however, in many cases that this is only a pretence to enable the Boers to create disturbances on the rear of the British, and vigorous methods will probably be necessary to force real disarmament.

Boers Disappointed.

London, May 1. — The Standard's special correspondent at Bloemfontein says, telegraphing Saturday evening: Reports have just been received that the Boers are retiring to the north of Ladybrand. Their horses are exhausted and they themselves disappointed over their failure to capture Col. Dalgaty's position. The British cavalry, who were pursuing the fugitive commandoes, are returning to Bloemfontein.

To Oppose Relief Column.

London, May 1. — The Durban correspondent of the Standard, Saturday, says: It is reported on good authority that the Klondsberg commandoes have left Biggarsberg to assist in opposing the relief column.

KILLED AT THE FAIR.

Serious Accident at the Paris Exposition.

Paris, May 1. — A accident within the exposition grounds caused the death of nine persons and injured about forty others. A temporary bridge, unable to withstand the Sunday crowd, broke. The accident threw a pall over the happiness of an immense throng who had profited by the magnificent weather to visit the exposition. Yesterday's was probably the record attendance. Not only the interior of the grounds, but the precincts were crowded. A footbridge on which the finishing touches were put yesterday crosses the Avenue de Sufren, connecting the side show, the Celestial Globe, with the exposition. It was constructed of wood with a stucco facade and with a plaster made tower at each end. Strangely enough the bridge had been condemned only that morning as unsafe by the exposition authorities. The public was therefore not allowed to go upon the structure, and in this way a disaster even more terrible than that which occurred was averted. The gay crowd was passing along the avenue and some hundred or more persons were walking beneath the bridge when suddenly an ominous crash was heard. Before those underneath could turn aside the structure fell with a fearful crash, burying nearly fifty. A shout of horror rose from the spectators, mingled with the cries of the victims. For a moment nothing could be distinguished but a cloud of dust and plaster. A scene of the greatest excitement and

Confusion Followed:

But this was only for a few seconds. Almost immediately the crowd attacked the debris in efforts to release those lying beneath. The workmen within the grounds who had witnessed the accident, the police and the republican guards, together with quite a number of soldiers joined in the rescue work. The promenaders forgot their sunday attire and covered themselves with dirt and dust and grime in tearing away the rubbish with their hands. Wooden beams and poles were brought from the half-finished buildings nearby and were used as levers to raise the debris. The injured were found first, the dead being found later under the corner structure. Messengers were dispatched to bring firemen and sappers with their equipments and the first body was found after a quarter of an hour's frantic labor. It was that of a little girl about seven years of age, whose head was horribly crushed. Victim after victim was brought to light, until a row of nine mutilated corpses had been placed upon the sidewalk and nearly forty other persons, some badly injured, had been carried in ambulances or driven to the hospitals.

The disaster was the leading topic of conversation in the cafes and at the other Paris resorts last evening, and strong criticisms were leveled against the exposition authorities for allowing an unsafe structure to jeopardize the lives of citizens, fears being expressed that the incomplete state of the buildings in the exposition grounds themselves might lead to an accident.

AGAINST THE AMERICANS.

Reports of a Revolutionary Movement in Cuba Are Confirmed.

Madrid, May 1. — Senor Sagrario, Spanish consul at Havana, confirms the report of the existence in certain parts of the island of Cuba of an agitation against the Americans.

To Fight Tuberculosis.

Naples, May 1. — The international tuberculosis conference has concluded its sittings with the adoption of a resolution similar to that adopted at the Paris congress in 1898 proposing the formation of an international committee in the name of the three nations who took the initiative in summoning the congress with the object of forming an international league against tuberculosis.

Indian Uprising Feared.

Seattle, Wash., May 1. — Residents of the Haines mission, eighteen miles below Skagway, on Lynn canal, have made an appeal to the army officers at Skagway for troops to protect them against the feared Indian uprising. The trouble arose over the imprisonment of Indians arrested for murder last fall.

New York Imports and Exports.

New York, May 1. — The imports of specie last week were $90,805 gold and $68,501 silver. Exports of gold and silver from this port to all countries aggregated $630,200 silver bars and coin and $1,100,751 gold. The imports of dry goods and merchandise were valued at $11,227,775.

City With No Newspapers.

Amsterdam, May 1. — The city is without newspapers, the proprietors of printing establishments and the managers of newspapers having locked out all the printers owing to a strike.

Destroyed by Cyclone.

Madrid, May 1. — A cyclone has caused great damage in the province of Huelva. Sixty houses were destroyed and twelve persons killed. The railway line has been abandoned.

Indian Murderer Lynched.

Marshall, Mo., May 1. — Mindee Chogwo, an Indian who escaped from jail here after assaulting Sheriff Joseph Wilson and his little son, and shooting the sheriff's wife in the arm, was lynched by a mob last night.

Stole County Funds.

San Francisco, May 1. — Charles Ingersoll of Ithaca, N. Y., was arrested here on the charge of embezzling $75,000 of public funds belonging to Tompkins county, N. Y., of which he was treasurer.

GREATEST OF YEARS.

Shipping Campaign for 1900 Is Begun at Lake Ports.

Vessels from the lower lakes ar loading ore at all Lake Superior ports, and the greatest year in the history of mining is begun. There are now afloat, or soon will be, 141 ships owned by the various ore-mining and corporations alone, and used by them for their own business. These, and a great additional number chartered, will be engaged in carrying ore from the five upper lake ports during the year. There is no change in the rates, which remain as they were set last October by the Rockefeller interests.

As a general thing, the mines enter the shipping sason with stocks smaller than was hoped for, and much less than they have frequently had in years when total shipments were far less than now expected. Activity underground during the summer will be necessarily greater than before, and it will be in the districts that can open new mines quickly or where old ones ar eelastic, that the business of the year will be most notable. The Marquette range, for instance, will show a comparatively small increase from old mines, with the exception of the Regent at Negaunee, which is being operated steadily for the first time in years. Numerous rejuvenated properties will do their share in making totals from there better than in 1899. Neither Lake Superior, Lake Angeline nor Cleveland Cliffs, except as the latter may ship from its many new mines, will materially improve over that year. This is true, also, of the Gogebic, except that the Atlantic and other small mines will be shippers where they were idle or nearly so in former years. On the Vermillion the mines that are not practically new ones will do no more, perhaps not so much, as last year.

An excellent find of graphite has been made in an ore exploration in Town 44-34, Menominee range, by J. Denogo. It is under option for iron to the Oliver company, who have a number of other locations thereabout. A location near Iron river, belonging to W. H. James, has been optioned by the Minnesota Iron company, and will be explored at once. Ore was found thee some years ago, it is claimed. In general, there is little change from former conditions on this range.

It has been reported at New York the past week that the American Steel and Wire company has control of mining properties in the lake country that produce a sixth of the output. This is, of course, incorrect by a very considerable proportion, as the mines actually in the hands of the American company are not capable of mining more than 2,250,000 tons of marketable ore this year.

LITERATURE AND ATHLETICS.

These Will Be Promoted by Association at Park Rapids.

The Park Rapids Athletic association, located at the town whose name it bears, has filed papers of incorporation. The association will purchase real estate and construct buildings, and, according to its charter, proposes to advance dramatic, literary, athletic and various social interests. The capital stock is given at $3,000 and no members are to be admitted unless they assume stock to the value of at least $50.

St. Hilaire Spectator.

ST. HILAIRE, - MINNESOTA.

News that an American heiress to $50,000,000 is to marry a Chicago man may be expected to have a bearish tendency in the ranks of European nobility.

The senators of the University of Edinburg have decided to confer the decree of doctor of laws on Miss Eleanor A. Ormerod, who has won world-wide fame as an economic entomologist and has spent twenty-three years in the study of insect pests. Miss Ormerod will be the first woman to receive such an honor from the University of Edinburg.

Sir Alfred Milner, speaking of the outcome of the present war, says that dissimilar and antagonistic political systems must no longer be tolerated "in the country which nature and history have declared to be one." In the main the Boers also agree with this statement. The point which is now being argued by "Oom" Paul and Lord Roberts with considerable earnestness is as to which that one shall be.

Philadelphia has raised $82,000 of the $100,000 it promised for the national republican convention. Mayor Ashbridge is not without hopes the remainder may be secured, but has given Mr. Hanna to understand that he is fortunate to get that much. Philadelphia has been a third of a century building its new city hall and its business men properly object to being hurried for any kind of an enterprise.

Following the "lean years" of the panic hundreds of those who had sought homes in America returned to their native land, some comparatively wealthy, and others not. This was a most unusual condition and probably will not soon occur again. From present prospects there will be a great rush from Europe to America this season. One agent of a steamship and immigration company estimates the number of those probably new-home seekers at 750,000, distributed in nationality as follows: Irish, 300,000; Swedes, Danes and Norwegians, 200,000; Germans, 100,000; Italians, 60,000; French, 60,000; Poles, 10,000; English, 7,000; Scotch, 4,000; Greeks, 2,000; Turks, 1,000; Swiss, 1,500. The Irish still lead.

It has been proposed in New York to prohibit by law the publication of scandalous matter found on the persons or in the possession of suicides or of those who have attempted suicide. This would be a good thing to do. Persons who take their own lives are often insane. If not actually deranged, their minds are in so morbid a condition as to unfit them for calm and accurate statement. It often happens that, with the intention of explaining their act, they leave a letter or scrap of paper which reflects cruelly upon the character of one or more living persons. The sensational newspapers print the letter under glaring headlines, and the injured person has no redress. A mere denial counts for little, and there is no defense against the calumnies of the dead.

After all, the failure of the American Students' League of Chicago was quite worth while. The organization proposed to send teachers and students to the Paris fair at an expense of $200 apiece. It collected considerable money and spent a good deal on preliminaries. Then, through no direct fault of the promoters, conditions changed so that the contract could not be carried out. This has happened to other projects—and in about nine cases out of ten the sponsors of the project have charged the expenses against the collections. But Supt. Andrews and Profs. Rogers, French and Howland who lent their names to the Students League project, propose to pay the expenses themselves and return all of the collections to the subscribers. The case is rare enough to deserve honorable mention.

"Polite highwaymen" who have been robbing right and left in Chicago for the last few days have apparently taken the niche in local criminology formerly occupied by "the long and short men." All of the Chesterfieldian couple's victims speak highly of their polished courtesy and their careful avoidance of the knock-down and drag-out methods adopted by too many rude, coarse and uncultured sandbaggers—declaring, in fact, that it is almost a pleasure to be robbed by such courtly highwaymen. Theosophists and students of the Hindoo cults will probably assert that these Chicago robbers are the veritable reincanation of Dick Turpin and Jack Sheppard, but the average citizen, ignoring the romance and the transmigration theories will probably rejoice exceedingly when the walls of Joliet finally yawn for the daring footpads and their reign of terror is abruptly ended.

The war department has lately published a list of the officers and men of the United States army who have received medals or been especially commended for gallantry during the last two and a half years. Two of the fifty officers whose names are mentioned and thirty-three of the enlisted men are colored. In view of the relatively small number of negro troops in the army, this is a record of which our dark-skinned brother may well be proud. Evidently the color line is not drawn at the firing line.

The heroic perversity which induces so many boys to defy the commands of parents, the rules of schools, and the protests of their own stomachs for the sake of learning to smoke, remains still the despair of fathers and the marvel of mothers. There would be lively remonstrances and pathetic pleas, indeed, if the lad who cheerfully proceeds to turn himself ghastly, green and limp with his first cigar were obliged to take a dose of medicine that would make him half as uncomfortable.

RICH ANARCHISTS ARE MORE DANGEROUS THAN COMMON CRIMINALS.

Millionaires and Monopolists Editors and Preachers—Power Behind the Throne—The People Bribed and Blinded by a Show of Charity.

It is undeniably true that crime and criminals are on the increase in the United States. We do not simply mean that there are more criminals now than there were fifty years ago; we mean that there are more—and a great many more—in proportion to the population. This is not the wail of a speculative pessimism but the cold fact presented by the U. S. census reports. According to this practical and conservative authority one person out of every 3,442 in the United States in 1850 was a prisoner. By 1860 the ratio has increased to one out of every 1,647. In 1870 the ratio was one to every 1,171; in 1880, one to every 855; in 1890, one to every 757. Judging from our general knowledge of the times, the census of 1900 will show a still further increase of criminals relative to population. It is practically certain, at any rate, that it will show no decrease from 1890. Taking the reports covering the forty years from 1850 to 1890, inclusive, we find that there were four and a half times as large a percentage of criminals in the latter year as in the former! Is there not something in these statistics to shock us into thinking?

Criminals, however, are by no means our only dangerous classes. They are not even the most dangerous. Criminals fall below law, and become its violators and foes. There are those who, in a certain sense, manage to get above law, and to use it for their selfish and anti-social purposes. They are the makers, molders, manufacturers and manipulators of law and lawmarkers and law-executors, the power behind the throne of law. These constitute the most dangerous class. In this class belong our millionaires and multi-millionaires, the upbuilders of monopolies, the promoters of trusts, the procurers of Cour d'Alene outrages. These are far more dangerous than our criminals, for society and state are on guard against criminals, but these men guard and guide society for their own ends.

All possessors of vast and uncontrolled power are dangerous. Buckle, in his "History of Civilization in England," rightly says: "There is no instance on record of any class possessing power without abusing it." This was true when written, fifty years ago. It is no less true today. In order to see that millionaires and multi-millionaires belong to our dangerous classes, it is by no means necessary to imagine that they are demons, or even to suppose that they are moved by bad motives. They are moved by the same passions and desires as those which move other men—good and bad, noble and ignoble. But they are dangerous because they are the possessors of vast and unearned power, the very possession of which blinds and intoxicates. In fact, while these men are good and generous, many of them, they are far more dangerous to society than though they were all bad. Were all millionaires misers, society would soon cause millionairism to cease. The fact that such men as Carnegie and Rockefeller allow a large percentage of their ill-gotten gains to percolate through their fingers for the support of churches, colleges and other institutions, acts as a bribe upon the public conscience and as blinders upon the people's eyes.

Among the dangerous classes must be enumerated our editors and preachers. We are not joking. These are dangerous because they occupy positions of power and responsibility, and yet they are so often like men sleeping upon a volcano or like blind guides who lead their trusting followers over precipices. They cry, "Peace, peace!" when there is no peace. They are so liable to take the side of the classes against the masses, and do degrade both culture and religion into mere pillars to uphold conventionalism and wealth. The man who steals food or clothing is as innocent as a newborn babe compared with the editor who sells his brains in advocacy of opinions he does not hold, or the preacher who thinks one thing in his study and preaches another in his pulpit. Yet, alas! we fear that editors and preachers of this sort are neither few nor far between. We make no railing nor wholesale accusations, but we believe that there is vast peril to humanity in the insincerity and cowardice of those who should be its chief educators and inspirers.

The world's greatest danger is not from its bad people, but from its good people—its cowardly, selfish, superficial, unearnest or stupid good. If we could only convert the good into the Christlike, we could soon convert the bad into the good! The power of the bad consists chiefly in the sleep of the good. Let us wake up!—People's Paper.

A PERVERTED GOSPEL.

The gospel of love would be much more effectual if preached and applied the right way. Instead of preaching to us to love our enemies, it would be more to the point to preach to our enemies to love us. Instead of preaching to the poor to be contented with their lot, it would be more reasonable to preach something about the sin of greed to those who have grabbed all the land so that there are no lots left for the poor. Instead of preaching to the poor about the sin of covetousness, all such preaching should be directed toward the rich, who have not stopped with mere coveting but have taken possession. It is not covetousness to desire what belongs to a person by right. It is merely assertion of one's rights. Instead of preaching industry and economy to the poor, who always suffer from overwork and starvation, these doctrines should be preached to the idle and luxurious parasites who live off the earnings of the poor. Instead of preaching to the poor the duty of submission and resignation, the pulpit-pounders, if honest, would preach to the rich the duty of getting off the backs of the poor and ceasing to rob and plunder them.

Of all people on earth the ecclesiastics are the most dishonest or stupid. Suppose a man had a garden, one-half of which was always too wet and the other half too dry. And suppose that when he watered it he always put the water on the wet part and none on the dry! Suppose a man had two sons, and one was always illtreating, robbing, abusing and outraging the other. And suppose that instead of putting a stop to this he should teach the injured one that this sort of conduct was all right, that it was his duty to submit to it and love the other. How could we decide whether this man was a knave or a fool? And yet this is just as the clergy do. The poor are defrauded of their natural rights, plundered, degraded, outraged and enslaved. And instead of preaching against the oppressors, and endeavoring to establish justice, the church upholds and justifies the oppression and preaches virtue and submission to the victims of outrages that necessarily rob them of any virtue or manhood that they might otherwise possess. It is this utter prostitution and perversion of the functions of religion that causes so many to desire the destruction or abolition of religion altogether, not knowing that the true function of religion is the application of truth to right uses. Religion as we have it now is merely a hired apology for all existing governmental crimes and abuses. —J. L. Jones in Discontent.

THE CAUSE OF FREEDOM.

If this be treason—to speak out
To save the land I love from shame,
To doubly hate a wrong that seeks
Alliance with her honored name,
To point the timely cure, ere yet
The insidious poison does its work—
God make me worthy of the word!
Traitor I stand with Edmund Burke!

If this be folly—to unsheath
A stainless sword in Freedom's fight,
That men of alien birth and blood
May grasp their own God-given right;
To count that good for others gained,
Rich payment of the bloody debt,
Nor seek to garner selfish fruits—
Count me a fool with Lafayette!

If this be cowardice—to dread
The lust of conquest, greed of power,
The road the drunken empires old
Reeled downward to their fatal hour;
To fear to quit, for foreign strife
The noble work so well begun,
The paths where peace and honor join—
A coward I, with Washington!

O, Nation! nurtured in the lap
Of Liberty, her sacred cause
Make still thine own—the sovereign sway
Of free born man, 'neath equal laws.
Dash not the downtrod millions' hope;
Cheat not the waiting centuries' trust—
One people holding faith in man,
One State too great to be unjust.

For freedom knows no here nor there—
Her life is one in every part;
And tryant stab, wherever dealt,
Must reach soon or late her heart.

THE SHIPPING SUBSIDY BILL.

The most iniquitous and barefaced raid upon the United States treasury appears in the Hanna-Payne shipping subsidy bill now being pressed for passage in congress. The bill pretends to be one "to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States," and provides for the payment of "compensation" for twenty years to vessel owners, whether of American or foreign built vessels, the total annual "compensation" not to exceed $9,000,000.

There is a tremendous opposition to this bill, which is declared to be indefensible, an opposition, which, says the Boston Herald, "grows out of the firm belief that, instead of proving of assistance in the upbuilding of a great merchant marine for the country, it will be a decided hindrance. "Already," continues the Herald, "the great shipbuilding concerns of the Atlantic seaboard have arranged the preliminaries for a trust, into which their interests are to be merged as soon as this subsidy bill becomes a law."

The New York Evening Post adds its testimony to the mass of evidence going to show the utter shamelessness of the promoters of this scheme. "It is an open secret at Washington that a combination has been formed between the Hanna-Payne subsidy and the Nicaragua canal. Senator Hanna had agreed to await the report of the Isthmian commission, and the president had accordingly recommended delay on the canal bill for that purpose, but there has been a sudden change in both quarters. Mr. Hanna has put his name to the report for immediate action on the canal bill, and he thinks he has secured a sufficient number of votes for the shipping subsidy bill."

"The magnitude of the fraud sought to be perpetrated upon the taxpayers of the United States," says the Post (and the Chicago Tribune looks at the subject from the same point of view), "can best be understood by making a comparison of the sums actually appropriated by Great Britain and those proposed by the Hanna-Payne bill." During the last year the British government paid $230,000 subvention for eleven vessels as reserve merchant cruisers, and $500,000 for carrying the mails from the United Kingdom to New York, a total outlay of $730,000. But, under the Hanna-Payne subsidy bill this International Navigation company (British) will get over $3,000,000.

"Various foreign residents, doing business in New York," adds the Post, "have filed notices within the prescribed time which will enable them to comply with the stipulations of the bill in securing subsidy payments on a still greater amount of tonnage now in course of construction to be put into the American trade later. Thus the estimated $9,000,000 for subsidy appropriation is likely to be fully used, the lion's share going to the International Navigation company and other owners of vessels which are foreign built."

Well may the Chicago Tribune ask: "Why is it essential that vessel owners should be given a bounty of nine millions a year to develop foreign trade?" To which may be added the query: "How are American shipping interests to be aided by given foreign vessel owners, on foreign bottoms, nine millions of American money per annum?"

COUER D'ALENE CONDENSED.

There was a disturbance, property was destroyed, two lives were lost.

Standard Oil interests wired the administration and got hundreds of colored troops shipped to Idaho the very day of the trouble.

Hundreds of innocent citizens who had no more to do with the trouble than you have, were driven into a "bull pen" by soldiers armed with bayonets and rifles.

There were no warrants for arrest, no indictments and no trials.

Citizens were imprisoned for months under most brutal and humiliating conditions.

Their business was destroyed.

Their wives and babies were left to starve.

To force confession of crimes of which they had no knowledge, the Spanish inquisition was revived.

Men went insane and died under this torture. Others died from bad treatment and exposure.

When these innocent citizens were released, the right to even seek for labor was denied them.

Only by signing a permit could they look for work or obtain it.

Refusal to sign this "permit" meant discharge and imprisonment if the foolish citizen stayed in the country.

"Get off our earth," commanded the trust, and McKinley's U. S. soldiers enforced the command.

In this "permit" the citizen is obliged to swear that all labor unions are criminal, and renounce his right as a citizen to join one.

Under this imposition of martial law, the persons guilty of destruction of property and acts of violence were permitted to escape.

Only innocent citizens were prosecuted.

How do you like it, American citizen, to re-elect McKinley, and in two years from now you may be the victims of militarism applied for the trusts.

The Standard Oil interests, in this case, did not desire to punish wrongdoers. They desired to take away the rights of citizens and cow them into submission.

Mr. Sherman's Pacific Cable Gift.

Eight hundred dollars a day for twenty years. This is the sum which Representative Sherman, acting for the Republican party in congress, wants this country to pay over to a private corporation for the transmission of government messages to the Philippines. Originally it was $1,000 per day, before Mr. Sherman became modest.

Divested of all Mr. Sherman's gloss, this is a plain theft—a proposition for this government to pay for a Pacific cable and present it to a private corporation.

According to Mr. Sherman such a cable, running by way of Guam, to the Philippines, will cost $15,000,000. Any cable expert in this city will tell you that the contract can be let for $8,000,000.

Mr. Sherman says further that the maintenance will amount to $1,500,000 yearly. As a matter of fact, the maintenance of a cable to Manila will cost no more per mile than a telegraph wire from New York to San Francisco.

It is a strange fact that, in view of the enormous cost of construction and maintenance mentioned by Mr. Sherman, and the modest $800 a day asked from the government, the private cable company is eager to undertake the work.

In this cable scheme Mr. Sherman represents the majority of the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce, and if he can push this bill through he will do so. It should be opposed by every man in congress who owns his own vote.

If the government does not propose to own the cable it should not pay for it. Let it be built by private capital and patronized by the government as other cable lines are patronized.

If the government's money builds the cable by subsidy, the government should own and maintain it. If such an enterprise is profitable for a private corporation, it will be profitable for the government.—Sunday Journal.

McKinley's Cabinet.

Alger—Beef trust. The former secretary of war was forced to resign after the embalmed-beef scandals and the truckling to the meat trust became public.

Gage—Money trust. The secretary of the treasury, by his marked favoritism to the Rockefeller banks in New York, gave them the opportunity of creating a panic.

Hay—Anglomania. The secretary of state's un-American policy and abandonment of the Monroe doctrine were rebuked by the senate committee which amended the canal treaty.

Long—Ship trust. The secretary of the navy now opposes the people's will by declaring against building our warships in the government navy yards.

Root—State trust. The secretary of war violated his obligations as director of a financial institution by lending $2,000,000 to a "dummy," for the use of other directors.

What is it that is supposed to follow everybody, which everybody is supposed to follow, which don't follow and isn't followed? Why, the flag, of course.

Shall the constitution follow the flag, or the flag follow the constitution, or shall they stand side by side and neither follow the other? Does the flag follow trade or trade follow the flag, or are they both following something else?

IN COEUR D'ALENE.

A BLOODY PICTURE OF REPUBLICAN MILITARISM.

Over Eleven Hundred Persons Held Without Process of Law and at the Points of Bayonets Compelled to Submit to Vile Abuse of Soldiers.

Since February 19 of this year the committee on military affairs of the lower house of congress has conducted an investigation of the troubles in the Coeur d'Alene mining district of northern Idaho, which began May 3, 1899, and continue to the present time. From the testimony brought out in this investigation and from the statements of reliable eye witnesses who have not yet testified, the following information has been obtained: The Coeur d'Alene mining district of Idaho is one of the greatest lead and silver producing districts in the world. It employs upwards of 3,000 miners. All the great mining industries of the district have paid a uniform rate of wages to their employes except the Bunker Hill & Sullivan Company, employing about 400 miners at Wardner. Long before the beginning of the troubles this company paid from 50 cents to one dollar per day less than was paid in any other part of the district. It persistently maintained a non-union force, refused to recognize organized labor, and in this particular openly violated the statutes of Idaho, which make it a penal offense for employers to discriminate against organized labor in the employment or discharge of employes.

Early in April, 1899, the great increase in the price of lead and silver induced the employes of this company to demand an increase of wages equivalent to the current rate paid in the district. Other mine operators, as well as miners, joined in the plea to unify the conditions, realizing that such unification would have a good effect upon the industries and would insure the entire district against turbulent conditions characteristic of labor troubles; but the Bunker Hill Company stubbornly refused to grant the requested increase or even confer with the committee's representatives. Simultaneously with the demand for an increase of wages in the Bunker Hill mine, or very soon thereafter, a large number of the employes of the mine joined the miners' union, and when the company flatly refused to grant any concession its employes struck. The company for years prior to this time had made it a practice to discharge any person in its employ as soon as it discovered that he belonged to a union or other labor organizations, and on or about April 26 the company was required by the exigencies of conditions to grant an increase in wages nearly equal to the union rates; but much to the surprise of every one it refused to reemploy any of its old faithful employes who had joined the miners' union. This action on the part of the company exasperated the working people in the entire district, and matters from that time grew from bad to worse, the company flatly refusing to arbitrate the differences.

On April 29 an armed mob was formed at the adjacent mines at Mullen, Gem and Burke, which, accompanied by a large number of curiosity seekers, took possession of a train of cars, procured a large quantity of dynamite and made an attack on the Bunker Hill concentrator. The mill was blown to atoms, and in the riot two men were killed. How or by whom this riot was organized has remained a matter of speculation. It has been charged to the miners' union, but no evidence has ever been offered to sustain this accusation. The miners themselves were indignant over this outrage, and citizens generally offered their services to aid in apprehending and punishing the rioters.

Frank Steunenberg, governor of Idaho, declared the entire county (Shoshone) to be in a state of insurrection and rebellion, declared the district under martial law, suspended the habeas corpus act, called on the president for United States troops, and proceeded to redress the grievances of the mine operators.

A drag net was thrown over the county and the people were arrested by communities, and to the present time nearly 1,100 persons have suffered imprisonment, ranging in time from ten days to ten months. All were arrested without warrant, criminal charge, indictment or examination. The people arrested were imprisoned first in a large barn with a mud floor, and the stories told of their sufferings are almost beyond belief. Miners coming from the mines, their clothing saturated with water, were not allowed to dry themselves, but were crowded into the barn, or bull pen, compelled to sleep on the dirt floor without bedding and with insufficient food. Later a regular prison was built, which became the historical bull pen. It was a large building built around an open court, constructed roughly of green lumber and without windows. The roof leaked and the cold winds of night blew through the cracks between the boards.

The soldiers furnished by the president were negroes, and, if the sworn evidence of good citizens can be believed, their conduct was not only offensive but brutal towards their prisoners. The language they used in addressing them was too profane and filthy to be repeated, and their threats to shoot and stab were constant and emphatically uttered.

An order was issued forbidding men from working in the district without procuring a permit from the governor. Men were arrested for working on their own claims, and even professional men were forbidden to practice their professions without the governor's permission. The sheriff of the county and a majority of the members of the county board were imprisoned, and many of the best citizens of the county, in no way associated with the outrages, were arrested by the negro soldiers without excuse or warrant and driven at the point of the bayonet into the bull pen, there to remain until the military officers saw fit to release them.

One of the prisoners attempted to escape by making a tunnel, and, being discovered, he and all the other prisoners in the pen were kept on bread and water for nine days; he for attempting to escape, and the others for not notifying the guards that such an attempt would be made. Even persons arrested after the attempt was discovered received the same punishment.

No one was tried, but when the bull pen was full those whom the military thought had been sufficiently punished were released in order to make room for new prisoners, and sometimes a man was arrested a second time, his first imprisonment not being sufficient to satisfy the wishes of those in authority. Gradually the number of prisoners decreased until all were released, yet no man can today tell on what charge he was arrested or for what he was punished except to gratify a whim of the governor, the revenge of the Bunker Hill Company or the malice of the negro soldiers.

Gov. Steunenberg has never been able to explain satisfactorily why he called for United States troops or why he ordered these wholesale arrests or why he forbade men from working without a permit. The civil power was at all times able to control the situation; the courts were competent to punish all violations of law and competent to enforce their decrees. The case is one of the most remarkable in the history of the country, and the report of the committee investigating it will tell a story that people will find difficult to believe.

ROBBERY OF THE PEOPLE.

Congressman Maddox of Georgia in his speech in the house on the currency furnished some startling financial information. He said, among other matters:

"The interest-bearing debt of the United States in 1892 had been reduced $583,029,330. The non-interest bearing debt at that time was $1,000,648,839. During the past eight years the interest-bearing debt has been increased to $1,045,048,750. The non-interest bearing debt has been decreased to $389,914,640. We are less in debt than we were eight years ago by $150,000,000, and yet our annual interest charge has been increased from $23,000,000 to $40,000,000. Our non-interest bearing debt has been decreased $610,734,299. Our interest-bearing debt has been increased $461,019,420.

"These figures, taken from the treasury reports, show conclusively that the revenues of the United States have at all times been more than sufficient to meet the expenditures of the United States, and yet the interest-bearing debt of the nation has been constantly increased. The treasury figures show that the policy of the government is, and for some time has been, to collect as much as possible from the people for the exclusive benefit of the bondholders."

CORPORATE GREED.

Kansas City Times: It is undeniable that the most serious danger that threatens the perpetuity of untrammeled popular sovereignty in this republic is the pernicious and constantly growing activity of powerful corporations in politics. They go into elections, federal, state, county and municipal, with their money and their agents, having some selfish end to attain, and often succeed in defeating the purpose for which manhood suffrage was instituted.

The enormous number of employes which many of them have in their service tempts them to add coercion to their other methods for securing votes for the candidate favored by them. Failing to secure a sufficient number of city councilmen, legislators or congressmen, pledged to pass laws favoring their interests, they pursue the end in view through an organized lobby, which too frequently succeeds in tempting public servants, originally honest, to betray the trust of their constituents.

If such corporations happen to be defeated in both these forums, they proceed to invade the temple of justice with their money-changing devices and employ their corrupting machinations upon the courts and the officials intrusted with the execution of the laws.

WHERE THE FLAG GOES?

Prof. Joseph H. Crooker of Ann Arbor, Mich., contends in the Springfield Republican that where the flag goes, there must also go the constitution.

"Wherever the flag goes, there the constitution must go. Wherever the flag moves, there the whole of the flag must be present. Wherever the constitution is extended, there the entire constitution must rule. If any one does not wish to accept these consequences, then let the flag be brought back to the spot where it can represent true Americanism, and Americanism in its entirety.

"If it does not symbolize American institutions in their fullness wherever it floats, then our starry banner becomes false to America and oppressive to those who may fear its authority, but do not share its freedom. Disgrace and harm will not come from taking the flag down, but rather in keeping it where it loses all that our statesmen, prophets and soldiers have put into it. The only way to keep "Old Glory" from becoming a falsehood is to give all under it the liberty that it represents. Nowhere must it mean simply a power to be dreaded, but everywhere it must symbolize rights and privileges shared by all."

Prosperity in Full Blast.

During this full year of "prosperity" under McKinley the men and women employed in these Massachusetts concerns received in wages an average of $8.10 every week, working from nine to twelve hours a day. That was the measure of their prosperity. This magnificent wage earning was about seventeen cents a week more than it was in the year before. That is, the wage earners of Massachusetts would have been something more than two per cent better off than they were the year before, had not the trusts advanced the cost of living fifteen per cent, leaving the wage earners about thirteen per cent worse off than formerly. But the trust magnates were not worse off than formerly, no indeed. They waxed fat and sleek, and are in easy condition this year to contribute liberally to the republican slush fund when Mark Hanna comes around with his hat out. If McKinley is re-elected the trusts will be in position to cut down wages and increase their profits. Will they do it?—Helena (Mont.) Independent.

QUERIES BY BRYAN.

The literary sycophants who strew rhetorical flowers in the pathway of the successful, without inquiring into the methods employed for securing success, complacently throw the responsibility for failure in life upon God, or Nature, or upon the man himself. Is it the fault of God or of Nature that children are driven into factories at so early an age that their bodies are stunted, their minds dwarfed, and the strength and usefulness of future generations lessened? Is God or Nature responsible for the laws which permit this impairment of the man power and the woman power of the nation? The labor organizations have done much to mitigate the evils of child labor and to shorten the hours of adult labor, but what encouragement have they received from those who favor government by injunction, oppose arbitration, and denounce as disturbers of the peace all who criticise existing conditions?

Is it the fault of God or of Nature that our tax laws are so made and our tax systems so administered that the poor man pays more than his share of the taxes and the rich man less than his share?

Is God or Nature responsible for a financial system which raises the purchasing power of the dollar in the hands of the money changer, while it increases the burden of debt to the man who owes and decreases the value of property in the hands of the wealth producers?

Is Gor or Nature responsible for a paper money trust that makes the people at large the victims of private individuals entrusted with the control of the volume of currency?

Is God or Nature responsible for private monopolies which corner the markets, extort from the people and disburse the proceeds among the holders of watered stock?

Is God or Nature to blame for the substitution of force for reason and might for right in government?

Is God or Nature responsible for the nation's entrance upon a career of conquest, entailing upon the many the burden and menace of militarism, and coferring upon the few the benefits of exploitation?

A COLONIAL SOUPHOUSE.

Compared with the present condition of the Puerto Ricans, their future fate causes a shudder to come over every American citizen, and that shudder bodes ill to McKinleyism and its attendant benevolent assimilation. The addition of a colonial pauper territory to our home pauper institutions is something unpleasant to contemplate except to an utter imperialist. Thirty thousand women and children, says the last report, are in such a condition of nakedness usually attributed to the newly born. So naked, indeed, are the children starving for food and education that the modest pedagogue, through shame, can not permit them to attend their schoolhouses.

Mr. Charles M. Pepper, correspondent of the New York Herald, furnishes that journal with the most mournful statistics of the miserable condition of that once happy island. Their pitiful, poverty-stricken misery would bring sadness to the heart of everything but an Oxnard sugar beet. "Trade stagnation is widespread. There is little legitimate trading and few goods are being brought into the island except such as are sent to relieve the starving. "This condition has been existing for months," says Mr. Pepper, "and the poor and the laboring classes are in a state of destitution."

The Kansas City Times summarizes the situation as "idleness and demoralization for the unemployed poor and bankruptcy for the mercantile and industrial classes. Had the president had any backbone and followed his plain duty Puerto Rico today would have been a beehive of industry and the abode of prosperous activities instead of a souphouse and the breeding place of disaffection and hopelessness that the Republican party's obedience to trust magnates has made it."

The Constitution Never Yields.

Judge Cooley, a life long Republican, in his work on Constitutional Law—a recognized authority in every court of the United States, says:

"The Constitution never yields to treaty or enactment. It neither changes with time, nor does it, in theory, bend to the force of circumstances. It may be amended according to its own permission; but while it stands it is "a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times and under all circumstances." Its principles cannot therefore be set aside in order to meet the supposed necessities of great crises. "No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government."

The Ice Monopoly.

The price of ice to consumers this season will be double what it was last. The newly formed trust, which absolutely controls the supply, has determined upon an additional profit of $12,000,000 a year for itself. In other words, it will levy a tax upon every household in Greater New York, and particularly on those which are least able to stand further exactions.

The Ice Trust ought to be brought into court as an unlawful combination. Its object is the restraint of trade in a certain commodity, and this brings it under the ban of both the common and the statutory law.

Ice, during the summer months, is practically a necessity of life, and the welfare of the people demands that no combination of sordid capitalists be permitted to put a prohibitory price on it.—New York Times.

When Hanna Signals.

Our able generals have a knack of changing their minds when Hanna holds up two fingers. There's General Davis of Puerto Rico. He was for free trade awhile ago, but now he's hot foot for taxation without representation.—Atlanta Constitution.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

SOME GOOD STORIES FOR OUR JUNIOR READERS.

A Dozen Conundrums for the Little Folks—Story of a Dog and a Cat—Habits of Gray Squirrels—New Game for Boys.

Her Little Boy.

"Always a little boy to her,"
No matter how old he's grown,
Her eyes are blind to the strands of gray;
She's deaf to his manly tone.
His voice is the same as the day he asked:
"What makes the old cat purr?"
Ever and ever he's just the same—
A little boy to her.

"Always a little boy to her,"
She heeds not the lines of care
That furrow his face—to her it is still
As it was in his boyhood fair.
His hopes and his joys are as dear to her
As they were in his small-boy days;
He never changes; to her he's still
"My little boy," she says.

"Always a little boy to her,"
And to him she's the mother fair,
With the laughing eyes and the cheering smile
Of the boyhood days back there.
Back there somewhere in the mist of years—
Back there with the childish joy.
And to her he is never the man we see;
But always "her little boy."

"Always a little boy to her,"
The ceaseless march of the years
Goes rapidly by, but its drumbeats die
Ere ever they reach her ears.
The smile that she sees is the smile of youth,
The wrinkles are dimples of joy,
His hair, with its gray, is as sunny as May.
He is always "her little boy."

A Deformed Boy's Sacrifice.

He lived in a little village in Italy, at the foot of the Alps. His mother was a widow, and he, her only child, was a poor little cripple. When he thought of his sad condition—that he could not play like the other boys, and that if he grew up he would not be able to work like men—he felt very unhappy.

One day he was going through the village and stood to rest under the open window of a room in which some children were playing. One of them chanced to break a plaything, when another took hold of it, and throwing it out of the window, said: "I'll throw it away; it's no more use than Hans, the cripple." Oh, how sad the words made poor Hans feel! He crept back home and told his mother, while the hot tears ran down his pinched little face very hard, indeed. His mother took him upon her knee and sang a little song to him that she had often sung before. It ended with this little chorus: "God has His plan for every man."

And, although Hans felt very happy while listening to the sweet tune and voice, yet he could not believe that God had any plan for him. But he was mistaken. Just at this time the Austrians were at war with the Italians, and trying to take their country. In order that the Italians might know when the Austrian soldiers were coming, they had built large piles of dry wood on the tops of the hills, and put men to watch them night and day. When any of these men saw the Austrians coming, it was his duty to set fire to the pile. Then the man upon the next hilltop would see it and set fire to his, and so on, until all the valleys were made aware that the enemy was approaching and the Italians were roused to meet him. The piles were called beacons, and the men that watched, the sentinels.

Now, one night a festival had been kept up in Hans' village. All the villagers except Hans and his mother were there; and, although Hans had gone to bed, he could not sleep. So, after a while he arose up silently and crept up the hill to stay awhile with the sentinel. But no sentinel was there. Thinking there would be no danger that night, and being tempted to join the people in the village, he had left his post. Hans now thought he could be of some use, for he could watch the beacon on the hill until the sentinel returned.

He had not watched long before he saw the dark form of an Austrian soldier coming upon his hands and knees, very stealthily, along toward the pile. Yes, so it was; and now he could hear distinctly the measured tramp, tramp, tramp of a number of armed men. Quick as thought he set fire to the pile. Now the country was warned and the people would be saved.

But the enraged Austrian soldier saw, and fired his rifle at him. Hans fell, mortally wounded. Hours afterward he was found by some of the villagers and carried, bleeding and dying, to his mother. She took him upon her knees and wept over him as though her heart would break. But Hans looked into her face with his loving eyes and faintly whispered: "Dear mother, God has His plan for every man," and expired.

A Dog and a Cat.

Any dog, especially any small dog, greatly respects the teeth and claws of a cat. Generally speaking, he will no more thrust his muzzle into these, when they are in action, than a man will intentionally put his hand against the teeth of a buzz-saw in motion. As a rule, too, the cat is superior to the dog in strategy, knowing when to put her buzz-saw in operation and when merely to threaten with it. Sometimes, however, a cat may meet a dog who is cleverer than herself.

A correspondent of the Youths' Companion in California tells of a shepherd puppy which was always given his dinner immediately after the family in which he resided had finished theirs. At the same time the black and white cat was given her dinner. The puppy ate his allowance with extraordinary haste, all the time eying the cat's, and making an occasional lunge toward it, indicating his intention to take it as soon as he had finished his own.

His plate cleaned, he darted toward the cat, and received a sharp and stinging slap in the face, which caused him to retreat. Then he jumped around and barked—a 'proceeding' which caused the cat no uneasiness. Then, setting his wits to work, he began a strategic movement.

He got on the side of the dish toward which its handle projected, and began to crawl on his belly slowly up toward it. The cat ate on, merely watching the dog with one eye. Nearer and nearer the dog came, creeping and watching, until his nose reached the end of the handle. Then he gently took the handle between his teeth and began to back slowly away.

The cat, somewhat confused, no doubt, made no attack; and as soon as the puppy felt sure that he had got out of the "zone of fire," he moved much more rapidly away—and then set himself industriously to finish what the cat had left.

In this performance the dog showed intelligence of no mean order—perceiving the use of the handle of the dish, and also how the cat might be "bluffed" and outwitted.

Habits of Gray Squirrels.

In Addison county, Vermont, writes M. E. Hall, I have often seen the gray squirrels, in the autumn, dig holes in the leaves and earth—apparently at random, and bury a nut therein. Again, in the winter, I have frequently watched them running over the snow on some warm day, and again apparently digging at random, bring up a nut from under the snow. More often, however, I have seen them thus digging, but I did not see the nut that they found. Still I am quite sure that they did find a nut—for almost invariably their mode of procedure was to run down a tree, thence to a spot some yards distant, dig in the snow a few moments, and then run up a tree again, being quite undisturbed. They had evidently found what they had dug for.

More especially have I watched the fox squirrels do this in Greene county, Iowa. The fox is closely related to the gray, and almost exactly similar in movements and habits. I feel sure that the common red squirrel of the eastern portions of the country lay up a store of nuts for winter consumption. Once, late in autumn, in Vermont, I found nearly half a bushel of butternuts thus stored. In this case I was sure, as my wife and I watched the saucy little red carry several nuts to his hoard, which was deposited in a great cavity of an old butternut tree before we disturbed it.

I think the pine squirrel of the Big Horn mountains, and farther west, which much resembles the eastern red, does not lay up a winter store. My opportunities of observing them were limited, but so far as they went I thought they gathered each day the seeds from the cones that hung on the tree all winter, so did not need to lay up a store.

A Dozen Conundrums.

1. Why do you go to bed? Because the bed will not come to you.
2. When is a ship like a book? When it is outward bound.
3. Why has an ocean voyage no terrors for physicians? Because they are accustomed to see sickness.
4. Why is a popular novel like autumn? Because its leaves are quickly turned and always read (red).
5. Why should a thirsty man always carry a watch? Because there is a spring inside of it.
6. Who are the most exacting of all landlords? Why, the children, because they never fail to make their father and mother parents.
7. What is it that no one wishes to have, yet, when he has it, he would be very sorry to lose? A bald head.
8. What conundrums are always at home? Those that are never found out.
9. What insect does a tall father represent. A daddy-long-legs.
10. When a lady faints what figure should you bring her? You should bring her two.
11. Why is a pig in the parlor like a house on fire Because the sooner it is put out the better.
12. When are eyes not eyes? When the wind makes them water.

An Apt Little Negro Girl.

Speaking of kindergartens for colored children calls to mind the experience of a "befo' de wah" matron, who was teaching one of the little darkies on her plantation how to spell.

The primer she used was a pictorial one, and over each word was its accompanying picture, and Polly glibly spelled o-x, ox, and b-o-x, box, etc. But the teacher thought that she was making right rapid progress, so she put her hand over the picture and said:

"Polly, what does o-x spell?"

"Ox," answered Polly, nimbly.

"How do you know that it spells ox, Polly?"

"Seed his tail," replied the apt Polly.

About "Little Women."

It has been told of Louisa M. Alcott that when she wrote her first book, "Little Women," she sent to a publisher who couldn't find time to read the manuscript. He gave it to his little girl to read, thinking that if she enjoyed it he would think it worth publishing, perhaps. He could not get it away from the child—she would neither eat nor sleep until she had finished the last word. The publisher considered this proof that the story was good, and so printed it.

A New Catch Game.

Here is a new game of "catch" the boys will enjoy. It is called "stags and hounds," and in playing it one boy is at first the hound, and he must try to touch the other players. When he has touched one, the two hounds join in and catch another. When they have caught, the three join hands and run after others, until all except one have been caught and joined hands. Then the one that has not been caught has to be the hound for the next time.

Lincoln in Scotland.

Scotland seems a strange place to find a statue of Abraham Lincoln, and yet there is one there. It adorns a monument erected in old Calton burying ground, Edinburgh, to the memory of the Scottish-Americans who fought in the American civil war.

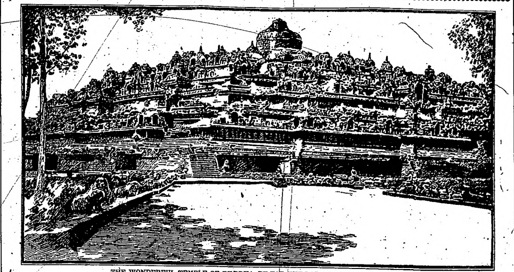
Fortune is seldom seen in the company of a loafer.

THE EIGHTH WONDER OF THE WORLD

It is the Colossal Temple of Buddha on the Island of Java.

The Boro Budur Temple of Java is the eighth wonder of the world. You never have heard of it before, but it deserves to rank with the Acropolis, the Colosseum and the Pyramids. Formed entirely of lava, it might be wonderful enough, but its other characteristics make it marvelous. In size alone it is worthy of world-wide interest.

How it has come to remain so long unknown so close to civilization is remarkable. The only possible explanation of it is that the natives, to whom alone it was known, fail to mark it as remarkable. Even among them not one in a thousand has learned of its existence. Our knowledge of it is due to the fact that Clarence B. Moore wandered in Java from the beaten paths of the traveler, and he has given to the scientific world a description of the temple, enhanced by splendid photographs. His description of his visit to the temple and its surroundings is as follows:



THE WONDERFUL TEMPLE OF BUDDHA, BY FAR THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

It is difficult to explain the general lack of information concerning the Boro Budur, except that travelers to Java rarely get beyond Batavia, or possibly Buitenzorg, and then hasten away to Singapore. Moreover, it is almost as impossible to obtain information of these ruins in Batavia as it would be in New York. The natives know nothing of them or tell nothing.

Batavia is an interesting town, mainly in that one can there best see the very free and easy customs and costumes of the East Indian Dutch. All over the houses and hotels until time to prepare for dinner, at 4 or 5 p. m., the women go about clad in camisoles of linen, with the sarong, or short skirt, reaching half way to the ankle, with stockingless feet thrust into slippers, and hair hanging loosely down the back. The sarongs are of the most gaudy colors and the wearers seem to vie with each other in selecting patterns striking and bizarre to the last degree, in which snakes, dragons and devils play a prominent part. The retail trade of Java is monopolized by the Chinese, and the hotel is haunted by these people, pack in hand.

From Batavia to Samarang is a two-days' sail, and fortunate it is that the weather is usually calm, for those having a tendency towards seasickness and a consequent horror of tobacco smoke pro tem would otherwise have a hard time. From morning to night, on deck, in the cabin and staterooms, the the roadside, offering for sale small heaps of food or merchandise, or moving from trader to trader, making purchases here and there as their fancy pompts.

It is a journey never to be forgotten, and the drive is all too soon over, when at length the temple of Boro Budur looms in sight. The traveler having previously in all probability met no one who has ever seen this wonderful structure, and having heard but the vaguest hints as to its size, and nothing relating to its wealth of statues and bas-reliefs, is fairly dazed. Upon him who has previously seen the temples of Egypt, of Greece, and of India, Baalbec, in Syria, and the wonderful ruins of Girgenti, if ruins they may be called, where the ravages of time are scarcely apparent, and the altar and stairways stand intact—who has lingered among the baths, aqueducts and amphitheaters of Italy and the south of France—it is doubtful if the first impressions of these wonders of architecture in any way equal the effect produced by this lava temple in the heart of Java. When one has seen pictures of famous ruins and photographs in great numbers, and for years read and heard descriptions of the most enthusiastic kind, it is seldom that the reality very far surpasses the preconceived idea. The effect of the Boro Budur is almost stunning, so unexpected is the grandeur of the sight presented.

On the top of an eminence, which has been leveled to some extent to receive it, is the temple of Boro Budur. It is not quite square, but nearly so, each side being about 620 feet in length. It is entirely built of blocks of black lava, excessively hard, to which quality doubtless it owes its excellent state of preservation.

It consists of seven ranges of walls and terraces decreasing in size until they culminate in a level space, in the center of which stands a species of dome about fifty feet in diameter, containing a gigantic statue of Buddha. This dome is surrounded by three circles of towers constructed of lattice work of stone, each enshrining an image of Buddha, seventy-two in all. Descending, one passes to successive terraces, the walls of which on the inside are covered with bas-reliefs illustrating everything pertaining to the life of the forgotten race which flourished when the temple was built. These bas-reliefs are executed in a high style of art, and are altogether over two miles in length. On the outside of the terraces at regular intervals are sitting images of Buddha, which certainly number not less than 400, and possibly double that. These figures are somewhat over life-size, being three feet in height as they sit. The height of the building is about 100 feet, exclusive of the dome, which is in a partially ruinous condition, and of which about twenty feet still stand. The temple is not one solid mass of masonry, but is built around the conical hill until the base of the dome is a broad avenue with animals of stone on either side, while two lions stand guard at the foot of the stairway of lava.

Who built the Boro Budur? At what era did it first swarm with priests and devotees? We have no records of any sort to guide us. It is asserted by some that the temple derives its name from Boro, the district in which it is situated, and Budur, ancient, while others think it is a corrupton of Bara, great, and Buddha. The latter is most probably correct, and the district has taken its name from the temple. The statues at Boro Budur are to all appearances images of Buddha, and no statues of undoubted Brahminical origin are to be seen in the building, although one was once discovered in an adjacent field, and in ruins, at no great distance, are many armed figures, evidently of some Brahminical god.

GREAT SALT LAKE.

No Living Thing in It and No Danger of Being Drowned.

The water of the Great Salt lake, Utah, is clear and transparent, with a bottom of fine white sand and a margin of incrusted salt. It is one of the purest and most concentrated brines in the whole world. Its waters give sustenance to no living thing; there is not the smallest insect or worm to frighten the most timid bather, and the bathing is the most perfect sea bathing in the whole of North America or in Europe. No human body can sink in it. One may actually walk the water, no matter how deep it is. Your body will persistently rise up, the shoulders above the surface, or you may even sit down in it. Its wonderful buoyancy must be experienced to be realized. No knowledge of swimming is necessary; one may enter the lake without the slightest fear; all you have to do is to lie down and float. But to swim in it, that is another thing! When your hands are put under the water to take a stroke, your feet, like Banquo's ghost, will not go down. It is impossible to keep more than one end of your body under water at a time. You cannot swim, but if you are a man you can float on your back, with your arms crossed under your head, and smoke your pipe or cigar with as much ease as if in your own room. The water is so salt that it cannot be swallowed without great danger of strangulation; a small drop in the eye, too, gives much pain. But, in spite of all the dangers, bathing in the Great Salt lake is refreshing and invigorating, notwithstanding that the body must be rebathed in fresh water afterward to remove the immense quantity of salt which adheres to the skin. It is hard work to make any headway, even against the smallest waves. Nearly half a million people bathe in the Great Salt lake every year; they come from all over the world, and tourists are beginning to realize that Salt Lake City and the magnificent surroundings present the greatest scope of novelty, and is destined to be a leading watering place.

How One Fox Helped Another.

Joseph Maybaugh, a farmer who lives near Dundee, north of Cincinnati, trapped a large red fox, and, carrying it home, placed it in his cornerib until he could notify his neighbors and have a chase. The next morning the fox was gone. Investigation proved that its mate had assisted the prisoner in making its escape. The fox had worked away on the inside until it had bitten a board loose from its fastenings. This, however, was not sufficient to permit it to get out unless the board was lifted up. The board was held up from the outside, as the teeth marks on it show, until the prisoner crawled to liberty. Tracks of another fox were seen, and there is no doubt that the mate came after the fox inside the crib had loosened the board and held it up. This is one of the brightest fox tricks that old hunters in the neighborhood have yet encountered.

Training Medical Women.

The London School of Medicine for Women in its report for 1899 appends a list of 254 medical women it has trained. They seem now to be called to the furthest ends of the earth to serve in hospitals and as medical missionaries. Nearly every important town in India has a qualified woman physician. China claims a large number. Even Persia claims one, and South Africa has several. Among the different posts held by women doctors are those of medical examiner of a life insurance company and to the women's staffs of postoffices. Women are medical inspectors to high schools for girls, and to children boarded out under the Church of England Society for Waifs and Strays.

How English Sparrows Came Here.

The residents of Germantown have long labored under the delusion that the English sparrow, which is to be found in every nook and corner of that historic suburb, was introduced into the United States by the late John W. Bardsley, a native of England, who was familiarly known as "Sparrow Jack" Bardsley, and who lived in the little two-story house, still standing at Main and Upsal streets, Germantown. From an authoritative source it now appears that the responsibility for the introduction of these pestiferous little birds must be laid upon Nicholas Pike, of Brooklyn. He, it is stated, brought over with him from England in the fall of 1850 about eight pairs of sparrows, but they did not thrive and soon died. Two years later he repeated the experiment, having purchased a number of sparrows while on his way to Portugal as consul general of the United States. These later arrivals did thrive and multiplied amazingly, spreading from Brooklyn to all parts of the country.—Philadelphia Record.

WASHINGTON CROWS

Know Very Well When Saturday and Sunday Come.

Two crows, said to have been there for many years, caw and sometimes fight on the turrets of the Franklin public school building in Washington. But the strange thing about it is that they are never seen about the building except on Saturday, Sunday and a holiday. The presence and noise of the pupils about the grounds might be said to keep the crows away. But the crows are never seen during school hours when there are no children about. Saturdays and Sundays may, by some sort of count of time in the nature of crows, be known to them. Holidays are irregular, but the crows know when one comes, and as sure as it does they are on the turrets or about them all day. They come early and stay late, but no one who has watched then knows where they roost, for sometimes they fly in one direction and again in an opposite direction.

SORRY TIME AS "SUPER."

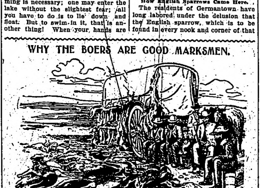
Experience of a Harvard Freshman with Ambitions for the Stage.

"When I was at Harvard," said Walter Kellogg of St. Louis to the New York Tribune man, "during my freshman year I had a vast ambition to appear upon the stage, which finally assumed such proportions and so colored my every thought that I at length determined to gratify it. Fate seemed to play into my hands, for upon making guarded inquiries in the mater I ascertained that 'supers' were in great demand at a certain theater, and so one night, in great trepidation, I presented myself at the stage entrance. I was finally admitted with a crowd of 'hoboes,' examined and passed by a profane and 'familiar-on-short-acquaintance' personage, and told to take my place in line. My outer garments I removed, as did the others, and in a dazed state I found myself passing them through the window of a sort of coatroom and receiving a costume and check in return. I then moved on to a sort of dressing room. The costume I had received was dirty enough and the idea of putting it on was not only repugnant, but impossible. While I was debating what to do a loud, coarse voice informed us to clear the dressing room, and I again found myself on the stage in my undergarments, with that bundle of rags on my hands. I made my way to the coatroom, only to find it closed, and my appeals to the stage hands met only derisive responses, while an offer of money for the return of my clothes they would not accept in a promissory form. It was all I could then offer, but they regarded it with open suspicion. I spent an awful evening hiding behind anything I could find, chased out of odd corners by perspiring and personally abusive scene shifters, and in an agony of confusion whenever an actress came within the line of my vision. My embarrassment, I must say, they did not share, and when they did see me they commented on my appearance and costume with ungratifying freedom and painful detail. At length I recovered my own clothes and, sadder and wiser, made my way back to Cambridge. Since then I have been content to see plays from the paying side of the footlights."

All Violin Makers.

The only place in the world where violin making may be said to constitute the staple industry is Markneukirchen, in Saxony, with its numerous surrounding villages. There are altogether about 15,000 people in this district engaged exclusively in the manufacture of violins. The inhabitants, from the small boy and girl to the wrinkled, gray-haired veteran and aged grandmother, are all constantly employed making some part or other of this musical instrument.

WHY THE BOERS ARE GOOD MARKSMEN.



The accompanying picture, showing the results of a Boer hunting expedition, is a very eloquent demonstration of why the Transvaaler is a good marksman. The ordinary veldt burgher spends so much time in hunting and shooting and his larder depends so largely on his prowess for its supplies that he very early acquires a marksmanship that is probably unequaled in any other civilized race. His favorite arm is the Mauser rifle, and with this he can bring down a buck at a few thousand yards with the greatest ease. He also slays his cattle with his rifle, the herd being driven up to him, while he selects the best beeves and brings them down with a bullet through the brain.

PENTELIKON MARBLE.

Its Beauty and Purity Greater Than That of Carrara.

The famous marble quarries of the Pentelikon, near Athens, remained undisturbed and silent until this century, when, after the crowning of the first king of Greece, the erection of a royal palace again called attention to the national wealth in the finest of stone, says Chambers' Journal. The road to the foot of the Penteli hills was reopened, the bridges were repaired, and a large quantity of the famous old marble was employed in the construction of a new Athens. It was wisely decided that the old Greek quarries should remain untouched, so that we have clear evidence of the mode of working these in classic times. This Pentelikon marble forms a great part of the ranges, and, fortunately, the upper portion. The lower part to 550 feet is limestone in transition; but thence up to 1,100 feet it is pure marble, the estimate being that there still remain 2,000,000,000 tons of pure white marble and 600,000,000 tons of white marble with blue veins. A railway has now been constructed to the foot of the range, to meet the inclined plane that carries the blocks down from the quarries, so this fine stone, from which the Parthenon at Athens was built 2,400 years ago, can be delivered at a cheap rate throughout Europe. Seeing that the so-called Elgin marbles, obtained by Lord Elgin from the Parthenon, were made from this marble, it may readily be credited when asserted by an authority that the Pentelikon marble is harder, has a finer grain and is in every respect superior to the Carrara marble. Its purity and beauty must be seen to be appreciated.

SHAKESPEARE RELICS.

The Poet's Waistcoat, Snuffbox and Other Articles.

In all probability the most valuable Shakespearean relics extant in America are in the possession of Sidney Vernon Bakewell of this city, says the Indianapolis Press. They consist of a waistcoat and a jeweled tie pin, a snuffbox, his mother's workbag, and a string of beads and a vinaigrette bottle worn by Anne Hathaway at her marriage. Mr. Bakewell's maternal grandmother was a daughter of James Shakespeare, the fifth of the Shakespeares in direct lineal descent from the bard of Avon. The facing of the waistcoat is a brocade of satin, the numerous designs worked in with bright-colored silk thread. It is lined with sateen, excepting the lower part, which is lined with kid leather. The cut is peculiarly low, in order to admit of the use of expansive ruffled shirt fronts, which were stylish in those days. The buttons are small and covered with black cloth. The workbag, made by the bard's mother, is 340 years old, and the oldest relic in the lot. It is hand-made, of a species of grass interwoven with a silk design of the shamrock and the thistle. The poet's snuffbox is of ebony, and the lid, which is now apart from the rest of the box, is laid with pearl. The pin contains a dozen diamonds set in solid silver. The beads are round and transparent, streaked with red color, and vary in size from a pea to an ordinary marble. They are fastened with a silver clasp. The vinaigrette bottle is of cut glass, about two and a half inches long and an inch wide, and has a silver top.

BIG BANANA TRUST.

Prices Are Nearly Doubled by Its Operations

Banana dealers from all the central and western states gathered the other day at Chicago to attend a special session of the National Banana Jobbers' association of the United States. The object in calling the meeting was to discuss the monopoly which is now almost completely controlling the trade in this country. Owing to the operations of the New York fruit trust, the Fruit Dispatch company, bananas are selling for almost twice the price they demanded before the dispatch company entered the field. The dealers claim that this concern now has such a control of the market that it can dictate the price of the fruit in all parts of the country. Although the service rendered in transporting the fruit is excellent, the shippers say that the dispatch company is ruining the trade by demanding such high prices. As a remedy for the evil C. H. Robertson of St. Louis suggested that the association buy up banana plantations in Spanish Honduras and other South American countries and run a line of steamers of its own. Mr. Robertson declared that the plantations could be purchased for $560,000, and that a trade could be established which should force the eastern corporation to make better terms. "As it is now," he said, "we have to abide by what they say, or go without the fruit. This association is rich enough, and I think that in time we shall have a line of our own."

Soldier Who Loved the Sea.

It is not generally known that the favorite pastime of Lord Roberts as a boy was that of carving boats out of wood. He was a rare adept at this, and it is told how he would wager a vessel of his own manufacture to beat another lad's purchased boat for anything in the shape of a boyish bet. All the boats Lord Roberts made were named after some great naval hero or after a big battle which had been fought at sea. This is all the more curious, seeing what a brilliant career was in store for Lord Roberts as a leader of men in the field.

Good Cause to Worry.

"By George." "What's wrong?" "My wife told me this morning that she was going to get out my last summer suit today and dust it and see if I can't wear it awhile this spring." "Well, what of that?" "I came away without going through the pockets. I'm afraid she may find two or three letters she gave me to mail last fall."

Reason for It.

"Somehow, Aunt Clara likes to stay right in a rut. She can't bear innovations." "I don't blame her. When you get to be her age perhaps you will fight shy of new wrinkles, too."

A Kansas Blizzard.

"When a real Kansas blizzard starts," said a native of the state, "the snow at first is usually soft and fine and comes down with an ominous quiet. Then it increases in volume, and a wild wind hurls it along. It is blinding and enveloping, and, aside from being freezing cold, one cannot but lose his way. The storm sometimes lasts two or three days. When one of these blizzards comes up, the farmer who wants to get from his farmhouse to the stable or milkhouse takes a cord and starts for the stable or milkhouse, as it may be, even if it is only 50 yards off. He seldom makes it the first time, and the cord is to keep him from getting lost and wandering in the snow. Sometimes the people stand in the door and beat a tin can for a signal to any one who may be out in the storm, but this is of little use, as the noise of the wind is so great that it drowns almost every other sound.

"I know of a case of a man who got lost going from his stable to the house, so swiftly and blindingly did the storm whirl down upon him. He stumbled over the entrance to a cyclone cellar and crawled in there and dropped the door after him to keep out the snow. The snow fell faster and faster and buried the door so deeply that when it was all ended and he tried to open it he found it impossible. His family searched the country around for him, and it was not until the snow had melted and gone and some one happened to go into the cyclone cellar that he was found there."—New York Tribune.

Vest Was Committed.

"I remember well once when Joe Blackburn and I were on the same committee," said a senator. "It was during a Democratic administration, and there had been a good deal of bother trying to get the secretary of agriculture to agree to a certain thing, and Blackburn had been sent to talk him over to the committee's plan. In fact, the whole cabinet had been difficult to deal with. When Joe came back, several of us were assembled in the committee room, among us Senator Vest, who was sunk dejectedly in the depths of an armchair. Some one asked:

"'Well, Joe, did you succeed?'

"'Succeed?' he echoed. Then he began to tramp up and down, fuming and fussing. Finally he broke out:

"'Of all the obstinate things in the shape of a cabinet officer I ever encountered, commend me to J. Sterling Morton! Don't you agree with me, Vest?'

"Vest roused up slowly and answered:

"'I'm sorry, Joe, but I am committed to Hoke Smith.'

"It was the funniest thing I ever heard," continued the senator, "and our bill was never even reported."—Saturday Evening Post.

What He Would Have Said.

In a complicated criminal case an old land surveyor was subpœnaed to give his professional opinion in the matter. As the proceedings were about to begin he asked permission to say a few words, but was called to order sternly by the judge, who told him to wait till he was questioned. The case then proceeded. A host of witnesses were examined, and even the prisoner frequently was called upon to make a statement.

After a couple of hours the judge said to the old surveyor, "Now, sir, we shall be glad to hear what you have to say on the whole case."

The witness stood up and replied: "I only wished to remark awhile ago that I am quite deaf in my left ear and rather hard of hearing in the right. I was merely going to ask if I might be allowed to sit immediately in front of the witnesses and the prisoner. Up to now I have not heard a single word of the proceedings."—London Telegraph.

Foote Could Be Caustic.

One of the best repartees on record is that of Foote, the actor. Dining with some friends, a heated dispute arose between himself and a young nobleman. The latter sought to disparage Foote by asking him what his father was.

"A tradesman," said Foote.

"Then, sir, it is a pity he did not make you one."

"And pray, let me ask, what was your father, my lord?"

"My father, Mr. Foote, was a gentleman."

"Then, my lord, it's a pity he did not make you one."—Collier's Weekly.

Chinese Dinner Invitations.

"When a Chinaman issues invitations to dinner," writes Dr. Sven Hedin, the traveler, "he sends out, one or two days beforehand, a tiny card of invitation, contained in a huge envelope. If you accept the invitation, you are supposed to keep the card. If you have not time—that is, if you decline—you are expected to send it back. If the banquet is appointed for 12 o'clock, you need not go before 2 p. m."

Lifelike.

Sir Robert Peel was once going through a picture collection with a friend where there was a portrait of a prominent Englishman who was famous for saying sharp things.

"How wonderfully like," said the friend. "You can see the quiver on his lips."

HE WENT UP HIGHER

HOW A GOVERNMENT CLERK SECURED LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

After Getting the "Royal Word" From the Secretary of His Department He Had Fun With the Division Chief, Who Had Turned Him Down.

"The question of sick and annual leave," said a clerk in an up town department to a reporter, "is one of the utmost importance to government clerks and is one of their most precious privileges. I will tell you of an occurrence in my department which will interest fellow clerks especially.

"A clerk in my division put in an application for a few days' leave in the usual form in writing, to be O. K.'d by the chief of division and sent on its way to the chief clerk of the department. Not hearing from it and the time approaching for his departure he went to his chief and said:

"'Mr. ——, how about my application?'

"'Here it is on my desk. I have not sent it up. It is too early in the year to apply for that length of time, important business or not. You cannot be spared.'

"My friend, who is a little fellow and a diplomat, grasped the situation at once. It happened that he had a personal acquaintance with the secretary, one of those rare instances where a cabinet officer has a personal acquaintance with one of his own clerks. They had met outside of the department, for the little fellow is a member of an influential family in the secretary's own district.

"He bowed and withdrew, but instead of going back to his desk he made a short cut up the corridors toward the secretary's room. Just as he was approaching the latter's private office entrance the secretary, in company with a couple of gentlemen, came out. Observing the clerk and his anxious, inquiring face, he paused, shook him cordially by the hand and exclaimed to his companions:

"'Senator, here is a bright little fellow from my state who is the father of the biggest, cherubic faced baby you ever saw and the husband of the happiest of wife mothers. Look at him blush. Well, what's the matter now?'

"'Why, I want to go away on business for a fortnight, and'—

"'Well, you little rascal, why don't you go? I'll let you—only be sure to come back and don't get lost on the cars.'

"The secretary's hearty laugh, in which the others joined, echoed in the marble tessellated corridors, and they passed on. The 'royal word' had been given.

"That evening at quarter to 4—he left it until last minute purposely—he went to his chief. It was his turn to rub it in.

"'Mr. ——,' he said quietly, 'have you sent up my leave?'

"'I have not,' replied the chief shortly. 'I disposed of that question this morning.'

"'I thought that the secretary granted leave in this department. I was not aware that chiefs of division possessed that authority.' It was war now. Both looked each other unflinchingly in the eye. Then the chief began to smell a little official mouse and resorted to browbeating, as is not unusual under similar circumstances.

"'You are impertinent'—

"'I beg your pardon,' quickly interrupted the clerk, 'for a chief to say to a clerk that he is impertinent imputes a charge against him. I request that you withdraw that remark. It is no impertinence for a clerk to state a rule of the department to his chief, more especially when he appears to have forgotten it or is unaware of its existence. The secretary, and he alone, finally grants or disapproves applications for leave in all departments of the government. I have never before heard this authority questioned'—

"'I don't question it,' hastily interjected the chief, to whose nose the official mousy smell was each moment becoming more acute.

"'By not submitting my application to those whose province it is to decide such questions you certainly do question it and exceed your authority. Approved or disapproved by you, they and not you pass on it finally, and, furthermore, you know it.'

"'I will send it up tomorrow,' said the chief as he climbed down from his high horse as gracefully as the occasion admitted. 'Let me see, you wish to go'—

"'Take your time,' replied my friend pleasantly. 'It is already granted. I have the secretary's personal permission to go provided I do not get lost on the cars. I start tomorrow, and I will try not to get lost. Goodby.'"—Washington Star.

Gems Have Organic Life.

Scientists frequently remind us that gems possess life—organic life. Everybody knows that opals and pearls grow dull when worn by invalids, and it has been lately proved that rubies and the turquoise show the same sensibility. Pearls are most delicate and lose color and brilliancy and actually die. Rings and pins should not be worn by invalids, because the invisible emanations of disease penetrate the microscopic interstices of the gem and kill its life.—Philadelphia Press.

Madge—But don't you really believe that Ida is engaged?

May—No; I'm sure she isn't. I asked her if there was any truth in the report, and she refused to say a word.—Harper's Bazar.

Wigs were in vogue in Rome toward the end of the republic, and so well made that Ovid says, "Nobody could tell if any one else's hair was real or not."

We Want Correspondents.

We desire a correspondent in every school district in the county, one who will give the local news of his or her locality in a fair and impartial manner. To any one who will undertake the matter the SPECTATOR will furnish the necessary stationery and postage and will send the paper free during the time the person acts in that capacity. Only one correspondent desired in each district. It is an advantage to any community to be represented in the columns of the local paper.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Corresondent

The men who have been slowly but surely pushing a scheme to loot the U. S. Treasury by means of contracts with the Post Office Department for pneumatic tube service in the large cities were given a hard throw down this week when the House by a vote of 87 to 50 struck out that portion of the Post office appropriation carrying $725-000 to pay for existing pneumatic tube service and to extend the same during the coming fiscal year. That action was brought about by the public statement of Representative Moody, of Mass., that these men had been bribing and trying to bribe members of Congress with stock in their company, which existed solely for what it could get through Congressional legislation.

There is little doubt of the liability of Mr. McKinley and Secretary Root to impeachment for their open violation of law in paying two salaries to favored army officers in Cuba, and they would be likely to get it if Congress had a democratic majority. Secretary Root's answer to the Senate resolution asking for information is a pettifogging document from start to finish. It tells only a part of the truth, which is often much worse than telling a lie, but even then it contains a practical acknowledgement of violation of law by the executive branch of the government, in the citation of acts of Congress in 1849 and 1853 authorizing extra compensation for army officers who performed civil duties in Mexico and California. This Congress would have done the same for officers in Cuba, had the necessity for such action been brought to its attention by the War Department; but that does not excuse the violation of law on the part of the President and the Secretary of war. In citing acts of Congress as a precedent Mr. Root shows that he knows that Congress alone has the authority which the executive branch of the government has in this case usurped. And that isn't the only ugly thing about Mr. Root's answer. His argument that the regular allowance of an annual sum from the Cuban revenues does not constitute a second salary for the officers named is farcical, but his failure to name all the officers who are known to have had an "allowance" is worse. It is too much to expect anything approaching a thorough investigation of War Department expenditures in Cuba from a republican Congress, but steps will be taken by others to get at the truth and make it known to the people of the country.

Now is the time to get the SPECTATOR. Official county and village paper.

Warning Against Forest and Prairie Fires

Office of State Forest Commissioner,
ST. PAUL, MINN., March 21, 1900.

Chapter 196 of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota for 1895 (Act of April 18th) constitutes Supervisors of towns, Mayors of cities and presidents of village councils Fire Wardens, and it is made their duty to take precaution to prevent forest and prairie fires, and if they occur, to go and extinguish or control them; and in emergencies to call upon any able-bodied male person, over eighteen years of age, to assist. Reports of such fires with particulars tending to fix responsibility therefor shall be made within reasonable time—usually within a week. The Forest Commissioner is required to provide and sign an abstract (as herein) of the penalties under said law, and it is made the duty of the County Commissioners of each county to cause said abstract to be published in at least three issues of the official paper in their respective counties each year between the 15th of April and 1st of November, and they are hereby instructed to publish this notice entire. Under said law.

The following are liable to a penalty not exceeding $500 or imprisonment in the state prison not over ten years or both:

Any person who maliciously sets or causes to be set on fire any woods, prairie or other combustible material whereby the property of another is destroyed and life is sacrificed.

The following are liable to a penalty not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding three months.

Any person refusing, without cause, to assist fire wardens in extinguishing forest or prairie fires.

Any fire warden who neglects to perform his duties.

Any person who wilfully, negligently or carelessly sets on fire, or causes to be set on fire, any woods, prairies or other combustible material thereby causing injury to another.

Any person who shall kindle a fire on or dangerously near to forest or prairie land and leave in unquenched, or who shall be a party thereto.

Any person who shall use other than incombustible fire wads for firearms or carry a naked torch, firebrand or other exposed light in or dangerously near to forest land.

Any person who shall wilfully or heedlessly deface, destroy or remove this or any other warning placard posted under the requirements of the above mentioned Act.

Any railroad company wilfully neglecting to provide efficient spark arresters on its engines; or to keep its right of way to the width of 100 feet cleared of combustible material; or which shall fail to comply with other provisions of Section 12 of the above mentioned Act.

The following are liable to a penalty of not less than $5 nor more than $50:

Any railroad employe who wilfully violates the provisions of Section 12 of the above mentioned Act.

Any owner of threshing or other portable steam engine who neglects to have efficient spark arresters, or who shall deposit live coals or hot ashes without extinguishing the same.

To S. B. King—

You are hereby notified that on the 12th day of May A. D. 1890, in proceedings to enforce the payment of delinquent taxes pursuant to that certain real estate judgment, which was entered in the District Court in and for the County of Polk, in the Fourteenth Judicial District, in the State of Minnesota, on the 21st day of March A. D. 1890, the following described piece or parcel of land is situated in Polk county, State of Minnesota, to-wit:

Lot 20, block 38, Village of St. Hilaire was bid in to the state to satisfy the amount for which it was judged liable in said judgment, interests and costs, for the sum of one dollar and eighty cents; that the above described real estate has become and now is the Absolute property of the state; That on the 15th day of March A. D. 1900 the above described real estate was sold by the undersigned county auditor of Polk county, as directed by the state auditor, in accordance with section 101 of Chapter 11 of the general statutes of 1878, and the several acts amendatory thereto, for the sum of eight dollars and eighty-nine cents; that the amount required to redeem said piece or parcel of land from such sale (exclusive of the costs to accrue on this notice) is eight dollars and eighty-nine cents with interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum from said 15th day of March A. D. 1900, until such redemption is made and that the time for redemption of said piece or parcel of land from such sale will expire sixty days after the service of this notice, and proof thereof has been filed in the office of the county auditor of said county.

A man with a little cottage home, a wife, and four children, aged 10, 12, 15 and 17 years, lived happily on an income of $500 a year. He died. The Modern Woodman society paid his widow $2,000. Widow and orphans lived comfortably on $400 a year for three years. Then the two eldest children began earning—brought in $1,100 a year. The youngest were continued at school. That family is now comfortably well off, united, educated and happy. All because the father's certificate in Woodcraft continued to work for his family for years after his death. Who says fraternal insurance is a failure?

A farmer was arrested and fined the other morning for selling adulterated milk, adulterated with a little harmless water. He wore at the same time a suit of all wool(?) badly adulterated with shoddy, and boots whose soles were adulterated with paper or wood shavings. For breakfast he drank adulteratad coffee, his meat was spiced with adulterated pepper, his cakes puffed up with adulterated baking powder, his pickels soured with adulterated vinegar, his pie was seasoned with adulterated spice, his wife was out of sorts because she could not make good bread with adulterated flour that had been run in on her for the "best." In fact, he saw and felt the effects of adulteration whichever way he looked and he had never heard of any of the adulterators being arrested and fined. Yet there are those who blame the farmer for complaining, for being discontented.—Ex.

No woman looks well walking too fast.

A new joiner in a secret order always gives you the grip.

One good thing about a clock that doesn't run is, it is always the same.

Anybody's household goods look tough when piled up on a dray wagon.

Every woman is convinced that everybody wants a picture of her baby.

In case of sickness, the neighbor women all go in to stand around in the way.

When a man is sure that nothing is as good as it used to be, it is a sign he is getting old.

A woman is not really happy unless she has a lot of geraniums standing around that won't grow.

Everybody says a man who gets rich that he ought to have got rich, for he had a splendid chance.

A fellow does not feel so old when he hears men talk about things that have happened before he was born.

Nothing pleases some men better than to be able to recommend some cure that is better than the doctor's.

If a man would only stick to the resolutions made when he has staid up late, the next night, he would soon quit keeping late hours.

905,000 Magazines Monthly.

The circulation of The Ladies' Home Journal has reached 900,000, and passed it by 5000—905,000 copies being the aggregate circulation of the April issue. This is an increase of over 36,000 copies per month for the last four months—since January first of the present year—over the corresponding period in 1899 Even these figures do not tell the whole story of the growth of the Journal's popularity. But they stand for the extreme limit of the capacity of the presses upon which the magazine is printed, but which for the last year or more—even with the constant increase in their number, and running day and night—have been unable to keep the supply apace with the increasing demand. Every issue within that period has been exhausted in less than a fortnight after the date of publication, and the mechanical restrictions have made it impossible to meet subsequent calls for the magazine—several thousand each month.

—For cuts and sores there is nothing better than the Imperial Carbolic salve.

I consider it not only a pleasure but a duty I owe to my neighbors to tell about the wonderful cure effected in my case by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I was taken very badly with flux and procured a bottle of this remedy. A few doses of it effected a permorent cure. I take a pleasure in recommending it to others suffering from that dreadful disease.—J. W. Lynch, Dorr, W. Va. This remedy is sold at The Imperial Drug Store.

—It is better than ready money because it cures rheumatism, constipation sick headache, indigestion. Imperial Blood and Rheumatism cure.

About Bridge Letting Contract.

St. Hilaire, Minn., May 1, 1900.

The Spectator:—

Pursuant to the notice published in the Spectator by the county auditor, Adam Zeh, stating that on the 23d day of April last he would let the work of building the ditch No. 1 in this county to the lowest bidder. I went to Red Lake Falls on said day for the purpose of bidding on the bridge work on said ditch. The letting of the earth work commenced in due time and continued until about 3 o'clock p. m., when a recess was taken until 4 p. m., on account of no bidders. Resumed at 4 and still no bidders, when undersigned insisted that the bridge work be let because I could neither stay over, or come back the next day, whereupon Zeh said he would if it was not for that he told Rue that the bridges would not be let until the next day. Then I told him that we could get Rue, which was done but Zeh changed his mind and adjourned all letting until the next day and I was thereby denied an opportunity of bidding on the work. The next day I understand the bridge work was let to one Joe Patnode for $682.00, or within fifth cents of the maximum limit; whereas had I been given an opportunity of bidding, I would have bid as low as $568.35, which are the figures I calculated the work could be done for, which fact I told parties in Red Lake Falls, also showing them my figures which figures I have preserved.

Now I think it is due the people who have to pay for this work to know how things are done in Red Lake Falls. This is the second time I have attended bridge letting in Red Lake Falls and got the worst of it, and it will be a long time before I attend another one.

Yours truly,
Henry Norland.

Climate and Crop Bulletin.

For the week ending April 30th, 1900.

The nights have not been cold, and the day temperatures, moderate early in the week. There has been considerable rainfall during the week in the whole western half of the state, but work was delayed by it only in the extreem southwestern counties; elsewhere the rain has been of great value, especially in the North. In the Red River valley, with no rainfall since the spring work began, there has been no delay in seeding, though the surface soil became so dry that there was danger that the late sown seed would not germinate regularly, but the rains beginning on the 26th will probably ensure a strong and even stand of all grain. Early sown wheat, oats and barley are up in all parts of the state, and where the rains have been more abundant, the stand is excellent. In the extreme southeastern counties an absence of rain during the week has enabled the farmers to finish seeding and to catch up with work heretofore delayed by too much rain. All the barley is not yet seeded, and in some places ground is being plowed for this crop. A few pieces of oats are still to be seeded. A little flax seeding has been done, but the seeding of this crop will not be general till after April 30th. Potato planting has begun, and a very little corn has been planted; these crops will be put in as rapidly as the ground is prepared for them. Wild plums are in blossom, and the apple trees are full of buds nearly ready to open. The prairie fires in Kittson and Sherburne counties and the forest fires in St. Louis, Itasca, Cass and Beltrami counties were probably extinguished by the rains of the 26th, 28th and 29th.

The Ditching Contracts.

The contracts for the construction of county ditch No. 1 were let last Monday at the Auditor's office in this city. There was not much competition and it looked for a time as though the work would not be let at all. The principal contractors were:

Anton Anderson, of St. Hilaire	$ 3500
Scribner & Linnehan	3000
M. W. Barnard, of Moorhead	1200
S. M. Dainard	700
Joseph Patnaud	400

Mr. Patnaude also contracted to construct the three bridges across the ditch for $682.00.

Scribner & Linnehan and Barnard have to finish their contracts before July 1st; the other contracts have until November to complete their work.

The cost of the ditch, about 7 miles, will aggregate in the neighborhood of $9,000.—R. L. F. Courier.

The ancients believed thot rheumatism was the work of a demon within a man. Any one who has had an attack of sciatic or inflammatory rheumatism will agree that the infliction is demoniac enough to warrant the belief. It has never been claimed that Chamberlain's Pain Balm would cast out demons, but it will cure rheumatism, and hundreds bear testimony to the truth of this statement. One application relieves the pain, and this quick relief which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. For sale by The Imperial Drug Store.

HER HEART'S SECRET;

Or, UNDER A SPELL.

BY JEAN WARNER.

CHAPTER XIII.

Fannie's Lover.

There was a moonlight regatta on the river that evening, and loth though she had been to leave her friend, Fannie had at length yielded to Sybil's solicitation, and accompanied her brother and Laurence Grey to the scene of festivity.

Young Grey was passionately fond of aquatic sports, and his pretty little yacht, the "Fannie," was the one indulgence which the self-denying young student allowed himself during these arduous years of toil that were to prepare him for his professional career.

Grave, reticent and dignified, Laurence Grey always seemed especially so beside pretty Fannie Clive, whose gay young life, like that of a butterfly, was all sport, sunshine and gladness. Laurence did not dance and could not flirt; he was stupid at croquet and solemn in conversation.

Fannie kept out of his way as much as possible and found Fenton Forrest a most delightful set-off to her brother's more favored friend.

Fenton, with his gallant manners and gold lace, his brilliancy and his buttons, his flashing eyes and his clanking spurs, was Fannie's ideal hero—Fenton, who could ride like an Arab and dance like a Frenchman, who could court desperately one half-hour and flirt faithlessly the second—Fenton, who never missed a stroke at croquet or a step in the redowa, whose ready wit was equal to all emergencies, and whose ready tongue was equal to the fairest antagonists—Fenton, the gay, the gallant, the graceful, was surely the perfection of manhood; and Fannie fancied herself very much in love indeed.

For the past month he had been her constant cavalier, having suddenly awakened to the astonishing fact that the pretty little Clive girl he used to patronize and tease during his previous visits to Greylawns was "a deuced handsome woman."

And in his fascinating society Fannie had latterly lost sight of her old playmate, Laurence, altogether—Laurence, who had always been ready to take her to school, or church, or concert—whose pretty boat, her namesake, was always at her disposal, whose quiet, brotherly service was always at her command—Laurence, with his kind smile and unassuming friendliness, seemed, in contrast with the glorious Fenton, very tame indeed.

But Fenton was in town this evening, and though Fannie felt the regatta would be a very tedious affair without his enlivening presence, she yielded to circumstances and, donning the most charming of boating costumes, resolved—with a sudden conscience-stricken feeling, that she had been rather unfriendly lately—to be as agreeable as possible to her brother's Damon, for the sake of auld lang syne.

Laurence looked his best in his sailor's garb. He was apt to affect a rather stiff, scholarly style in his everyday costume. Now, with his dark brown hair falling in rich waves under his jaunty hat, and his loose collar turned back from his well formed throat, the young student looked, Fannie was forced to acknowledge, quite as handsome as Fenton himself.

And he as so kind, so thoughtful, in his care for her. Such pretty new cushions had been placed in the stern of the boat; such a bright mirror swung in the toy of a cabin, such a dainty supper was packed away, with nautical neatness, in a compact little hamper under the deck.

Fenton would have had plenty of wine and cigars, but he would have thought of the snow-white cottage cheese that was Fannie's especial weakness?, or would he have been aware of her great predilection for raspberries and ice cream? Not that Fannie gave any minute attention to these details; she only had a fluttering sense of being daintily and thoughtfully cared for, and knew that Laurence's wise and sober head had planned it all.

And as the evening breeze filled the snowy sails, and the pretty yacht went skimming like a seabird over the waters, whose surface was just silvered with the light of the rising moon, the young student's voice blended in a German boat-song, whose rich melody rivaled Fenton's grandest operatic efforts.

The young girl listened, entranced, while the full, deep notes floated out over the shining waves and were echoed by the overhanging hills. A strange quiet stole over her; she seemed drifting down a shadowy river into a beautiful land of dreams.

Even after the song ceased she sat still and silent, looking so beautiful in this new mood that Laurence could not take his eyes off her face.

"I'm going to take a smoke," said Herbert, lazily, rising from his seat. "I know you hate a pipe, Fan, so I'll get out of the way. You'll make a model husband in that respect, Grey. You'll never offend a lady's affections by a vile meerschaum, while I—it would be a hard pull, I think, between a pipe and a wife."

"I'll tell that on you, sir!" said Fannie, with a threatening nod, as Herbert went off. "A pipe and a wife, indeed! Was there ever such an odious comparison?"

"Not so odious, after all," said Laurence, with a grave smile. "The pipe is an emblem of peace, rest and comfort; its influence is to soothe, to pacify and cheer."

"You wouldn't weigh your wife and pipe in the same balance?" she said, laughing.

"No; there is nothing on earth I would weigh in the same balance with my wife—if I ever am fortunate enough to have one," he added.

"Oh, you'll have one, of course," said Fannie, lightly. "You're just the man to marry; and I really think you'll make a model husband, Laurence."

"Do you?" he asked, in a low tone. "Why?"

"Oh because—because you're so quiet, and steady, and thoughtful. I know you'd never worry your wife by being selfish, and cross, and cranky, like some men do. Dear me!"—Fanny shook her head as the weighty subject struck her in its full force—"I declare, I don't see how some women put up with their husbands at all!"

"Perhaps they love them," suggested Laurence. "Love teaches patience, you know."

"It wouldn't teach me patience," answered Fannie, giving her sailor hat an aggressive little twitch. "I couldn't put up with a cross, cranky, worrying man—not if I loved him to distraction."

"But if you loved him, he would not seem cross, cranky and worrying," answered Laurence, with his quiet smile.

"I'd have eyes and ears," said Fannie, quite indignantly. "I could see and hear what he did and what he said. Love would never make me blind."

"I think it would," answered Laurence, looking tenderly at the sweet young face that was so fresh and childlike in its innocence. "Love makes all of us—the wisest and most far-seeing—blind as well as deaf. We will not see—we will not hear."

"You seem to know all about it. Do you speak from experience?" asked Fannie, archly.

"Yes," was the reply, in a low tone that made Fannie repent of her thoughtless question. "I do speak from experience. Would you like to hear my love story, Fannie?"

"Oh, dear, no! That is, I didn't mean—"

She stopped, blushing and embarrassed—she who could support Fenton's daring compliments with such smiling equanimity, who could laugh at Fenton's most ardent vows.

"I know that you didn't mean to ask my confidence," he answers, sadly; "nevertheless, I give it to you freely. I do love, I have loved for years, one so bright, so gay, so beautiful, that it would be folly to ask her to step from her own sunny sphere and share my humble lot.'

'Why, you are not poor, Laurence," she said, moved by a sweet, womanly sympathy at the brave, pathetic resignation of his tone. "Your father is quite well off, I thought."

"Aye, well off," was his answer. "But only while he lives will I profit by his assistance. My education is all I ever will accept from my father. I am a man, and able to work for myself. All that my father has he, by my own request, will leave to my sister, for women are weak, and should be independent of a world that yields success only to the strong. I have my own battle to win, my own way to work. I can do it and I will."

"And won't she?" Fannie looked up into the handsome face of the man beside her with earnest, friendly interest—"won't the lady wait for you, Laurence? It is so good and generous of you to feel this way toward Marian. I think she—the young lady, I mean—would surely love you better for it."

"Love me better?" he echoed, bitterly. "She does not love me at all. I am nothing—nothing to her!"

"You don't know," said Fannie, encouragingly. "I am sure if she knew what a fine fellow you are she couldn't help loving you a little, Laurence."

"A little—only a little; that is all I ask,' he answered, eagerly. "If she would only love me a little."

"Girls are so queer, you know," said the pretty little mentor, confidentially. "You don't understand her, perhaps, Laurence. Perhaps you're too—too modest and retiring. You mustn't be afraid of her. Just speak right out, and tell her that you love her with all your heart, and that you will work for her, and win her, if she will wait long enough for you; and then—and then, even if she says no at first, don't take it, for you know, Laurence," continued the little traitress to her sex, "girls always say no at first, even if they're dying to say yes."

"Fannie! Fannie!"—the girl started like a frightened fawn at the new tenderness in her companion's voice, the new light in his eye—"are you only maddening me by your words, or are you, indeed, blind, blind to the love that has worshiped you since you were a laughing, bright-eyed child, the sunbeam, the gladness, the beauty of my life, even then—even then? And now—now I take you at your words! I come to you with my future, of struggle, privation, yet of final—aye, speedy—success, I say to you, my darling, my darling, I love you with all my strength, the fervor, the endurance of a heart that has loved but once, and can never love again. I love you! Can you love me a little, Fannie—only a very little?"

"I—I—" Fannie shrank back, and covered her face with her hands. "Not me, Laurence! Oh, you didn't mean me? Oh, I am so sorry—so very sorry! I didn't know—I didn't think! I like you so much, Laurence. I—I respect you so much."

"But you don't love me, I understand you," he answered, bitterly. "I expected as much, Fannie. I am not disappointed, dear. Only—only—"

He paused; his deep voice shook so that he could say no more; the strong man had been tried even beyond his strength.

"I am so sorry!" repeated Fannie, as penitently as a child who had just broken a costly vase, and was surveying the wreck dolefuly—"I am so sorry, Laurence! I wouldn't have had this happen for the world. And I do—I do"—Fannie was sobbing now—"I do love you just—just like I love Herbert, if—if that will do any good."

"Poor little girl!" The deep voice was steady again now. "There, there! it is all over now—all over. I told you that love was blind. I ought to have seen—I ought to have known better. Let us be friends, once more, Fannie—only friends—and think of me as you think of Herbert.'

"What the deuce was the matter with Laurence to-night, Fan?" asked her brother, as they wended their way homeward through the woods from the river. "The fellow didn't seem himself at all. What were you and he talking about so long?"

"Oh, dear! you won't be angry, Herbert?" said Fannie, clasping his arm and looking up into his face in her own pretty, winning way. "But—what do you think? He actually—actually proposed to me, dear—Laurence Grey! I never dreamed of such a thing!"

"Proposed to you, eh, Puss! And what did you tell him—yes?" asked Herbert, smiling.

"Yes?" echoed Fannie, in astonishment—"did I tell Laurence Grey yes? Why, of course not, brother! I would as soon think of marrying you!"

"Pshaw, Fan!" said her brother, in a vexed tone. "You don't know what you are saying. I believe, when it comes to choosing a husband, every woman turns a fool. You're blind, Fan—blind, blind."

CHAPTER XIV.

A Girlish Confidence.

Fannie went straight to Sybil's room on her return home.

It was midnight, and the old chamber of Basil Clive was flooded with the light of the midsummer moon; and, invalid as she still was, Sybil sat dressed, by one of the diamond-paned windows, that looked out upon forest, river and valley—the wide-reaching domain that Robert Clive called his own.

The sweet face that turned toward Fannie, on her entrance, seemed paler and sadder than usual. Perhaps Sybil had been weighing all these proud possessions against the woman's kingdom in which she could never reign—the kingdom of the heart.

"Did you have a pleasant time, dear?" she asked, as Fannie knelt beside, and twined her arms around her waist. "What! surely"—Sybil took a closer view of the pretty countenance—"why, Fannie, you have been crying! What is the matter? Has anything happened?" she said, nervously.

"Yes," answered Fannie, bursting into a fit of childish tears, "something has happened; and—and I am so miserable and wretched, Sybil, I don't know what to do! Herbert is—".

"What! something happened?" cried Sybil started to her feet, "to Her—to your brother? Oh, where is he? Let me see him! Where is he?'

"He is downstairs, I suppose. I don't mean anything has happened to him. I was only going to say—that—that he is as mad as fire because—because—".

Fannie broke down again, sobbing, too wretched to notice her friend's momentary betrayal of herself.

"What is the matter?" asked Sybil, in a voice that tenderness could tone into the softest music. "How have you offended your brother, dear? Why is he angry with you?"

"Because—because—I am sure I couldn't help it, and never dreamed of such a thing. I never flirted with him a bit. He was so poky—so good, I mean—and I'd as soon think of marrying my grandfather," concluded Fannie, emphatically.

"Marrying your grandfather? What are you talking about, dear?" asked Sybil, in natural bewilderment.

"Why, Laurence Grey, of course," answered Fannie petulantly. "He had to go and fall in love with me—with me!" repeated Fannie, as if it were the most surprising thing in the world. And I feel so horrid and mean, and wretched about it! and Herbert is cross because I won't have him, and says I'm a— a little fool!"

"Is that all?" asked Sybil, smiling, with a long breath of infinite relief. "I thought that something far more serious had caused the grief. You have given Mr. Grey his answer, and I should think that would be the end of it—that is, if"—Sybil's hand threaded the beautiful hair caressingly—"if you are quite sure of your heart."

"Sure of my own heart?" repeated Fannie, wonderingly.

Sybil smiled again.

"I mean, are you quite sure that you do not care a little for Mr. Grey? I thought him a very noble young man, Fannie. He has so much dignity, so much modesty, and so much talent."

"I suppose he has," said Fannie, dubiously, as if she had never reflected much on these accessories before. "He is real handsome, too, when he puts on a decent hat and a turn-down collar; and he sings—oh, Sybil, how beautifully he can sing!"

"Yet you don't care for him, Fannie?"

"Oh, yes I do—ever so much! We've played together ever since I was that high"—Fannie measured a Lilliputian's height with her hand—"and he always got me the prettiest flowers, and the ripest strawberries, and the rosiest apples. He trained my pony for me; and you know Terry almost talks. He brought me my mocking bird, and would always go to the ends of the earth for anything I wanted. I like him better—better—"

"Better than any one, you know?" asked Sybil, gently. "Are you quite sure of that, Fannie?"

"Yes," answered Fanny, hiding her blushing face on her friend's breast. "I think—no, I am quite sure—I like him better than any one, except those I love; for liking is not loving, is it, Sybil? I like him ever so much, but I could never, never love Laurence Grey."

"I hope you will never love one less worthy, dear," answered Sybil, softly; and then, shrinking, as a light footstep sounded in the hall without, she added: "Mrs. Wyllis is still up. Had we not better say good-night?"

"Oh, don't mind her!" answered the young mistress of the Towers, carelessly. "Wyllis is a regular old cat. She is always prowling around at untimely hours, watching the servants, and watching the lights, and watching everything. I don't believe she ever sleeps at all. But perhaps you are tired, darling. I am forgetting how sick you have been. Why are you sitting up so late? And your dress is all damp with dew! Surely, you have not been out in the night air, Sybil?"

"Only for a little walk at sunset," was the low reply. I was lonesome, and it was so beautiful out; but—"

Sybil hesitated. How could she frame the warning that rose to her lips? How could she tell this laughing, thoughtless girl of the dangers that surrounded her happy home? How could she speak without compromising her father's safety, her father's and Rizpah's?—those two desperate, maddened beings, leagued together against the innocent and unconscious children of Robert Clive?

"I don't think it is very safe to walk in these woods alone," Sybil added. "I—I have heard that some—some lawless characters have been seen near here. It is well to be careful, Fannie."

"Oh, dear, I'm not afraid," answered the young heiress, laughingly. "Everybody knows papa, and almost everybody fears him. Wherever else they may go, you may be sure the 'lawless characters' will keep clear of the Clive place. Papa is a regular bugbear to all the thieves and tramps in the neighborhood."

"But—but"—oh how hard it was to speak with Fannie's arm about her waist, with Fannie's breath upon her cheek!—"there might be some daring and desperate enough to defy even your father. I—I heard of—of a man once—a man driven to desperation by a real or fancied wrong—who for years and years haunted his enemy's grounds, cast his shadow upon the threshold; nay, even"—Sybil's voice sank to a thrilling whisper—"found a secret entrance to the very house. And all the time this enemy, proud and powerful as your father, was unconscious of the danger that threatened him, and even more darkly threatened his. For he had children, Fannie—noble, beautiful children—and upon them had descended the legacy of hate and revenge. It was on these children this man had sworn to visit the father's crime; it was the children who were doomed to—to—Oh, heaven!"

Sybil stopped, shuddering all over; for the door had opened noiselessly, and the black-robed figure of Mrs. Wyllis stood, a listener, upon the threshold.

"Miss Fannie," she purred softly, as the two young people started at sight of her, "your lamp has burned so low that I fear it is dangerous. If you have no objection, I will leave a candle in its place. There have been so many dreadful accidents of late that one cannot be too careful"—her sleepy eyes took one of their quick, stealthy surveys of the room—"one cannot be too careful."

"Oh, dear, what a poky old thing you are, Wyllis!" said Fannie, petulantly. "I know you mean it is time we were in bed; so, why don't you go? Good-night, Sybil. I won't walk in the woods alone any more, for your story has fairly made my flesh creep."

As she retired to her own room, the young lady asked:

"I wonder if papa has any enemies, Wyllis?"

"I suppose he has, Miss Fannie," was the quiet rejoinder. "There are few men like him who haven't."

"Do you suppose that he—that my papa—could ever have done any one harm?" asked Fannie, indignantly.

"Of course not," answered the housekeeper, softly. "Only, my dear, as you will live to learn, envy and jealousy make the worst kind of enemies. It does not need harm. But why do you ask?"

"Oh, for no reason in particular," answered Fannie, evasively; "only—only"—as the young lady confided to her own pretty image in the mirror, a few minutes later—"Sybil did talk so very queer. It sounded—it really sounded as if she were telling that story about papa."

"Has he an enemy?" repeated Mrs. Wyllis, softly to herself, as she stole noiselessly along the carpeted hall, and paused for a moment to listen at Sybil's door—"has he an enemy? Aye"—and her face lit up with a crafty smile of triumph that no mortal eye had ever seen upon its placid features—"he has one at his threshold, at his fireside—aye, at his very meal! An enemy that will not falter until she gains her end!"

CHAPTER XV.

Miss Marian Investigates.

Feminine curiosity was perhaps the least objectionable of Miss Marian Grey's, distinguishing characteristics but feminine curiosity she certainly possessed to a remarkable degree.

She had been in a fever of excitement since the night when the strange visitor came to her father's study, and her natural curiosity, stimulated by a morbid woman's pique against the man who defied her charms, deprived her of peace and rest.

That there was some dreadful skeleton closeted at Clive Towers she had little doubt; but how could she bring that skeleton to light?—how discover the awful secret this proud family had so effectually concealed for so many years? For not even the malicious gossip of a country neighborhood, where any shaft against the lord of the manor would have been feathered by a hundred eager tongues, had not as yet touched the calm dignity of Robert Clive.

He had always been honored, respected—a little feared, perhaps—but not loved.

Several attempts that Miss Marian made to sound her father having proved ineffectual—the old lawyer being as impenetrable as one of the iron safes that contained his legal documents—the worthy daughter of Mother Eve arrayed herself one morning, in a becoming walking-garb and started out on a tour of investigation.

Her path led by the handsome gateway of Clive Towers, and she looked in at its velvety lawn, and flowery terraces, and spraying fountains, with an envious and malicious eye.

The stately splendor of her neighbors had always awakened a petty jealousy in her breast, but hitherto that jealousy had been softened by the hope of calling herself one day mistress of all.

But now—now it was very evident Herbert did not care a pin for her—it was quite as evident that he cared for another; and Miss Marian felt that to see a rival installed as lady of Clive Towers would be more than she or any other woman would quietly bear.

She would take up a woman's weapons first, aye, and would fight a woman's battle, no matter who was wounded in the fray.

It was a lovely morning, and the fervid heat of the summer sun was tempered by the dewy foliage of the trees, beneath whose shadows the road wound like the pillared aisle of some vast cathedral filled with emerald light.

Here and there, through intersices in the forest, the river gleamed like a sheet of silver; here and there an opening the woods displayed some handsome village or picturesque cottage crowning a verdant hillside or nestling in some sheltered vale.

It was to one of these cottages Miss Marian bent her steps—a very little bird's-nest of a place, embowered in vines and roses, until nothing but an adventurous chimney and a very determined gable remained visible to assert the human proprietorship of the place.

Here lived an ancient spinster named Miss Melicia Feenix, who was so learned in the legendary lore of the neighborhood that her authority on all matters pertaining to aristocratic precedence was beyond dispute. She had the most uncomfortable recollections of everybody's grandfather and the most decisive opinion of everybody's grandmother. Ancestral squabbles and ancestral sprees were equally fresh in this alarming memory. She knew whose great-aunt had taken in washing, and whose great-uncle had cobbled shoes.

There had been a little coolness between Miss Feenix and the Greys since the estimable Felicia had mentioned to a friend her reminiscences concerning one of the Grey's grandfathers, which were not very agreeable to their descendants; but, as Miss Marian decided that morning, it was very foolish to allow so trifling a matter to estrange her from a valuable friend. Perhaps her grandfather had been a little uncertain in his business matters—perhaps he had taken money under false pretenses. Miss Marian's secret regret was that he had not taken a little more.

At any rate, Miss Feenix's opinions and recollections were necessary to Miss Marian just now. If any one could let her into the secret trouble of the Clives, it was this maiden of terrible memory, this (as Herbert called her) pickle jar of the past.

(TO be Continued.)

Why She Refrains.

"It is true. My wife never scolds, never scowls, never frowns."

"Do you expect us to believe such nonsense?"

"I do. Why not? I can explain."

"Then explain."

"She doesn't scold because it twists her mouth; she doesn't scowl because it gives he crowsfeet, and she doesn't frown because it brings wrinkles."

"Good. But inwardly?"

"Don't ask me. The opinion is too harrowing."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Dairy Notes.

The co-operative creamery has in it great possibilities Many a time, however, the co-operative creamery is ruined by bad management. Perhaps it is unfortunate that the managing committee is too frequently composed of men that have a too great regard for economy. The co-operative creamery should have a good manager and he will cost money. A poor manager, that is, one without the necessary training, can be had at a much lower price than can the trained man. Yet it will generally pay to have a trained and experienced man to take charge, and unless the company or association is willing to pay a good salary and then give the manager a good deal of authority, there is little chance of success.

At what price can milk be sold wholesale and still return a profit? This is a question that we would like to have some of our readers answer. An eastern paper has been asking a somewhat similar question of many of its readers, and the reports agree in saying that when milk is sold at 2 and 2½ cents per quart it is a losing transaction. If this is so then the farmers that supply much of the summer milk to New York must certainly lose heavily, for the summer prices have in some instances dropped down to 52 cents per 100 pounds or about one cent per quart. Even at $1 per hundred pounds there is little if any profit in the transaction, when all things are considered. Conditions in the west differ somewhat from those in the east and we would like to hear the opinions of western shippers of milk.

Foot-and-mouth disease has again broken out in England after having been apparently extinct there for about six years. Reports say that the situation in one locality there is very serious, especially as regards cows in milk. In a single locality over 100 cases have been discovered, and, as many of the animals were canvalescent at the time of the discovery, it is evident that the diseases had been in existence there for a long time. The problem is, how have the six years been abridged over Have some animals been sick all the time, transmitting it from one to the other, thus completing a chain, or have the germs lain dormant in some material or other? Whatever the answer may be, it is quite evident that care was not used to the degree it should have been. If a veterinarian had been called when the first cow fell sick with some "unknown disease," the thing might have been nipped in the bud. As it is, it will probably be a hard task to corral the diseased cattle, for without doubt some have gone from the infected herds into herds far distant. American farmers and dairymen should take the lesson to heart. Contagious diseases can be kept down only by cleanliness and vigilance.

To the Work-Weary Plow Horse.

Alas, poor horse! How few are your days and how manifold your miseries! When joyful June time sees your advent into this "sphere of usefulness" and the farm boy hails you with delight, how auspicious the season, how fresh the air; but how long and weary are the hours when mamma is away at work and how sweaty she is when she comes back and you hungrily suckle at her over-heated udder! How badly that milk agrees with you, to be sure! It makes your little stomach ache, and after a while you are ashamed to look at your scattered, scurfy skin in the pelucid water of the drinking trough which was washed out when mamma was a colt. How proud you are when in the cool dewy morning you are allowed to accompany your weary parent on a trip to town! But, oh, what a difference when the noon-hour comes! Your poor little body is all wet with sweat; the kinks are all gone from your tail and your baby joints and muscles are all tired out. What bliss it is when the kind farmer allows your dam and you to roam unheeded the pastures fresh and green and the milk is just to your taste and full of nourishment. But how awful it is when the day comes for you to be separated from your doting mamma, and soon the cold snow comes, and you cannot tell folks just how fearfully it hurts your tender gums to chew those frozen, flint-like ears of corn and how difficult it is to swallow that rusty straw, woody fodder and wirey hay. How terribly the blizzards blow in at the cracks and crevices of the old tumbledown shed in which you are sheltered and how the ice water chills your young blood until with all these varied trials it is little wonder that in spring you look like a shadow and envy the Jersey heifer that has been well fed all winter because it is going to be a money winner soon while you have just to struggle up any old way.

And so it goes from year to year until, at last, they "break" you to work and almost break your ribs at the same time, just because you neither understand nor appreciate all in a minute the fearsome heavy things they tie you to with skin-chafing, ill-fitting harness. How sore is your poor neck and the red spots upon your shoulders show how the collar galls! How strange your feet feel after having been cut, rasped, burned, thrust through with nails and weighted down with great iron shoes! How harsh it seems to you after working faithfully in the dusty fields to be left at the noon hour with the harness upon your perspiring back while the owner washes himself, cools off, has a delicious drink of ice-cold well water, and then a generous meal. But you, poor beast, have to tackle the same old hay you left there in the morning and half masticate a few hard ears of corn which only seem to heat your blood more and more and make you less able for the afternoon's labor. How you long for night to come, and then how uncomfortable it is after all with the hard ill-bedded floor to lie on and the ammonia from the festering manure irritating your eyes and lungs and the mosquitoes buzzing and biting unhindered, while your master lies secure behind gauze protected windows and snores luxuriously upon a downy bed. The myriad host of flies that greets you when the robin sounds his opening note at sun-up is the vanguard of the army that will harrass you all day long as you toil wearily without the protection of even the cheapest kind of fly-net. How you long for water a dozen times a day when your task-master is taking a long, deep pull at the litle brown jug in the cool, wet, slough. How horribly hot the sun is as it beats down upon your unprotected head and how you would like to borrow the big straw hat your master wears. It is not to be wondered at that you get occasional attacks of sunstroke, colic, mud-fever, lymphangitis, and a hundred other kindred evils, or that the lice infest your skin and other parasites have eaten out mane and tail. It is a wonder, however, that you do not kick oftener and harder and that you live so long, for you are of all domesticated animals the most abused. When the time comes for you to go to "horse heaven" the relief must be beyond description and surely you of all beasts have been a good and faithful servant and have amply earned your rest.

How different, oh readers of the Farmers' Review, is the lot of the horse that happens to be born the servant of a humane master!

Poultry Notes.

One of the experiment stations has been conducting experiments to determine whether a dirt or board floor is best for poultry. The belief expressed by the experimenters is that a dirt floor is as good as a board floor so far as the health of the hens is concerned. The suggestion is made, however, that the floor should be built up by placing on top of the natural ground a layer of six inches of broken stone and covering that with dirt. For ourselves we can see no good in the dirt floor, unless it be its cheapness. If the floor is compact there must be a constant upward movement of soil moisture, which is not a desirable thing in a poultry house. Then, too, it must be exceptionally well constructed not to become damp in wet weather. Too often when a dirt floor is used, prowling animals dig under and get at the fowls, which is not the case where there is a good board floor.

The use of sand or straw in the scratching pens may have some effect on the habits of the hens, as to their places of laying. There is a preference to the cut straw if the hens do not get into the habit of using it for laying their eggs. Where old hens are accustomed to nest boxes the chances are that they will continue to use them for that purpose. The trouble will be with the young pullets. They do not seem to be very well fixed in their ideas as to where is the best place to deposit their eggs, and it is no unusual thing to find their eggs on the bare floor. Where there is a scratching pen with a good lot of cut straw they find it a very good place to drop eggs. In that case remove the straw for a few weeks or substitute sand for it.

We believe that as far as possible old hens should be used for the production of eggs for sitting purposes. The result of using eggs from mature hens is to grow birds that will be naturally strong and healthy and naturally able to overcome any bad situation they may be forced to pass through. With other animals the offspring of the mature individuals is hardier and generally larger in size than the offspring from immature individuals. For instance, in the last issue of the Farmers' Review, one sheep breeder reported that one nine-year-old ewe had to be helped in her lambing, but her lamb weighed 17 pounds at birth. The man that wants to constantly improve his strain of fowls will find the using of mature birds one of the most potent factors in obtaining his ends.

One method of fattening geese in France is to put the birds in a barrel, in which a number of holes are bored, each large enough to permit the birds to put their heads through. The barrel keeps them confined and thus prevents exercise, which is the object of the confinement. Outside of the barrel food is placed in abundance, and the geese spend most of their time eating. This food is mostly a paste made of barley, buckwheat and sometimes Indian cornmeal. Milk and potatoes are also fed, where they are easily obtainable.

It is said that Paris restaurant keepers are drawing largely on stocks of poultry in American cold storage warehouses for the supplies with which to feed the exposition crowds that will soon throng their city. One cold storage firm in Chicago has already sent forward five carloads of broilers for the Parish market.

Two Good Cows.

S. Hoxie, superintendent of the advanced registry, Holstein-Friesian Association, writes to the Farmers' Review as follows: Of the cows tested, the two most remarkable are those of Beryl Wayne, a cow between seven and eight years old, with a product of 24 lbs. 3.8 oz. butter, 80 per cent fat, or 22 lbs. 9.9 oz. butter at 85.7 per cent fat; and of Lilith Pauline De Kol, a cow about three and one-fourth years old with the unprecedented product of 24 lbs. 7.4 oz. butter, 80 per cent fat, or 22 lbs. 13.3 oz. butter at 85.7 per cent fat to the pound. At my request both these cows were retested by Prof. C. B. Lane of New Jersey Station, and the first tests fully confirmed.

Fertility of Duck Eggs.

A poultry writer tells of his experience in getting fertile duck eggs. He says that one year he mated one drake with two ducks and all the eggs were fertile. The next year he mated two drakes with four ducks and none of the eggs were fertile. He wants to know if one drake neutralized the other.

A Mother's Tears.

"I Would Cry Every Time I Washed My Baby."

"When he was 3 months old, first festers and then large boils broke out on my baby's neck. The sores spread down his back until it became a mass of raw flesh. When I washed and powdered him I would cry, realizing what pain he was in. His pitiful wailing was heart-rending. I had about given up hope of saving him when I was urged to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla, all other treatment having failed. I washed the sores with Hood's Medicated Soap, applied Hood's Olive Ointment and gave him Hood's Sarsaparilla. The child seemed to get better every day, and very soon the change was quite noticeable. The discharge grew less, inflammation went down, the skin took on a healthy color, and the raw flesh began to scale over and a thin skin formed as the scales dropped off. Less than two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, aided by Hood's Medicated Soap and Hood's Olive Ointment, accomplished this wonderful cure. I cannot praise these medicines half enough." Mrs. Guerinot, 37 Myrtle St., Rochester, N. Y.

ALABASTINE

ALABASTINE is the original and only durable wall coating, entirely different from all kalsomines. Ready for use in white or fourteen beautiful tints by adding cold water.

LADIES naturally prefer ALABASTINE for walls and ceilings, because it is pure, clean, durable. Put up in dry powdered form, in five-pound packages, with full directions.

ALL kalsomines are cheap, temporary preparations made from whiting, chalks, clays, etc., and stuck on walls with decaying animal glue. ALABASTINE is not a kalsomine.

BEWARE of the dealer who says he can sell you the "same thing" as ALABASTINE or "something just as good." He is either not posted or is trying to deceive you.

AND IN OFFERING something he has bought cheap and tries to sell on ALABASTINE'S demands, he may not realize the damage you will suffer by a kalsomine on your walls.

SENSIBLE dealers will not buy a lawsuit. Dealers risk one by selling and consumers by using infringement. Alabastine Co. own right to make wall coating to mix with cold water.

THE INTERIOR WALLS of every church and school should be coated only with pure, durable ALABASTINE. It safeguards health. Hundreds of tons used yearly for this work.

IN BUYING ALABASTINE, customers should avoid getting cheap kalsomines under different names. Insist on having our goods in packages and property labeled.

NUISANCE of wall paper is obviated by ALABASTINE. It can be used on plastered walls, wood ceilings, brick or canvas. A child can brush it on. It does not rub or scale off.

What a story of suffering that one word tells. It says: "I am all tired out. It seems to me I can hardly take another step. I haven't a particle of ambition. I can't do half the work I feel I must do. I am weak; nervous, depressed, discouraged."

That's Impure Blood

Now you know what the trouble is, you certainly know the cure,—a perfect Sarsaparilla. "Sarsaparilla" is simply the name of the medicine, for in a perfect Sarsaparilla there are a great many remedies. Some act by taking out the bad; others, by putting in the good.

You want a Sarsaparilla that will make your blood pure this spring, a Sarsaparilla that will make it rich and strong, a Sarsaparilla that is a powerful nerve tonic. You want the strongest and best Sarsaparilla that can be made.

That's AYER'S

"The only Sarsaparilla made under the personal supervision of three graduates: a graduate in pharmacy, a graduate in chemistry, and a graduate in medicine."

"Last July my oldest daughter was taken sick, and I was on my feet, it seemed to me, night and day for weeks taking care of her. I had no other help than that which my husband gave me, and by the time daughter began to mend I was down sick myself. I was discouraged, and did not care much whether I lived or died. My husband got me a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and its effects were magical. Two bottles of this medicine put me on my feet and made a well woman of me."—JANE M. RATTLESNAKE KING.

A MAN CONDUCTS A REPTILIAN FARM.

Abner Dodge of California Has Followed the Peculiar Business for Twenty-Five Years—Characteristics of Rattlers.

A great deal has been written about cattle kings, horse kings, copper kings and money kings, but the distinction of being the rattlesnake king belongs to a queer old character named Abner Dodge, who lives in San Bernardino, Cal. He served in a New York regiment during the civil war and afterward sought his fortunes in the west. For some years he was a trapper and hunter, but about 12 years ago he suffered a severe fall in the San Antonio canyon and has since devoted his entire time to the hunting and cultivation of rattlesnakes. He lives in a small cabin near the headwaters of Lytle Creek Canyon on the San Bernardino spur of mountains in the Sierra Madre range. He is a bachelor and his only companion is a green, lanky lad of 14, whom Dodge has adopted. The old man dresses in self-made clothing of skins and rough woolens of all hues and fits and is always a subject of keen interest to the many travelers in that section of the country. He is well informed and evidently received a good education in his youth. His long life among the wilds of the mountains and canyons have had their effect upon him, and he is now a typical mountain character. Abner Dodge and his boy assistant get their livelihood from the sale of rattlesnake oil to the druggists in the mining regions of California and Arizona, and also by selling the dry skins and rattles from the snakes to the dozens of curio shopkeepers in southern California towns, where eastern tourists flock every winter. The old man roams over the mountain sides, searches through irrigating ditches and arroyos, climbs up and down in canyons, and travels the country for miles around in search of rattlesnakes, with now then a shot at some game. He has been in the rattlesnake business about 25 years and in that time has handled perhaps 4,000 snakes. He gets about 40 cents worth of oil out of each snake. The oil is in pure, white fat that lies in the strips along each side of the rattler's intestines near the backbone. The fat is tried out carefully in earthen pots. The snake season opens in April and lasts until December. During this time Dodge and his boy assistant are kept very busy searching for the venomous reptiles. Owing to his long experience with the snakes he is considered an authority on them. As he says "I have lived next door neighbor to the critters for 25 years and I ought to know something about them." He says there is not a wiser or more curious specimen of life in the brute creation than the rattler. Although he is attached to them in a way, he would not trust one for a moment if it was in striking distance. They want to be left alone and never show any disposition to become familiar. Dodge has a pet rattler which he calls "Doctor." He raised him from the time that he was 2 months old, and from him has learned many characteristics peculiar to rattlers. The old man's observations have also set aside many theories regarding the habits of rattlers. They do not strike unless they are hungry. When a rattler has killed and swallowed enough for one meal, anything that is left can crawl on him and tumble him around and he will not offer the least objection. People all over the world believe that when a rattlesnake is shedding his skin he gets blind. There is no mistake that his eyes do get covered with a bluish film at that time, but just put a mouse in his cage and he will coil up and send for it and hit it in the neck every time. A rattlesnake always strikes his prey before he eats it; but you may fill his cage with rats or mice or frogs, or anything else he likes, and he'll never touch one of them unless he's hungry. A mouse every other day will make a rattler fat in a very short time. When a rattler is taken into captivity he will often not eat or drink anything for months, and some have been known to continue the fast for 14 months.

The old snake farmer has never been able to ascertain how the snakes get their old skin off. He says that he has gone to bed at night and left his snakes without their showing any more signs of peeling themselves than sticks of wood, but in the morning their old clothes would be lying in one corner of the cage and the snakes would be as bright in their new togs as bright patchwork quilts. The California rattlers change their skins twice a year, in July and in September.

The venom of the rattler acts differently upon various animals and upon different people. Some animals and birds will keel over dead as bowlders as soon as they were bitten; others live for hours and days, and some fully recover. Last summer, near El Monte, two mules were bitten, and both died within two hours. Dozens of mules have been bitten and were well again in a day or two. Hogs are impervious to the bites of rattlers. The venom has no effect upon them and they are great hunters of the snakes. They grow fat on them as a diet. Dodge once had a hog that he used to help him hunt for the reptiles. When the hog would scent or scare up a snake, Dodge would rush ahead and kill it before the hog could reach and devour it. The effect upon human beings depends to a great extent upon temperament and physical condition. Some people die in a few hours after suffering intense agony unless relieved by whisky or ammonia, while others will show only slight signs of the poison for perhaps a day or two. It is best on all occasions to follow the advice of Mr. Dodge and not get within striking distance of the reptiles.

AS FATE WOULD HAVE IT.

Why the Arkansas Man Kicked Himself Down Hill.

Many years ago an Arkansas youth on leaving the home of his sweetheart late at night, received a severe kick as he stepped out of the door. His beloved had not responded definitely to his proposal of marriage, but had assured him that she would soon let him know what she could do for him. He, unfortunately for two tender hearts, took the kick for an answer and departed for a far and wild country. Here he brooded over his wound and his broken heart until his beard grew down to his knees and his nose became Roman. As fate would have it, as fate always has it, he turned up late one sad, sad evening when the strawneck hens were quarreling on the roost and the brindle cow was lowing mournfully for her hungry offspring. A young man some six feet tall met the lonely visitor. It was one of seven sons, born from time to time, unto his old love. Explanations followed. It was not the girl who kicked him thirty years before. Oh, no! It was her angry father. She loved him. It was all clear now. He went out to the horse lot, cut off his beard with the sheep shears and kicked himself down the hill.

SPEND MONEY ON PHOTOS.

At a meeting of prominent photographers some time ago it was agreed that the actresses of this country spend from $600,000 to $750,000 a year for photographs. An actress who is at all known must scatter her pictures with a free hand. They are needed for the newspapers and advertising posters, for the theaters themselves, and for innumerable friends and admirers.

Lillian Russell, it is said, can not have spent less than $25,000 for photographs since she began her stage career. Hundreds of persons she has never met write her for pictures. It is not vanity that makes the actress haunt the photographer—it is necessity.

Until a few years ago Miss Russell always responded to requests for photos, but finally determined the cost was too much and gave her photographer permission to sell prints. A few years ago Miss Russell spent $500 at one time for a stock of photos and a month later did not have one left.

Calve has spent a great sum of money on her photographs. She has given sittings to the prominent photographers in almost every big city of America, England, Italy, Germany and France. It is said Nordica could have bought a sealskin with the money she spent in one month on the photographer.

Actors spend just as much, if not more, on their photos as the actresses. One leading man in particular squanders about $50 every month this way. He poses regularly and there are many more like him.—Chicago News.

Where Lilies Bloom.

Cape Colony, Natal and the Transvaal are flower-decked lands, and many of the flowers have perfumes subtle and refreshing. In Cape Colony, for many miles between Paarl and Cape Town, the line is bordered with so-called "pig-lilies." Near Ceres there are great fields full of these snowy white blooms with their orange-yellow pistils. In Pretoria roses are prolific; in fact most of the streets are bounded by rose hedges throughout their length and the flowers bloom with a frail pink monthly rose blossom for three-quarters of the year. The wild orchids of Swaziland are famous. There are at least twenty different kinds, and although they are no longer rare or valuable, they are extremely curious. Everything grows in the Transvaal, if the trouble is taken to plant it. The soil being all practically virgin and naturally rich, the smallest amount of attention is required, and the results obtained in a few months are simply marvelous. A well known English tenor, traveling in the Transvaal, once remarked that he believed that if you planted walking-sticks you could reap umbrellas in a fortnight.

Little-Known Painting.

Rosa Bonheur, painted one picture which is little known and which has never been exhibited, says the Boston Globe. It hangs on the wall of a ranch near North Platte, Neb. During the Paris exhibition of 1889 Buffalo Bill took the Wild West show to the French capital for the entire season. One of the most constant visitors to the exhibition was Rosa Bonheur. Several mornings each week she would appear at the camp with easel and color box and make studies of the horses, buffalo and Indians, afterward lunching in camp and making friends with "all hands." To the working up of these studies the last years of her life were largely devoted. One of her pictures of Indian life was sold in London for $65,000 just prior to her death. At this time Rosa Bonheur made studies from life of Col. Cody and his famous white horse Tucker, from which she painted the picture here referred to and presented it to the doughty colonel.

Pineapples Grown Under Cover.

Pineapple orchards in Florida are under cover. Ten or fifteen acres are planted and a covering about seven feet above the ground is spread over the orchard. This covering, of course, is arranged so that there are openings at certain distances, giving plenty of light and air for the better cultivation of the trees. The covering is to prevent the frost from affecting the orchards. This is but an experiment, but is meeting with a great deal of success.

Fear the Mexican Nose Bug.

Residents of Evanston, Ill., are in terror of a Mexican nose bug, which has escaped. It is equipped with strong pincers and a beak. Its mode of procedure is to fasten itself to the nose of a victim and then to insert its beak for a copious draught of blood. It can not be detached without tearing out a piece of the flesh. Death sometimes follows, as the pincers are poisonous.

CONGRESS

Resume of the Week's Proceedings.

The Senate.

Washington, April 24—Senator Chandler, from the senate committee on privileges and elections, yesterday submitted to the senate the report of that committee in the case of Senator Clark of Montana. The report is comparatively brief, covering only about fifteen pages of printed matter. It does not rehearse the testimony, but simply presents the findings of the committee and the reasons for its course. The finding of the committee is stated as follows:

"The finding of the committee is that the election to the senate of William A. Clark of Montana is null and void on account of briberies, attempted briberies and corrupt practices by his agents, and of violation of the laws of Montana defining and punishing crimes against the elective franchise."

In view of this finding the committee reports and unanimously recommends the adoption by the senate of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That William A. Clark was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the senate of the United States by the legislature of the State of Montana."

The report concludes with a strong recommendation for an early consideration of the case.

A two days' debate on the right of Hon. M. S. Quay of Pennsylvania to a seat as senator was begun immediately after the senate assembled yesterday. The debate was desultory in character. To-day at 4 p. m., under a special order, the case is to be disposed of. A direct vote upon the proposition to seat Mr. Quay may not be taken immediately after the close of the debate. Mr. Chandler has a motion pending to seat Mr. Quay, but it is held by the senate parliamentarians that any subsidiary motion will take precedence over Mr. Chandler's motion. These include motions to indefinitely postpone, to postpone to a definite date, to recommit to the committee to amend. In support of Mr. Quay's right to a seat speeches were delivered by Mr. Chandler of New Hampshire, Mr. Kenney of Delaware. Mr. Penrose of Pennsylvania, Mr. Platt of Connecticut and Mr. Quarles of Wisconsin delivered speeches in opposition to Mr. Quay.

The House.

The house entered upon consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill and the general debate which closed with the adjournment yesterday afternoon was devoted largely to discussion of pertinent matters. The minority of the committee dissented from the provisions in the bill relating to the extension of the pneumatic tube service, special fast mail facilities and the cost of railroad transportation, and these were the main subjects of contention.

The Senate.

Washington, April 25. — Hon. M. S. Quay yesterday was refused a seat in the United States senate, on the appointment of the governor of Pennsylvania, by a vote of 33 to 32. The entire time of the senate yesterday was devoted to debate upon the question, many of the greatest lawyers and orators in the body delivering speeches. As the day's session wore on and the hour for the final vote approached the galleries gradually filled until they were thronged with multitudes, while other multitudes were unable to gain admission. On the floor of the senate was every member of the body now in the city and scores of members of the house of representatives. The great throng listened with deep attention to the brilliant argument of Mr. Spooner in favor of the seating of the former Pennsylvania senator, and to the dramatic and fiery eloquence of Mr. Daniel of Virginia, who appealed to his colleagues to do what, on his oath as a senator he deemed right, and vote to do justice to him who was knocking at the senate doors.

As the big clock opposite the president pro tem. marked 4 o'clock there was a hush in the chamber. Mr. Frye, in the chair, announced that the hour for the final vote had arrived, and the question was the pending motion of Mr. Chandler to strike out of the motion declaring Mr. Quay not to be entitled to a seat, the word "not." Senators throughout the chamber eagerly followed the roll call, for all knew the vote would be close. The first sensation was caused by the failure of Mr. Pettigrew of South Dakota to answer to his name, although he was in his seat. When Mr. Vest's name was called he voted "no" in a clear distinct voice, thus dashing the last hope of the friends of Mr. Quay, who had expected confidently that the Missourian would vote for his long time personal friend. In perfect silence it was announced that the senate had denied to Mr. Quay the seat he has sought for some months past.

The House.

The house yesterday, Mr. Hill of Connecticut alone objecting, adopted the Foraker emergency resolution to continue the present officers in Porto Rico in office until the appointments are made under civil government act as amended by the committee on insular affairs. The amendments require that all franchises shall be approved by the president before they become operative and place certain restrictions, such as the issuing of stock or bonds except for cash, and inhibiting real estate corporations except such as is necessary to carry out the purposes for which they are created. About twenty pages of the postoffice appropriation bill were disposed of, the only substantial amendment adopted being one to give extra compensation to letter carriers who work in excess of forty-eight hours a week.

The House.

Washington, April 26. — The house yesterday put its heel upon the mail pneumatic system now in operation in New York, Boston and Philadelphia, and if its action stands the whole service will be crushed out. The postoffice committee had recommended an increase of the appropriation for this service from $225,000 to $725,000. The proposed increase was attacked by the appropriations committee under the leadership of Mr. Moody of Massachusetts with such vigor and success that in the end the house voted by 70 to 60 to strike the entire appropriation from the bill. Mr. Moody created a sensation by the manner in which he assailed the methods of the pneumatic tube company, and a direct charge that a former member of congress who had been a member of the appropriations committee, had been a holder of the stock of the company. He charged that a block of stock had been sent as a New Year's gift to a near relative of another member of congress, but to the credit of the member he said the dishonoring gift had been returned to the sender by the next mail. Although the tube service was highly commended by other members, these revelations transformed the sentiment of the house which has several times voted for the tube service into a decisive majority against its continuation in any form. Mr. Tawney of Minnesota offered as an amendment a bill to reclassify railway mail clerks but it went out on a point of order.

The Senate.

After a brief debate yesterday the senate agreed to the conference report on the Hawaiian civil government bill. The agricultural appropriation bill was passed, carrying a little over $3,000,000. The Alaskan civil government bill was under consideration for an hour but no progress was made. A joint resolution authorizing the exhibit of government relics at the New York printing exposition was adopted.

Washington, April 27. — Almost the entire session of the senate yesterday was devoted to consideration of the right of Nathan B. Scott of West Virginia to retain his seat in the senate. Mr. Pettus of Alabama, who alone of the members of the committee on privileges and elections is opposed to the claim of Mr. Scott to a seat, made an elaborate argument to sustain his views. Mr. Morgan of Alabama spoke in favor of his colleague's contention. Mr. McComas of Maryland, Mr. Turley of Tennessee, Mr. Chandler of New Hampshire, Mr. Teller of Colorado and Mr. Allen of Nebraska supported the resolution declaring Mr. Scott entitled to his seat. The case went over without action.

The House.

After four days of discussion the house yesterday passed the postoffice appropriation bill. The attempt to strike out the $196,000 for special mail facilities from New York to New Orleans and from Kansas City to Newton, Kan., met the fate it has ever since the appropriation was placed in the bill in 1883. No one demanded a separate vote upon the amendment striking out the pneumatic tube provision, and the house, by a large majority, stood by the amendment to give extra compensation to letter carriers for work in excess of forty-eight hours a week; although the carriers are said to be opposed to it. The bill to increase the salary of the director of the census to $7,500 and the salaries of supervisors of census to 2 per cent of the amount received by their enumerators was passed. The final conference report on the Hawaiian government bill was presented but not acted upon owing to the absence of a quorum.

The Senate.

Washington, April 28.—The senate yesterday voted upon the resolution declaring Nathan B. Scott to be entitled to his seat in the senate from West Virginia. The number of votes in the negative was only three. The Alaskan code bill took up the rest of the day save for an announcement concerning the Clark case.

The House.

The house broke all records yesterday by passing ninety-one private pension bills. Among them was one to pension at the rate of $40 a month the widow of the late Col. John M. Stotzenberg, of the First Nebraska, who was killed in the Philippines. Conference report on the Hawaiian government bill was adopted and now goes to the president.

The Senate.

Quite unexpectedly Saturday the senate was brought face to face with the proposition to extend its sympathy to the Boers in their war with Great Britain. In the midst of the consideration of bills of minor importance Mr. Pettigrew of South Dakota called up the following resolution and asked for its immediate consideration:

"Whereas, From the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other people to free themselves from European combinations; therefore,

"Be it Resolved, That we watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the South African republics against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty."

When Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts had formally ascertained that no committee had reported the resolution to the senate he moved that it be referred to the committee on foreign relations. Without a word of debate the vote was taken, 31 senators voting in favor of referring and 11 against it. As the vote disclosed the absence of a quorum an effort was made to secure one, but it was unsuccessful, and the senate adjourned.

The House.

The house passed a number of bills of importance and the balance of the session was devoted to the senate bill to create a commission to adjust the claims of citizens against Spain assumed by this country by the treaty of Paris. The bill developed considerable opposition and was finally recommitted to the committee on war claims, with instructions to report back a bill to refer the claims to the court of claims.

RAIN SORELY NEEDED.

Cloquet Country Lumber Interests Will Suffer Without It.

The lumber-sawing season for Cloquet started late last week with the steaming up of the Northern Lumber company's lower mill. The mill has about a month's run in the pond, and, although the stage of water in the river is now almost as low as at any time during the past year, it will be a very unusual thing if the drive is not in before the end of a month. Johnson & Wentworth started up Monday morning, and will, as usual, run night and day. They, also, have about a month's run of old logs. By the end of the week it is expected that all the mills will be in full operation. Rain was never needed in that vicinity so badly as at the present time. There has been very little moisture since October, and it will be impossible to make the drive of the river unless a good rain comes. Without it the mills cannot operate more than a few weeks.

The Great Northern Railway company has a large crew of men moving the general offices and warehouse of the Northern Lumber company across the tracks of the St. Paul & Duluth and Great Northern roads to the main part of the town, just west of their brick block. Duluth contractors have the work in charge. The Great Northern express from the west, due at Cloquet at 5:15 p. m., was held up three hours on account of the moving operations; and an ore train trying to get past on the St. Paul & Duluth, was wrecked and the track badly torn up.

A line of ore trains has been put on the Great Northern, hauling ore from Hibbing to the Superior docks.

Deputy Game Warden Bushnell recently raided the fishing creeks at Clitherall lake, near Fergus Falls, and arrested twenty-three men on charges of netting, spearing, using artificial lights and violation of game laws generally.

Mrs. L. A. Larson of Crookston, wife of the senior member of the Crookston Foundry company, was shot and instantly killed by her nine-year-old son. The boy picked up a loaded rifle and accidentally discharged it. The bullet entered her temple.

The eleven-year-old son of Mr. Dosdall, living on a farm near Weaver, had his left leg terribly mangled in the spokes of a wagon. There was a compound fracture of the thigh, the large arteries were laid bare and the bones protruded through the flesh. Amputation may be necessary.

A farmer living near Lake Amelia, near St. Cloud, lost his barn and granary by fire. Four horses, a number of cows and several hogs perished in the flames. 1,300 bushels of wheat and a quantity of other grains was also burned. The loss is $2,000; insurance, $800.

John Kittleson, Pete Baker and Andrew Sorley were arrested at East Grand Forks on complaint of Thorvald Straude, charged with grand larceny in the first degree. Straude alleges that while in Kittleson's saloon, a few days ago he was abused by the men, who relieved him of $400.

News of the Northwest

NO ASSISTANT BISHOP.

Bishop Whipple Decides That the Forthcoming Council Shall Not Name a Coadjutor.

St. Paul, April 27.—Bishop Whipple was present at the morning's session of the diocesean conference committee, which has been in charge of affairs since the death of Bishop Gilbert. The committee surrendered its authority to the bishop. Bishop Whipple decided that he would make no request for a coadjutor at the session of the council to be held in June, and in this decision the conference committee concurred.

MORE TIME FOR DEWEY.

School Children of the Northwest Present Him With Appropriate Watch.

Washington, April 27.—Admiral Dewey received a handsome gold watch, the gift of 50,000 school children of the Northwest. The idea of the gift was suggested by a schoolboy of Rosemount Minn. Only a contribution of a penny from each child was received. The watch is made of gold mined in the Philippines, and the alloy used in it is taken from a brass ring found on the Spanish ship Reina Christina, which was sunk by Dewey. Congressman McCleary of Minnesota presented the watch. The admiral was deeply touched by the peculiar nature of the gift. He made an appropriate reply.

TO OUST SQUATTERS.

Owners of Real Estate Sue for Possession of Land.

Sioux City, Iowa, April 27. — The Record company, a real estate concern here, has filed original notices of a suit involving title to about 10,000 acres of South Dakota farm land within the triangle formed by the confluence of the Missouri and the Big Sioux rivers near town. This company originally owned the ground, which was afterward cut away by the Missouri. It was subsequently restored by accretion and squatted on by numerous homesteaders. One hundred and nine persons are made defendants in the suit. The land is worth about $500,000.

FIRE AT BRAINERD.

One Residence, Two Barns and Contents Burned.

Brainerd, Minn., April 27.—Fire practically destroyed the residence of Jens Molstad, with its contents, two barns with contents, and practically destroyed the residence of J. H. Dickinson. Loss about $3,000; insurance, $1,800.

One Man Burned to Death.

Marinette, Wis., April 27.—More particulars of the big fire at Atkinson, Mich., have been obtained. Steven J. Brown, the head sawyer, was burned to death and a number of the workmen had their hands and faces burned while escaping from the burning structures. Brown's death was a tragic one. He had helped a fellow workman to save a box of tools and later lost his life in attempting to save some of his own personal belongings. His home was in Muskegon.

Big Strike at Duluth.

Duluth, Minn., April 27.—The freight handlers on the St. Paul & Duluth railroad dock struck yesterday afternoon and 100 men quit work. The trouble is over wages. They have been receiving $2 per day and 25 cents an hour for overtime. They demand $2.25 and 30 cents. As men are not very plentiful and navigation is just beginning to open it is expected that the trouble will be short lived and an early agreement reached.

No Open Saloons in Des Moines.

Des Moines, Iowa, April 27.—Every indication is now that there will be no more open saloons in Des Moines this year. Judge Bishop ruled on the certiorari application asked by the anti-saloon people. He holds that the opponents of the saloon are entitled to have a hearing at the canvas of the petition and that the court will review the proceedings of the supervisors in making the canvas.

Death From Lockjaw.

Winona, Minn., April 27. — William Krause, who was employed as coachman for Dr. Z. B. McGaughey, met with an accident last week, a heavy piece of timber falling upon his head and inflicting a severe flesh wound. On Monday of this week lockjaw developed and he died last night in terrible agony. He was sixty-four years of age.

Bridge Washed Away.

Billings, Mont., April 27.—The new county wagon bridge spanning the Yellowstone river near Laurel, and which cost $10,000, was carried out by the high water and is a total loss. The Northern Pacific was tied up for twelve hours by a wash-out near Grey Cliff, sixty miles west of here. The river rose eight feet in one night.

Farmers May Buy Plant.

Rush City, Minn., April 27. — The Pioneer Pasteurizing plant is to be sold at auction to satisfy the mortgage. A committee of farmers interested in starting a creamery at Rush City are soliciting among the farmers for shares to form a stock company to purchase the plant.

Senator Tillman to Speak.

Aberdeen, S. D., April 27. — Senator Tillman of South Carolina has advised Chairman W. E. Kidd, of the Populist state committee, that he will be here June 30 and July 1, and will deliver one or more addresses at the Tacoma Park assembly meetings.

Fatalities at Mines.

Lead, S. D., April 27.—A well known mining man named David C. Bunion was instantly killed while hoisting a pump in the Union shaft. He leaves a wife and three children. At Keystone Barney Ingalls fell 300 feet and was instantly killed.

Sewer for Winona.

Winona, Minn., April 27.—The contracts for the construction of the second sewerage district of this city were awarded yesterday. The total cost is about $60,000.

Thorsen's Body Found.

Mabel, Minn., April 27.—The body of Theodore Thorsen, the Hesper farmer who has been missing for a couple of weeks, was found in the river at Decorah. His money was still on his person, and it is thought the drowning was accidental.

Escaped Through Car Window.

Brainerd, Minn., April 27. — Phile Ward, who jumped his bond at Walker, was arrested here and taken back on the afternoon train. Near Pine River he jumped through the car window and again escaped.

N. P.'S BIG STROKE.

Gets Control of the St. Paul & Duluth.

New York, April 28. — Official announcement will be made to-day that the Northern Pacific has control of the St. Paul & Duluth. Until then no details will be made public, though parties in interest admit that the deal is completed. President Hill's objections to the deal were removed. President Mellen will stay here until all the formalities are completed. The control was obtained from the Clarence S. Day syndicate. It was Mr. Day's common stock that the syndicate bought some time ago, thus getting control. The syndicate's first intention was to have the Great Northern control the road. President Hill did not want the road, but would have rather seen the Milwaukee get it, realizing that the Milwaukee would otherwise build an independent line to the head of the lakes. That is what it may do now.

-o-

St. Paul, April 28.—C. W. Bunn, general counsel for the Northern Pacific, was seen last night in regard to the foregoing dispatch. He said it was possibly true. He had received no information from New York yesterday. He said that it was understood that J. J. Hill was largely interested in the syndicate that had recently acquired the common stock of the St. Paul & Duluth, and that if he had been correctly reported as having disposed of his interests, it was quite likely the Northern Pacific had acquired control of the road.

NATIONAL PARK IN MINNESOTA.

Bill Introduced for the Appointment of a Commission.

Washington, April 28. — The house committee on Indian affairs yesterday directed a favorable report on the bill providing for the creating of a commission to consider the establishment of a national reserve or park of the Leech Lake, Winnibigoshish or Cass Lake Indian reservations in Minnesota, comprising about 830,000 acres. The commission was fixed at three members from each branch of congress and an appropriation of $50,000 was allowed. The committee also reported favorably the bill allowing Indians in the Indian Territory to emigrate to Mexico, the emigration to be under the direction of the secretary of the interior and in bands of 300. Mexico gives the Indians an opportunity to return to their tribal relations and nomadic habits, and they prefer this to the restrictions now imposed upon them, and also as a means of avoiding the spread of tuberculosis or other diseases which have decimated them of late.

JUMPED FROM THE TRAIN.

Half-Breed Prisoner Makes a Daring Escape.

Ashland, Wis., April 28—Peter Manypenny, a half-breed who resides on the Odanah reservation, was indicted for distributing liquor among his tribe and was ordered brought to Ashland. While en route to this city yesterday he received permission from the Indian policeman in charge to go into the closet of the coach. While the train was going thirty miles an hour Manypenny crawled out of the window and the officer who was standing on the steps of the coach to prevent his escape, fell to the ground with his prisoner. The prisoner finally escaped to the woods.

RAIN AND HAIL.

North Dakota Receives Reminders of Summer's Approach.

Fargo, N. D., April 28. — The first hailstorm of the season occurred late Wednesday afternoon. It was accompanied by a typical summer thunder storm and followed by a magnificent rain. Ninety per cent of the wheat seeding is completed, and the rain could not have been more opportune. It settled the top soil and made the crop conditions absolutely perfect. The farmers are jubilant.

New Mining Companies Formed.

Deadwood, S. D., April 28. — New mining companies are being organized in the Black Hills at the rate of twenty a month. During the past thirty days companies have been organized with a total capitalization of $15,000,000. The Black Hills is to-day the nearest mining country to the East, and this fact is becoming more appreciated by investors.

Arrested on an Old Warrant.

Fargo, N. D., April 28—Mme. Massey, a notorious colored woman, who was run out of town last summer with other women of her class, has returned to Fargo from Rat Portage and was arrested on an old warrant. She claims to be here looking after the house she owns, and will make a fight in the courts to maintain what she alleges are her rights.

Is One Hundred Years Old.

Sparta, Wis., April 28. — Loren F. Wolcott of this city celebrated his 100th anniversary April 22. He was born in Burlington, Otsego county, N. Y., April 22, 1800. He has been married three times, his present wife being fifty-five years of age, whom he married when he was eighty-seven years of age. He has had nine children, all of whom he has outlived.

Horses Incinerated.

Bayfield, Wis., April 28.—Nine valuable horses owned by the Red Cliff Lumber company were burned at their camps at Sand river yesterday morning. Loss, $2,800.

Tell-Tale Pistol Near By.

Milaca, Minn., April 28. — A farmer by the name of Christianson was found dead in the town of Green Bush yesterday. A pistol was found lying a few feet from the body. The coroner will investigate.

Struck by Lightning.

Yankton, S. D., April 28.—The barn of Andy McKechnie of Walshtown was struck by lightning and burned. Twenty-eight head of cattle, nine horses and hay and oats were consumed.

Bones of the Leg Shattered.

Graceville, Minn., April 28.—By the accidental discharge of a shotgun Dr. Magoon, a dentist of this city, is liable to lose his leg. The accident occurred at Beardsley, eighteen miles west, where the dentist makes transient visits. Both bones in the left leg below the knee were shattered.

Depot Destroyed.

Warsaw, Minn., April 28.—The Chicago Great Western depot was burned to the ground at an early hour yesterday morning.

POSTMASTER AND PISTOL.

A Combination That Puts Burglars to Flight.

Comfrey, Minn., May 1. — Saturday morning burglars broke into three places in town—the postoffice, A. Emmerich's saloon and F. J. Ewing's barber shop. About $5 in cash was taken from a slot machine in the latter place. Only for Postmaster Ewing's appearance with a revolver in hand they would have taken all the stamps and about $25 which was in the drawer.

TWO BURNED TO A CRISP.

Wisconsin Woman and Her Granddaughter Meet a Horrible Death.

Junction City, Wis., May 1. — Mrs. Marie Hook and Sadie Hill, a granddaughter of Mrs. Hook, were burned to a crisp. It is supposed Sadie was burning brush in the yard and her clothes caught fire and in attempting to extinguish the flames Mrs. Hook's clothes also caught. It is not known just how the accident occurred.

WOMAN ARRESTED.

Charged With Sending an Objectionable Letter Through the Mails.

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 29.—Deputy United States Marshal Ludlow arrived here last evening with Mrs. Dora Murphy of Garretson, whom he arrested on the charge of having sent through the mails to Mrs. Dell Beadle of Onawa, Iowa, an improper and objectionable epistle.

Charged With Fraud.

Sparta, Wis., April 29. — Joseph Smith of this city has been arrested on charge of obtaining money under false pretense. He is said to have gone to Presiding Elder Martin and told him that he had been recently married and while on his way home was robbed. He asked the elder for money enough to get his wife to Sparta, which the elder gave him. Smith immediately came down town and spent the money. When Rev. Martin learned the facts he had Smith arrested.

Another Suit by Sage.

Winona, Minn., April 29. — Russell Sage has commenced another action. The town of Pepin and the city of Wabasha are the parties sued. Deputy United States Marshal Sheehan made the service on Thursday. The paper served is a command to the parties served to answer Mr. Sage's complaint on the first Monday in June, in the United States district court at Winona. It is understood that this is another attempt to collect the old Reed's Landing bonds.

Burglar Caught in the Act.

Pierre, S. D., May 1. — A bold burglary was attempted in the East Pierre postoffice and general store of D. J. Davis. The burglar, who gives the name of John Davis, broke out a large pane of glass, through which he entered the building, and was at work on the cash drawer when discovered. The breaking of the glass aroused the proprietor, who entered by the back door and had the burglar covered with a revolver before he knew he was discovered. The man was arrested on a charge of burglary.

Committed Suicide.

Appleton, Wis., May 1. — Herman Erb, Jr., a former mayor of Appleton, committed suicide by shooting. He had just returned from a Milwaukee sanitarium, where he had been under treatment for mental trouble. His condition was said to have been caused by worry over the Appleton library building imbroglio. Mr. Erb was one of the youngest mayors in the country, being but twenty-seven years old.

Woman Burned, Barn Destroyed.

St. Paul, May 1. — Mrs. Andrew Robinson of South St. Paul was severely burned Saturday afternoon; her clothes caught fire from a bonfire, and while the family was extinguishing the blaze from her dress the bonfire spread to the barn. The barn was destroyed and only hard work saved the house. Mrs. Robinson's burns are serious, but probably not fatal.

Boy Is Drowned.

Fergus Falls, Minn., May 1.—George Tyson, aged fifteen, was drowned here. He was sitting on the railing of the bridge with his younger brother, who fell in. He jumped in to save the younger, but being unable to swim, was drowned. The other boy caught hold of a fishpole and was saved.

Killed by the Train.

Racine, Wis., May 1. — The southbound flyer on the Chicago & Northwestern railroad struck a horse and buggy driven by John Deisler, a well-to-do farmer of Holicksville. Mr. Deisler was killed instantly, his body being terribly mangled. Mrs. Deisler was injured, though not fatally.

Killed in a Wreck.

Winona, Minn., May 1.—In a wreck on the Iowa division of the Northwestern road at Blue Earth City Joseph King, Winona, was instantly killed. His engine toppled over and he was pinioned beneath. The fireman, James B. Gile, also of Winona, was crushed, but will live.

Lonely Man Murdered.

Ottumwa, Iowa, May 1. — Josiah Carr, an aged farmer five miles north of here, was brutally murdered by an unknown man. The body was found in a cellar, where he had been dragged. He lived alone and was considered well-to-do.

Said to Have Been Careless.

Fleetwood, Minn., May 1. — Felix Rabja, a homestead settler, has been arrested here, charged with causing a forest fire through carelessness. His trial has been set for May 4.

Murder and Suicide.

Coloma, Wis., April 29.—Levi Myhill and wife were found shot dead in the road about seven miles west of here. The shooting was done by the husband, who fired four shots. Family trouble was the cause.

One Killed and One Injured.

St. Paul, April 29. — One man was killed and another seriously injured by a fall of scaffolding at the new state capitol at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The men were at work upon the scaffolding when it gave way and they fell fifty feet. Neither was killed outright.

Bones of Departed Braves.

Le Mars, Iowa, April 29. — While hunting young wolves near Richland, Henry Carr, discovered an old Indian burying ground. He dug up pieces of skulls, ribs, teeth, etc. It had not, to all appearances, been molested.

PEOPLES PARTY STATE CONVENTION MEETS.

Bryan, Towne, Lind—The St. Paul Victory—Presages of Success in All Directions—What the Farmers Say and Think.—State Administrative Points. Twin City "Prosperity" Pointers—The Week's Roundup of Political News and Comment.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, May 7, 1900.

That there will be effective co-operation of the allied forces in this campaign on both state and national issues, was made absolutely certain by the action of the Peoples party convention that selected delegates to the Sioux Falls convention, and in equal measure is Republican disappointment in the expectation of serious divisions. The latter were given all the color possible by the anti-reform press, magnifying each and every incident or utterance that shaded in such direction. But the rugged truth is that there was absolute harmony, and on test questions less disagreement than occurs ordinarily in the most "harmonious" political bodies. The convention was large, as well as harmonious, not less than 200 delegates being actually in attendance, while the authorized representation was not less than 400. As to character of the representation it is enough to say that it embraced that large body of intelligent, pioneer Peoples party men, to whom is due in a large measure the initiative of those principles and measures of state reform, the benefits of which the people are receiving in the administration of Governor Lind, which these men made possible. Among such men are S. M. Owen, Thomas J. Meighen, Editor H. G. Day, James E. Childs, C. J. Buell, Francis H. Clarke, Sturgeon Odell, N. C. Hardy, M. J. Daly, Geo. N. Lamphere, and a long list of others, not to mention that large number of Peoples party men throughout the state, who are by commission from Governor Lind, associated with him in the state administration. The sound discretion of the body was shown in the wise declarations by resolution, reaffirming the Declaration of Independence and former party tenets, pointing out the dangerous drift of Republican administration, and demanding return to the doctrines of the fathers, declaring most earnestly for destruction of the trusts, and, as to candidate, for "that man who will best combine all opposition to the present administration;" extending sympathy to the Boers, protesting against the treatment of Porto Rico, condemning the financial policy of Hanna-McKinley, and endorsing most heartily the administration of Governor Lind.

The endorsement of the Lind administration, out of the usual in a national body, was due to the strong feeling among the farmer delegates, who thus spoke from their own experience from substantial benefits. The idea was put into a ringing speech by such a delegate, who gave his experience of the price of wheat now and two years ago, when the market was about the same, the higher grade received now on the same wheat being the difference which he measured in his own pockets. One cent, two cents or more a bushel, whatever it was, it spoke more of practical political results than all the "resoluting" that could be done, and will answer more G. O. P. appeals this fall than anything else.

The delegation that at Sioux Falls this week will have registered the sense of the National Populists is very properly headed by that noble quartet, S. M. Owen, T. J. Meighen, P. M. Ringdal and S. H. Reishus, whose alternates are Judge Frank Ives, C. A. Nye, E. C. Lommen and D. H. Evans. The delegation was carried and cared for, as to transportation, by the Omaha, the delegations from outside parts of the state joining the others at the Twin Cities.

Outside of the convention work proper, there was everything to encourage. Talks with delegates and others showed that there is enthusiasm and deep interest in state and national matters, sure signs of good results. The counties are organizing thoroughly, especially the strictly agricultural counties. Special instances are Otter Tail and Kandiyohi. In the latter the young men are "in the saddle," and under the leadership of Editor Lawson are making things hum.

Without exception reports from the country were that Governor Lind is stronger with the people than he was in '98.

Significent of the hour's demand for the right men, was the action commending the vice presidential candidacy of Hon. C. A. Towne, and while enthusiastically urged, still the same feeling prevailed that has actuated Mr. Towne and his warmest friends, that all must be subject to the wise determination of the national conventions.

Such reports are very proper companion pieces to the magnificent victory of combined forces in St. Paul. The latter has knocked the Republican outfit silly. Everything was staked on St. Paul success, where Goppite victory would set the pace for the state boom it was hoped to plant. It was planted all right, but is several feet under ground, where all dead things go. It doesn't do to say that there is no more than local significance to this knockout. Every meeting of the local campaign had state and national politics in it. It was that "Lind and his men must be downed," the administration must be sustained. Van Sant, the supposed state leader, shouted this while "waving the flag" and making other Vansantian demonstrations. "We must set the pace for national success," was General Clapp's and others' oratorical burdens. Well, the pace has been set and the united, victorious forces will see that it is maintained.

In this connection will kind readers recall that this Letter distinctly and clearly predicted this success? Will goppite readers make a note that the same prediction is for overwhelming state and national success in November?

We stop the press to announce that Your Uncle Loren Fletcher has actully made a speech in congress, and that the Capitol roof has not yet fallen in.

And speaking of Twin City congressmen, this St. Paul defeat is a tough one for the prospects of Congressman Stevens.

And speaking of six other Minnesota congressmen, it is not yet clear whether they will be laid out by their own party in defeat for renomination, or the pig-sticking job be left to the reform forces in November.

The week's Philippine news summarizes the capture by Funston of a "rebel" warehouse filled with the archives of the Filipino republic before McKinley's soldiers scattered its congress, and the almost total annihilation of an American outpost by bolo-armed "niggers." The one calls for goppite rejoicing, the other for a pre-election appeal to "stand by the president."

Speaking of state action, how appropriate that Nebraska Republicans head their state ticket with a national banker for governor. And quite as appropriately is Corporation Senator Thurston placed at the head of the McKinley delegates. Yea, verily, the ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib.

About all the significance we can see in the Dewey Chicago affair is that his ability to stand a trip on the drainage canal would indicate that he had the endurance, at least, to run for president on a G. O. P. ticket.

While the True Americans have been acquiring the Hoars, Boutwells, Carnegies, Schurz and Edmunds, whom have the Republicans acquired?

Speaking of the national situation, those men of whom fortunately Minnesota possesses but a very few, who are so densely ignorant as to doubt Bryan's renomination, should know that each and every state convention, as fast as held, endorses him. The list to date stands:

Massachusetts, Nebraska, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Oregon, District of Columbia, Michigan, Kentucky, Iowa, Ohio, Idaho and South Dakota, by present action and state declarations since the last election. In every case, so far, delegates have been instructed for Bryan, and the Chicago platform reaffirmed.

The Michigan Democratic state convention sends a solid delegation to Kansas City instructed for Bryan and Towne. The resolution adopted regarding Mr. Towne was in the following handsome terms:

"We heartily approve of the nomination of the Hon. Charles A. Towne to the vice presidency and greet him as a native of this state, whose love of right and justice rose superior to partisanship, whose brilliant ability, fearless courage and statesmanship eminently fits him to be placed by the side of our greater leader as a joint standard bearer."

In state administration the wheels of good government and regard for the people's interests keep steadily turning.

Public Examiner Pope has called the banks for statement to the close of business April 30.

Superintendent Lewis is after a set of scoundrels that have been working school districts by sale of charts, on which a divide is said to be given to school officers when necessary. The parties in the schemes will hear from Professor Lewis vigorously.

The game and fish commission, by Agent Beutner, is about closing spring distribution of fish, and the streams of the Southeastern part of the state which were long ago depopulated of the finny tribe will be generously restocked, the streams from Lake City to Minneiska having received 3,000,000 trout. Those streams were in former years alive with trout, and it is believed that they will soon be as good fishing there as in the early times. These streams and the small inlets into Lake Superior are the only waters of Minnesota where the gamey fish will thrive. The commission expect under the vigorous administration of Agent Beutner, to plant fully 50,000,000 of wall-eyed pike during the present season.

State Superintendent Lewis has issued the biennial report of the department, highly complimentary notices of which abound in our state press. The report is pronounced the ablest issued from the department in years.

The trust wire and steel mills shut down, and their 10,000 to 12,000 employes out of work; the Vanderbilt line men at Buffalo out on strike; Chicago in the worst labor troubles for many years; strikes of builders, woodworkers and of plumbers in most of the leading cities of the country, such are a few of the McKinley "prosperity" pointers. And while mills are closed or closing, farmers' products lower and lower, Hanna is raking together his campaign corruption fund to give the country some more of the same sort.

And, as to the Twin Cities, those local papers which each week gloss over the situation as much as possible, are positively funny. Thus the regular real estate "column" has "things moving," while the current news shows that labor is idle, building nothing to speak of, and transfers by mortgage foreclosures about all the deals there are.

G. S. C.

STATE POLITICS

Prominent Michigander's Review of the Situation in Minnesota.

Lind vs. Pingree—A Distinction With a Very Wide Difference.

Gleanings Here and There of the State and National Campaign.

Hon. G. R. Malone, who is organizing traveling libraries in the state, writes to his home paper, the Lansing Democrat, as follows on the Minnesota politics, as he finds it, in an extended tour of the state:

Governor Lind, like Governor Pingree, holds advanced views upon social and political reform questions but, unlike Pingree, he had the good sense to come out of the Republican party when, in 1896, it unblushingly sold out all that was left of its Abraham Lincoln Republicanism in exchange for the imperialism of Mark Hanna and the money changers which he represents.

I would also add that Governor Lind and "Charlie" Towne are fast friends working together for the common good and that more than anyone else they seem to be the idols of the people of this state.

There is little doubt but that Governor Lind will be renominated and reelected by even a larger mapority than before (20,000 against a natural Republican majority of 40,000) and even Republicans admit that there is great danger that the electoral vote of the state will be given to Bryan.

The disgust of the people of the Northwest at the vacillating conduct of the president and Congress in changing from a course of "plain duty" and "anti-criminal aggression" to one of humiliating subserviency to unbridled greed and imperialistic coercion and subjugation at the dictation of Marcus Aurelius et al. is so intense that I have yet to see the first Republican paper in this state which does not in the strongest terms condemn the five Minnesota Congressmen who, under the hypnotic influence of the dollar-mark statesman, voted a 15 per cent tariff upon our brethren of Puerto Rico and decided that the constitution does not go with the flag—that we are an empire and not a republic and can have citizens in one place and subjects in another the same as England and other empires.

One reason why the outlook for victory in the state is so assuring is because the leaders of the "allied forces," both state and local, are working in the most cordial harmony and friendship. Though the Populists polled, I think, nearly 60,000 votes for their last candidate for Governor, I do not hear the slightest discord or difference of opinion as to who the candidates shall be (from what party they shall come) but all—except the middle-of-the-roaders—are planning and working together to win a glorious victory based upon the principle and hope that a government of the people, for the people and by the people may not perish from the earth.

In conclusion allow me to inform your readers of what seems to be an open secret in this state where Charlie Towne and other Silver Republican leaders are active in promulgating the doctrines of Lincoln and Jefferson. It is that at the Silver Republican national convention, to be held in Kansas City July 4, that body will not only nominate the candidates of the Democratic party—providing that party remains in the regenerated condition produced by its new birth at Chicago and does not evidence a disposition to go back to the flesh pots of Egypt—but will also change its own name from Silver Republican to Lincoln Republican, in honor of the great patriot and statesman whom both Bryan and Towne are the illustrious Pauline disciples.

We shall have two Republican parties, Abaham Lincoln Republicans and Mark Hanna Republicans, and it will remain for all the soldiers and true patriots to decide under which banner they will march. Yours for Lincoln Republicans.

G. R. MALONE.

"THINK IT OVER."

Under the caption, "Nailed to the Cross," the Waseca Times has the following condensation of what McKinley's 15 per cent government is to do for poor Porto Rico:

A Governor at $8,000 a year.

An auditor at $4,000 a year.

An attorney general at $4,000 a year.

An insular treasurer at $5,000 a year.

A secretary of the council at $4,000 a year.

A commissioner of education at $3,000 a year.

A United States district judge at $5,000 a year.

A United States district marshal at $3,500 a year.

A commissioner of the interior at $4,000 a year.

A marshal of the supreme court at $3,000 a year.

A United States district attorney at $4,000 a year.

A chief justice of the supreme court at $5,000 a year.

Four associate justices of the supreme court at $4,500 a year.

Three commissioners to codify the laws of the island at $5,000 a year each.

Five members of the executive council whose salaries are to be fixed by the Porto Rican legislature.

Figure them up—$85,500 a year besides the executive council of five, the members of the so-called legislature and the revenue officers, also appointed by him.

Think it over.

King George III. never usurped as much power as that over his American colonies.

Think it over.

SUPT. LEWIS' REPORT.

The state press speaks highly of the biennial report of the Department of Public Instruction, so ably presided over by Professor J. H. Lewis. A fair sample of these comments is at the hands of the Hastings Democrat, which says, in part:

"We are in receipt of the brochure of the eleventh biennial report of the state superintendent of public instruction, submitted by Superintendent J. H. Lewis, in which he gives many valuable ideas and suggestions for the building and remodeling of some of our school houses especially in the rural districts, as well as other matters pertaining to schools and their requirements in general, with cuts of plans and designs. The volume treats of the environment of the school room in detail, plans, models, surroundings, furnishings and equipments, heating, ventilating, etc., also improvement and beautifying of school grounds. Superintendent Lewis has carefully considered the subject and in connection with his own practical ideas gives many good ones from superintendents of note in various states. Governor Lind has also contributed some excellent thoughts on one of the pages of the book."

THE "WAYLAND HOYTS."

A Minneapolis Doctor of Divinity, bearing the somewhat euphonious name of Wayland Hoyt, but who found the clime scarcely congenial for his No. 6 head and over-worked vocal apparatus and removed to the also effete East, has been "seeing God" in McKinley imperialism, as he saw the hand of Providence in Bryan's defeat in 1896. It was before a body of Endeavorers that Hoyt made an imperialist speech, which is thus mentioned, and the results, by Chicago Public:

"Had some non-militant reverend expressed anti-imperialist views on that subject before such a gathering he would have been denounced for talking politics at a religious meeting, and Rev. Dr. Wayland Hoyt would doubtless have been among the first to complain. Yet the anti-imperialist could have justified himself with quotations from the Prince of Peace. There has been an assumption, however, among the Wayland Hoyts of the country that in some way the church and the administration are in partnership in the new sport of hunting down little brown men. But on this occasion this particular Wayland Hoyt had counted without his hosts. The 900 Christian Endeavor delegates are reported as having looked at him with something between anger, disgust and pity; and as having, when he concluded, all united in hissing."

THE DANGER FROM LAWLESS WEALTH.

Self-preservation is the first law of society, as well as the first law of physical existence. A monopoly tends toward industrial aristocracy; it tends to create a condition wherein a few will control all the means of production and transmit that control from generation to generation, while the masses struggle for a bare living, with no hope of progress or independence.

The influence of concentrated wealth is so great in the social and political world that a government of the people, by the people and for the people cannot long survive if industrial independence disappears. When the monopoly idea is carried to its natural and logical conclusion we will have a government of the trusts, by the trusts and for the trusts, with the large majority of the people more helpless than they are under an absolute monarchy.

There is no hostility to capital in this country. On the contrary, everybody is desirous of accumulating that valuable thing called capital, but there is hostility to some of the methods employed by those who possess large capital to overreach those who possess less capital. There is some hostility—though not as much as there should be—toward those who use large accumulations of capital to corrupt government and purchase special privileges, and then use the power acquired to destroy competition and trample upon the rights of weaker members of society. There is some hostility toward those who, in the acquiring of capital have not furnished to society an adequate return for the capital acquired.

If society is in danger the danger does not come from those "who are without means and who wish to have it without work," but for those who have means for which they did not work.

Bismarck, in addressing an audience of farmers a few years ago, told them that they would have to act together in order to protect themselves "from the drones of society, who produce nothing but laws." If we could to-day divide the people of the United States into two classes, placing in one group the producers of wealth and in another the non-producers, it would be found that the non-producing produced far more laws than the producers. So long as the non-producing element controls legislation the laws will be more favorable to those who speculate than to those who toil.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN,
In New York Journal, July 2, 1899.

Reports of the Lincoln Republican movement are that it is progressing with great promise. The only objection encountered so far is from the extreme silver regions, but as a general thing the strongest of the silver men are most earnest in their desire to see the old silver organization broadened so as to take in the newer issues.

How very appropriate that English school children should send a message of sympathy to the Republicans that McKinley's soldiers are fighting in the Philippines, in return for our messages to the South Africans.

The Metropolitan Trust company, Minneapolis, measures its McKinley prosperity by retiring from the loan and trust business. This is the more noteworthy from the fact that some of its officials have been the loudest mouthed to criticise those who long ago pointed out the inevitable result of the policy of which the said officials were so loud in their praise. One by one they all come down to taking their own medicine.

A forecast of what organized labor will ultimately do for McKinley in the Twin Cities is seen at Chicago, where his name is likely to be erased from the honorary membership it had received [illegible]

ROBERTS' ADVANCE

BRITISH TROOPS PICKETED ON THE VET RIVER.

Hard Marching Carries the British Forces Thirty-two Miles From Karee Siding in Two Days—Boers Are Out of Reach of British Shells—Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener at Brandfort—French's Cavalry Sweeping the Country Northward—Hunter Crosses the Vaal at Windsorton.

London, May 6.—The mounted infantry with Lord Roberts, among which are the Canadians, have picketed their horses on the south bank of the Vet river, eighteen miles north of Brandfort. The head of Lord Roberts' column has thus advanced thirty-two miles from Karee Siding in two days, or fifty-three miles north of Bloemfontein. Little powder was spent. The British work was hard marching, the Boers retiring out of reach of the British shells. The correspondents supplement Lord Roberts' plain statement with a few details. As Gen. Hutton, with the First mounted infantry brigade, drew near Brandfort he saw a khaki-clad body of troops ahead of him. He was surprised, but thought they must be British. Soon, however, they opened fire upon the British, who suffered heavily. They were the Irish-American brigade from Lourenzo Marques, and it is reported the Irish lost heavily. The Boer flag was flying over Brandfort as the British entered the town. Several British were found in the hospital. The Boer authorities gave up the keys to the public buildings to Capt. Ross. Lord Kitchener arrived at Brandfort at noon and Lord Roberts at dusk. Gen. French's cavalry are sweeping the country northward. The expectation is that will be continued toward Kroonstad. Although no prisoners were taken and although no hot pursuit was attempted the news greatly cheered London. Nevertheless it has not been received with the fine rapture that attended the first successes of Lord Roberts.

Gen. Hunter's crossing the Vaal at Windsorton brings the relief of Mafeking, 195 miles beyond, almost within a calculable interval. It is now regarded as quit possible that Mafeking may be succored before the queen's birthday.

The debate in parliament on the Spion kop dispatches proved a disappointment to the supporters of the government. The Ministerialist papers confess to a certain amount of inconsistency and weakness in the statements of the spokesmen of the government. On the other hand, as the Standard points out, the opposition proves to be well satisfied with the debate, as they believe it has injured the government and has rendered Lord Lansdowne's continuance at the war office difficult.

Wepener is to be garrisoned with the strong force from Gen. Chermside's division commanded by Lord Castletown.

Henry S. Lucy, writing in the Daily News, says he has ascertained that Sir Alfred Milner's letter against ladies visiting South Africa was written as the result of an intimation from Queen Victoria.

Queen Chips in to the Ottawa Fund.

London, May 6.—Queen Victoria has contributed 500 guineas and the prince of Wales 250 guineas to the Mansion house Ottawa fire relief fund. Another Ottawa fire relief fund was opened at Glasgow yesterday and about £2,000 was subscribed in a few hours.

School Teacher Killed.

Waverly, Minn., May 6.—Miss Kate Flannely, a teacher at Section 8 school, two miles south of town, was killed in a runaway accident [illegible]

EX-SECRETARY ENDICOTT DEAD.

Former Secretary of War Succumbs to Pneumonia.

Boston, May 8. — William Crowninshield Endicott, secretary of war under President Cleveland's first administration, died at his residence in this city yesterday afternoon of pneumonia, aged seventy-three years. Although Mr. Endicott's system had been somewhat enfeebled from an attack of the grip from which he suffered last winter, he had been in apparently good bodily health up to last Wednesday, when he took his customary drive. Shortly after he was taken ill and pneumonia developed, the disease reaching its most acute form Saturday evening, at which time it was feared by the attending physician that the patient could not live through the night. He rallied slightly, but during Sunday his respiration gradually grew weaker, and about 5 o'clock he passed peaceably away.

WOMAN SAVED BY HER HAIR.

Falls From Fourth Story Fire Escape and Is Suspended Till Aid Comes.

New York, May 8. — Sadie Parsy, twenty-four years old, a maid in the family of Albert Peyser of 216 East Seventy-eighth street, fell from the fire escape on the fourth floor. A strand of her hair caught in some of the ornamental iron work of the balcony on the first floor, and for a moment she hung suspended in mid-air. Then her hair parted, but the moment had given time for aid to come, and as she fell she landed in the arms of several men who had witnessed her drop from the fourth floor. She escaped with a severe scalp wound.

NEW ARGENTINE MINISTER.

Senor Eduardo Wilde Submits His Credentials to the President.

Washington, May 8.—Senor Eduardo Wilde, the newly appointed Argentina minister, submitted his credentials to the president at the White House Saturday. Accompanied by his legation staff, the minister first went to the state department and met Secretary Hay, who escorted him to the White House and presented him to the president. The usual felicitous speeches were made, the minister expressing a hope for the continuation of the marvelous progress of this great republic, and the president welcoming Senor Wilde as a worthy successor to Senor Garcia Merou.

OTIS SETS SAIL.

Hurried Departure From Manila Causes Comment.

Washington, May 8.—Gen. Otis left Manila Saturday in the transport Meade, for San Francisco. He was expected to remain in command in the Philippines at least until the arrival of the Taft commission, about May 20, and his precipitate abandoning of his post at this time is rather mystifying to the authorities. The first intimation of his earlier departure came in a cable message Friday asking to be relieved. The request was promptly granted and Gen. MacArthur was directed to assume command. Gen. Wheaton will assume command in Northern Luzon.

TO STRENGTHEN THE FORT.

France Appropriates Nine Million Francs for the Island of Martinique.

Kingston, Jam., May 8.—Interisland advices here say Martinique is jubilant over the news received there from France that 9,000,000 francs have been appropriated for strengthening the fortifications of Fort du France. A newspaper of that town says: "After this the English may come."

CHICAGO RIVER ON FIRE.

Noted Stream a Mass of Flame for Two Blocks.

Chicago, May 8.—Oil floating on the south branch of the river caught fire and for a time threatened to spread to the stock yards and adjoining lumber yards. It was checked, however, and finally burned itself out after consuming two piles of lumber. The flames extended along the river for two blocks.

Laying a New Cable.

Berlin, May 8.—The directors of the German Atlantic Cable company wired from Borkum that the cable-laying had begun. Emperor William telegraphed his best wishes for the successful completion of this important undertaking.

The System Extended.

Washington, May 8.—The system of registering letters by mail carriers has been extended to 103 postoffices, and there now remains less than 100 cities having free delivery where this system is not in operation.

Killing Frosts in Ohio.

Columbus, Ohio, May 8. — Reports from Eastern Ohio say ice formed in some localities and that killing frosts were general. The damage to fruits and early crops is undoubtedly heavy. Apple and peach crops are destroyed.

The Ohio Wheat Crop.

Columbus, Ohio, May 8.—A bulletin issued by the state board of agriculture estimates the prospective wheat crop of the state at only 41 per cent of an average, or about sixteen to seventeen million bushels.

WORK OF TORNADOES

HALF A DOZEN OF THEM VISIT CENTRAL KANSAS.

Two People Are Known to Have Been Killed and Three Injured—Wires Are Down in the Affected District, Making It Impossible to Learn the Extent of the Damage—Great Number of Farm Buildings Were Destroyed and a Large Amount of Stock Killed—Farmers in Nebraska Suffer Severely.

Kansas City, May 8.—Half a dozen distinct tornadoes occurred in Central Kansas yesterday afternoon, following a day of exceedingly high temperature. Wires are down in the affected districts, making it impossible to accurately sum up the damage done. A Times special from Ellingwood, Kan., says:

"At 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon a tornado visited Logan township. It formed a few miles south of Ellingwood and passed over the west portion of the county. At the Cheyenne bottoms, six miles north, it divided in six different directions and destroyed the residences of George and William Helfrich. George Helfrich and wife were instantly killed. William Helfrich and his wife and child were badly hurt. The storm next struck the farm of Carl Schneider, destroying the outbuildings and leaving the dwelling untouched. Further into the country a number of others are reported killed or injured. A large amount of stock was killed."

A special from Larned, Kan., says: "A tornado passed southeast of here at 6 o'clock last evening and struck near Pawnee Rock, three miles distant.

The Wires Are Down

and it is impossible to learn the extent of the damage done. Four separate funnel-shaped clouds are reported to have been seen in the direction of Great Bend. H. H. Gerrish's house, barn and other outbuildings were a mass of ruins. The family, luckily, was not at home at the time and escaped injury. About thirty hogs were killed. The school house standing near Mr. Gerrish's home was wiped from the face of the earth. John McComb's house was blown down and his granary, barn and windmill reduced to ruins. The family happened to be in the one room which remained standing. H. H. Corbett's frame house and barn and mill were all reduced to very minute pieces, farm machinery was broken and stock killed. No one was at home when the catastrophe occurred. A. D. Pierce's big hay barn was ruined and other buildings blown down. One horse was crushed under the falling timbers. The house in which a Mr. Stone lived was ruined by the wind but no one was hurt. The Presbyterian church in town is wrecked beyond repair. A brick building in the north part of town was blown down and a large amount of damage done in other parts of town."

Farmers Suffer Great Loss.

Omaha, May 8.—A special to the Bee from Beaver City, Neb., gives further details of the Wilsonville tornadoes. Many farm houses were destroyed. The hailstones were as large as baseballs, and were driven through roofs. The twister appeared after the bombardment and took a northeasterly course. It was funnel-shaped and did damage over a wide area. Farmers west and north of Wilsonville were the greatest sufferers. Many people fled to their cellars. A. Towne's large house was destroyed. Towne, his wife and daughter were seriously, though not fatally, injured. Houses and barns of H. H. Gerrish, H. H. Corbett and H. A. Osborne were destroyed. The latter was seriously injured. A daughter of L. E. McFarland was in a summer house which was lifted and carried some distance without serious injury. Five cows were carried a quarter of a mile. The residence of Rev. Lavine was destroyed. His wife and child were carried forty feet and not seriously injured. Much live stock was killed by the storm and the damage to crops and fruit trees was great. The amount of damage has not been estimated.

Farm Property Destroyed.

Kanapolis, Kan., May 8—At 4 o'clock four distinct funnel-shaped clouds developed within a radius of a mile of here and it is believed caused considerable destruction to farm property though no definite reports have been received. The day was one of the hottest ever experienced in this part of the state.

Texas Town Partially Destroyed.

Dallas, Tex., May 8.—One-third of the houses in Carza, a town in Denton county, were destroyed late yesterday afternoon by a tornado. No one was hurt, for, warned by a big black cloud, the people sought refuge in storm houses before the tornado reached them. Reports from other sections of Denton county show that several houses at Little Elm were demolished and several people injured. Wires to the north are down.

ST. LOUIS BLAZE.

Hay and Lumber Valued at $350,000 Are Destroyed.

St. Louis, May 8. — The Mississippi Valley Hay Storage company and the lumber yards of the Hofner-Lothman Manufacturing company were destroyed by fire. The total loss is estimated at $350,000, of which the hay company sustains about $40,000. The entire loss is covered by insurance.

Willing to Trust Them.

London, May 8.—A special dispatch from St. Petersburg says that advices received state that the czar has ordered the chief of police to cease all extraordinary precautions for his safety. "I have come to see my people, not the police of Moscow," is the way he put it.

Taylor Summoned to Washington.

Louisville, K., May 8.—Gov. Taylor left last night for Washington in response to a telegraphic request from the national capital.

St. Hilaire Spectator.

ST. HILAIRE, - MINNESOTA.

By and by is the path that leads to never.

It is useless to advertise for a lost opportunity.

A man's conscience is either his best friend or his worst enemy.

The truth that occupies a nutshell finds some minds too narrow to give it room.

The almighty dollar resembles some men; it talks without saying anything.

Admiral Dewey will do well to keep his sea legs on if a Kentucky city has sent him twelve bottles of the blue grass product.

Even at the present time there is enough fighting in the Central American republics to justify the United States in fortifying the Nicaraguan canal.

John D. Rockefeller has offered to give Denison university $100,000 if the trustees will secure other subscriptions amounting to $125,000 before the close of the present term. What fun it must be for Mr. Rockefeller to see college trustees and presidents 'hustle.

Senator Vest recently sent a newspaper item to be read to the house. The secretary had the wrong side of the clipping, and instead of an editorial on the money question, began: "Ridiculous! We are giving away these goods at half price!" "The other side!" cried Mr. Vest.

Admiral Dewey recently appeared before the house pensions committee and eloquently advocated the passage of several bills granting pensions to the widows of officers who served with him in the battle of Manila Bay. The measure now pending provides for pensions for the widow of Captain Charles V. Gridley of the Olympia at the rate of $200 a month; the widow of Commander E. B. Wood of the Petrel, at $100 a month; the mother of Lieutenant Thomas M. Brumley, the Admiral's Flag Lieutenant, at $50 a month, and the widow of Captain Henry E. Nichols of the Monadnock at $100 a month.

The enlargement of a church at Quincy, Mich., and its recent rededication testify anew to the power one person may exert in a community. Thirty years ago Quincy was but a hamlet, and the Presbyterian church being reduced to a single member, the presbytery dissolved the church and sent a committee to get the minutes. Mrs. Patter refused either to give up the minutes or to be "dissolved." "What the presbytery should do," was her plucky answer, "is to send us a minister." Her advice was taken, and today the church is happy, hopeful and flourishing. It lived simply because one earnest Christian woman would not let it die.

In one of the statistical divisions of the Department of Agriculture in Washington may be seen a machine resembling a typewriter, which multiplies and divides with unerring accuracy and with great rapidity. Give its operator a multiplicand of six figures and a multiplier as large, and he will write them out as upon a typewriter; then he turns a handle a few times, and before the onlooker knows what is going on, the product is written out before him. The machine performs examples in division with equal ease. Does any one of our young readers fancy that he sees in this invention an emancipation of boys of the twentieth century from the vexation of the multiplication table? Alas! that is too much for him to hope.

"Strike-the-Kettle is not a romantic name, but the old Indian who bore that appellation was a leader and a Christian king among his people. For many years Strike-the-Kettle was a scout, protecting the United States mail from hostile Indians. While on this duty he was wounded in a fight with his own people. A few years ago, when the Dakota prairies were on fire, the Indians of the Standing Rock Agency fought the flames for days. When at last it was feared the whole village would be swept away, a devoted missionary stood watching, with wagon packed, ready to flee at the last moment. In the darkness she saw some one standing by her gate. It was Strike-the-Kettle. "I can no longer fight the fire," said the wounded old scout, "but I will stay here, Winona. Go to sleep and I will rouse you in time." When the exhausted woman finally woke, all danger was over, but Strike-the-Kettle was still on guard. Is it strange that on Memorial days Winona lays a wreath on the grave of Strike-the-Kettle?

The arbitration tribunal of Swiss jurists, which has had under consideration for nearly ten years the claims of English and American citizens against Portugal for damages for her seizure of the Delagoa Bay railroad, condemns Portugal to pay a sum which, with interest, amounts to between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000. It had been anticipated that the sum would be so large that Portugal could not raise it without ceding some of her territory in South Africa. But Portugal can pay this moderate award without aid.

From a Philadelphia paper we learn that a baby down that way slept for a week and then woke up all right without giving the doctors any concern. The child's father is not mentioned in the account, but he probably succeeded in getting along without wasting away much.

What dupes we are of our own desires. Destiny has two ways of crushing us—by refusing our wishes and by fulfilling them. But he who only wills what God wills escapes both catastrophes.—Wisdom.

NATIONAL BANK NOTES

ARE REDEEMABLE IN NEITHER GOLD, SILVER NOR PAPER.

Why Cannot the Government Issue Notes on the Same Basis?—Answer: Because It Would Break the National Bankers' Trust.

Under the financial legislation enacted at the present session of congress, the bank-note currency will be expanded several hundred millions of dollars. This bank-note currency is redeemable. It is based upon United States bonds, but a holder of a bank note could not secure a bond by presenting the note at the treasury. The bond basis is to protect the government, which guarantees the notes of the bankers. In case a bank should fail, the secretary of the treasury is authorized to dispose of the bonds and to cover into the treasury a sufficient amount of the proceeds to redeem the bank's note circulation.

The bonds, it will be seen, are merely to insure the redemption of the notes in case of failure of the issuing banks. These notes are not money; they are merely promises to pay money. What are they redeemable in? It would naturally appear that, having been authorized by a Republican congress and executive, they would be redeemable in "the best money in the world—gold." But they are not. The banks are permitted to redeem these notes in greenbacks, silver or gold, at their own discretion.

It does not take any extensive knowledge of the financial question to see the absurdity of the claim that a bank-note currency is superior to the government's paper currency, for, as a matter of fact, the bank-note currency is redeemable in the paper and silver currency of the government. Why not, then, dispense with the intervention of the banks? There is but one reason and that is the function of issuing notes is a profitable one to the bankers; it's worth millions to them. And it is also obvious that they are willing to pay for the privilege, just as the protected interests and the trusts are willing to pay for special legislation in contributions to the official fat-fryer.—Milwaukee News.

CONGRESS WITHOUT AUTHORITY.

In compliance with a recent resolution of the house, the war department produced the mislaid opinion of Judge Magoon, law officer of the insular division, relative to the extension of the constitution over Puerto Rico.

The opinion was given in May, 1899. After referring to Spain's cession of the island, the opinion says:

"Thereupon the territory conveyed became a part of the United States, and as such subject to the constitution. No further action by congress was necessary or possible. The constitution does not depend upon congress for authority in any part of the United States. The reverse of the proposition is the fact. From this time on congress must look to the constitution for authority to legislate for Puerto Rico."

It was upon this opinion that the president based his "plain duty" message, but in deference to the trusts, Judge Magoon was ordered to write a contrary opinion, which enabled the president and the Republican managers to alter their plain duty to the Puerto Ricans for a plain violation of the constitution.

PROCLAIM INDEPENDENCE ONCE AGAIN.

On the coming Fourth of July, or on the preceding day, let every true American newspaper in the United States, publish in full the Declaration of Independence.

It is the charter of our liberties, and it is being sneered at and treated with contumely as effete, by those who aspire to destroy its undying principles of human freedom by a return to imperialism and the destruction of a people's government.

Thousands are familiar with its spirit, but have never read it, and by proclaiming it once again on the coming Fourth of July, it will surely bring about a revival of patriotism similar to that experienced by our forefathers on July 4, 1776, when they repudiated imperialism and tyranny.

There is all the more need of its proclamation because we shall then enter a political campaign which means life or death to the republic.

WE HAVE REACHED A CRISIS.

We are at a crisis in the history of the race.

Shall the hand of toil be emancipated, or shall it have new shackles riveted on it?

Shall the American millions be free men or serfs?

Shall government protect the weak or be a mere convenience for the strong?

Shall justice uphold the right or smile on iniquity?

Shall liberty illumine the earth or be slain in her own temple?

For many decades this republic has been the greatest world power on the globe; not through her armies or her navies or her wealth, but through her moral force; through her ideals, through the divinity of human rights.

Shall she go on in this course, lifting the hopes of all people and brightening the skies of all nations, or shall she abdicate her high position, get on the low plane of brute force, and move along the barbaric road of tinsel, oppression, misery and death?

These are some of the questions that confront our people.

Let them but clearly understand and there will be no doubt about the issue.

My friends, look up; this republic has not yet performed its mission.

It is not going to fail—Liberty will not die—the human race is about to move forward.—Hon. J. P. Altgeld.

Trusts Now Control Congress.

There has not been any very enthusiastic reception for the constitutional amendment proposed by Congressman Jenkins of Wisconsin, of the committee on trusts, giving congress control of "all private corporations, copartnerships and joint stock companies in the United States" as well as "power to define, regulate, control, prohibit, repress and dissolve all trusts, monopolies, combinations or conspiracies to monopolize any part of trade or commerce." Everybody sees that this would put it in the power of congress to let trusts do as they like, and nobody has any faith at present in any desire of congress to interfere with the trusts in any way. If congress has any desire to suppress trusts it has ample power now to destroy the greater part of them.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

A HANNA-M'KINLEY PLATFORM

It is said that the Republican national platform will bear the impress of Mr. McKinley's master hand. Of course this means Hanna and the others, for if McKinley is permitted to shape the thing without being proof-read and revised and edited, it will prevent the appearance of Rufus Choate's signature, which his friend said "looked like a gridiron struck by lightning." Says a Washington politician:

"The Ohio Republican convention will be interesting chiefly for what it will say in the resolutions or platform adopted. The Ohio platform in 1896 was not satisfactory to the convention and created not a little criticism. Senators Foraker and Hanna, Gen. Grosvenor and other Ohio Republicans here are considering various planks for their platform. They are desirous that no mistakes like that of 1896 shall be made this year. They will have a platform which says as little on doubtful or contested questions as possible, but they feel that they must indorse the Puerto Rican bill. They, as well as the president, realize that there is danger in saying too much as well as too little on this question, and there will be much care taken in wording the resolution. They will consult the leading Republicans of other states, as they are naturally desirous of having the Ohio platform accepted as a model for other states, and it will be naturally looked upon as President McKinley's platform. The resolutions of the Ohio convention will be considered with care at Washington before they are submitted to the delegates."

Just Like Him.

Grover Cleveland, in a letter to a Brooklyn political club, places the blame for Democratic defeat in 1896 upon leaders whom he claims led the people away from sound Democratic doctrine. Mr. Cleveland's assurance is sublime. The leaders he alludes to were not in power in the election of 1894, and the Democratic campaign was made on Mr. Cleveland's record as president and under Mr. Cleveland's leadership. The result of that election is too fresh in the minds of the people to be forgotten by them, though it seems to have passed from the mind of Mr. Cleveland. It is almost amusing to hear Cleveland and his adherents coolly credit Democratic defeat to the silver end of the party when they, the gold men, are solely responsible for Democratic defeat, both in 1894 and in 1896. The record of the Cleveland administration alone defeated the party in 1894.

An Armor Plate Scandal.

Andrew Carnegie is one of those rock-ribbed, uncompromising, high-tariff-protection Republicans, who insists upon high tariff protection for the sole benefit of infant industries and the poor labormen. During the past two years the Carnegie combine has sold to the United States armor plate at $500 per ton and to the Russian government the same kind and quality of armor plate at $200 per ton, and now this combine boasts of having made a net profit during these two years of $62,000,000, and estimates that its profits this year will pass the eighty-million mark. "But," says Mr. Blockhead Republican, "who cares how many millions the Carnegie combine amasses so long as the foreigner pays the tax?"

"Stand by Standard Oil."

Now that the Puerto Rican bill is out of the way the remaining party work goes forward merrily. The bill for depositing government funds in Puerto Rico and the Philippines in the banks of the Standard oil syndicate was called up and passed by a strict party vote. The motto of "Stand by the president" was altered to "Stand by the Standard" for the time being, and all the protection patriots fell into line.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

First Patent on Matches.

Before 1833, when wooden matches with phosphorus were made in Vienna, people were dependent upon flint and steel to secure a light. The first patent for a phosphorus match in the United States was taken out in 1836 by A. D. Phillips of Springfield, Mass. For many years people refused to use them, but in 1845, the ill-smelling and clumsy old tinder boxes were generally discarded, and are preserved, like snuffboxes, as curiosities.

A Quid pro Quo.

It is evidently the purpose of the administration to use the island of Puerto Rico as a reward to the millionaires and monopolists who will put up the sinews of war for the coming presidential campaign. There will be millions put up to re-elect Mr. McKinley, and the men who put it up will get their money back tenfold.—Louisville (Ky.) Dispatch.

An Expensive Commission.

Indianapolis News: It looks to a man up a tree as if the bill of expenses for the Philippine commission included some pretty big items. Why, for instance, should $13,687 have been needed for "transportation?" There are other items that smack of similar extravagance. The commission must have lived pretty high.

Only One Remedy Known.

Springfield (Mo.) Leader-Democrat: There is but one remedy for slavery and that is liberty. There is but one remedy for monopoly, and that is to set free those currents which have been restrained by monopoly. No combination can ever be permanently successful unless it is founded upon some monopoly of natural resources.

STANDING ARMIES.

MENACE IN WAR AS WELL AS IN PEACE.

One of the Lessons of the Battles in South Africa—This Country Should Take Timely Warning—Patriotic Volunteers Sufficient.

The progress of the war in South Africa is being followed with great interest not only by the sympathizers with both nations engaged, but by the men who make a study of military affairs and the necessity for maintaining standing armies.

The result of careful observation has forced the belief upon the most skeptical that large standing armies carefully drilled and thoroughly disciplined are not to be depended upon against a natural militia trained to the use of arms from childhood.

The English soldiers, always famed for courage, steadiness and discipline, have proved no match for the Boers, self-trained in the use of firearms and inspired by a love of liberty. In all the battles and skirmishes fought the English have never gained a victory except when outnumbering their opponents at least five to one, while the Boers have scored several victories when the odds against them were even greater than that.

Experts, in considering the superiority of the Boers, take into consideration all the advantages of the latter in fighting on their own ground and in defense of their country, but in spite of these and other advantages they conclude that armies of the Boer type are much superior to those of the English type. In short they conclude that an army composed of men trained from childhood to the use of firearms, either through the necessities of their condition or through governmental encouragement, is superior to one made up of men barred from the use of arms until old enough to enter the ranks as soldiers. This is a reasonable conclusion so far as marksmanship is concerned, for every marksman knows that very few sharpshooters are produced from men who have not been in the habit of shooting from childhood.

Before the use of firearms the English soldiers were the best in the world, and their superiority has always been credited to the fact that every boy was not only encouraged, but compelled, to own and practice with the long bow from a very early age. England maintained no standing army of consequence in those days, but in case of war the young men from the fields and shops, each with his bow and arrows, flocked to the king's standard, and though lightly and carelessly drilled, they were the terror of the world.

It is also pointed out that men who fight only for hire, as in the case with incentive which urges the voluntary soldiers in a standing army, lack that soldier to deeds of bravery in time of danger to his country. Of necessity the citizen soldier is more intelligent than the professional soldier and his love of country is always greater.

These conclusions are of interest and value to the people of the United States at a time when one political party is demanding the organization and maintenance of a large standing army and the other is demanding that dependence for defense be placed in a citizen soldiery to be called into service only when needed.

It is evident that a wise policy demands that our regular army be kept at the smallest limit necessary for sudden emergencies, and that the boys of the country be encouraged to practice in the use of firearms to the end that while they shall not lose their usefulness as citizens, they may in times of need become effective soldiers.

GROVER CLEVELAND AGAIN.

There has never been a time when false leadership of our party and a departure from simple Democratic faith have not been quickly discovered and ruthlessly rebuked by listless support, pronounced defection and bitter defeat. These consequences have thus far been so inevitable that lessons they teach cannot be disregarded without inviting calamity.—Grover Cleveland.

Shake, Grover. It is gratifying to see that you have realized at last that your leadership in 1893 was "quickly discovered and ruthlessly rebuked by listless support, pronounced defection and bitter defeat." You led the Democratic party to the gold standard trough, but couldn't make it drink. The party recovered, however, in 1896, and under the matchless leadership of the superb Bryan rallied 6,500,000 strong. The lessons taught Democracy by the sad consequences of the false leadership of Cleveland, followed by the rally after overwhelming defeat, and the thrilling and almost triumphant campaign of 1896, cannot, as Mr. Cleveland now admits, "be disregarded without inviting calamity." The moral is that the party should stick to the Chicago platform with such additions as McHanna imperialism and the reign of trusts and syndicates have made imperative.—Ex.

No Waste of Regrets.

A prominent Gold Democrat whose name is not given is reported as saying:

"We were all willing until recently that Mr. Bryan should be renominated, for, we supposed that there was no chance of electing a Democrat. Now that the Republican party has committed 'harrikarri' it seems that we ought not to waste the nomination on Mr. Bryan, who cannot be elected no matter how weak the Republicans may appear."

Too bad! Can this or any other man name a Democrat who can carry a state that Mr. Bryan cannot carry? Just run over the list and see if you can pick out one such state. Then run over the list and count the states that no Democrat but Bryan can carry. You will find a dozen such. So there need be no sorrow over the political waste committed in renominating Bryan.

A Needed Lesson to the Trusts.

St. Paul Pioneer Press: Congress can at once teach a needed lesson and confer a boon upon the country by a prompt repeal of the duties on all iron and steel produced in the forms manufactured by the offending (iron and steel) corporation. Its business has plainly grown beyond the need of any protection whatever, and—with the paper trust, the tin plate trust and several others which are abusing in like manner the protective principle—it should now be permitted to stand alone, while the people whom it would rob shall have the benefit of unrestricted competition.

A SWELLED HEAD.

One must admire the stubbornness of Senator Hanna in forcing his imperialistic views on the country. In spite of the protests of the great majority of the people, in spite of the demands of the party press, in spite of threats, requests and petitions, which prove that the act is unpopular, he coolly and persistently pushed through the Puerto Rico tariff bill, saying that he will give the people of the United States the laws they ought to have and not the laws they ask for.

The senator must be either a man confident of the absolute correctness of his views or he must have a bad case of swelled head. That he is a man of superior ability every one knows, but that he possesses sufficient ability to think for seventy-five millions of people is not likely to be admitted by any one of that flock of sheep known as the Republican party, and of which he is leader.

But the sheep have done his bidding so long that his head has become swelled into the belief that they dare not revolt, and so he goes on making laws to suit himself, saying, if not in words, at least in action: "What I do is right, no matter what others may think."

A British Triumph.

Mr. Burton of Ohio, who is acting as administrator objector to canal legislation in the house of representatives, asserts that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is "a measure which, though much misunderstood, is a triumph of diplomacy." We heartily agree with the statement. But as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty involves building the Nicaragua canal for the benefit of Great Britain at our expense, and surrender of the Monroe doctrine, it is a triumph rather of British than of American diplomacy, and that fact is one of the many objections to it.—Washington Times.

Jeffersonian Democracy.

Jeffersonian Democracy means popular government; it means opposition to centralized movement, which has never been more dangerously rampant than in this particular state and in the nation today—really reviving the infamies which DeToqueville so vividly depicts under the old royalist regime in France, and which Toryism sought to inculcate into American institutions, and with which the legatees of Toryism and Federalism, represented by modern Republicanism, are seeking insidiously to pervert and poison republican institutions.

No Decision Wanted.

The administration does not intend that a decision from the Supreme court shall be had on the question of the constitution following the flag before the presidential election, if it can possibly prevent it. This has been shown by the action of Secretary Gage in ordering that a contract laborer, brought from Puerto Rico to New York, for the express purpose of making a test case, be allowed to land. The question is to be suspended in mid-air until after the presidential election.—Celina (O.) Democrat.

Convention of Platt's Puppets.

Utica (N. Y.) Observer: Taking it all in all, the Republican state convention held yesterday was the most striking evidence that could be obtained of the feebleness of grasp of the Republican party on the attention, the interest or the sympathy of the people of the state of New York. The proceedings were determined several days ago by Thomas C. Platt and the delegates who assembled, organized, made motions, offered resolutions and made speeches were merely puppets carrying on a mummery show.

Will Not Strengthen the Ticket.

Kansas City Times: Roosevelt, with the war fever at its height and with his military laurels still green from Cuban battlefields, was hardly able to carry his state by a plurality of a few thousand votes. The chances are that, should he run this year, handicapped by militarism, imperialism and trustism, and with war heroes at a discount, he will be badly defeated. His presence on the ticket will simply accentuate the scarcity of available candidates in the Republican party.

McKinley Success Means Revolution.

Springfield (Mass.) Republican: The triumphant re-election of Mr. McKinley will mean to him and to all others the emphatic popular indorsement of the imperialist policy, and a president who has begun the revolution against Republican principles without a popular mandate will hardly fail to pursue it with the popular approval at his back. And the pursuit of it leads to the wreck of popular government in this hemisphere, if not throughout the world.

The People Will Decide.

The bill for a tariff between Puerto Rico and the mainland of the United States is now a law, and the position of the Republican party on this question is established beyond recall. The passage of this act exposes the policy of the administration as regards our new possessions, and it must go before the country on this issue. The American people in the coming election will decide whether they propose to go into the empire business or not.

The Mask Removed.

In the passage of the Puerto Rico bill "the republic has been assailed. Its institutions have been undermined. And in this Puerto Rican bill privilege, militarism and imperialism throw down the gauntlet. There is no longer any possibility of deception or delusion.—New York World.

THE YAQUI TROUBLE.

DESPERATE WAR BEING WAGED BY THE INDIANS.

These Unsubdued Redskins of Mexico Are Determined to Win Their Freedom or Be Exterminated as a Race—The Transvaal of America.

What is believed to be the last desperate stand of the Yaqui Indians is being made in the fastnesses of Sonora. It is a fight without mercy or quarter on either side, the Indians seemingly determined to win or be exterminated as a race; the Mexicans to wrest from them their last foothold in the "Transvaal of America," as the desolate, inpenetrable region can be called.

Four hundred years have been insufficient for the invader to beat down utterly the power of the once mighty nation whose impis scattered the mailed squadrons of Coronado in flight. Even when beaten by superiority of arms they, like the Boers of Cape Town, trekked into the wilderness, and ever since—with a hiatus of fragile peace here and there—have held their ancient enemies at bay.

A year ago the Yaquis broke the truce with the Mexican government that had existed for a considerable period, and declared that they would gain their independence or become an extinct race. Since that time at least 2,000 Mexican soldiers have been killed or captured and several hundred Yaquis have been exterminated.

Once before in their mountains the Yaqui forces repelled the Mexican troops for ten years. The Mexicans finally capitulated, and as an inducement for peace signed a treaty with the Yaqui nation ceding to the people thereof a wide stretch of territory and granting them home rule, with Diaz as the official head of their government. Gen. Torres was subsequently appointed commander of the Mexican military forces in the cities and fortresses of Sonora and governor of the state, but the Indians were still permitted to choose their own chief. All went well for years until the country began to fill up with prospectors in search of gold and Mexican peons, who lived by plundering the people. Torres and his hangers-on grew rich, and every hill resounded with the noise of the miner's pick and shovel. The Indians realized that they were being gradually crowded out and rebelled.

American prospectors say that one Yaqui Indian is worth five Mexicans. The Indians were the laborers of Sonora. They were employed by the railways and mines, and were found to be both industrious and honest and capable of great endurance. Physically they are perfect specimens of manhood, and their intelligence is admitted to be superior to the average Mexican peon.

Early last summer the Indian laborers on the railways and in the mines began to desert their posts without apparent cause, and a little later the report was spread that they had taken the war path.

Tetebiate, their old war chief, who led them during the ten years' war, was sent to treat with them. The report came back that he had been murdered by the enraged braves. Several months later he was recognized while leading them in an onslaught against the Mexican forces.

After the outbreak of hostilities troops and Gatling guns were hurried from Mexico proper to Sonora via El Paso, Texas. The Indians assembled in force in the swamps of the Yaqui river near Potam, and it was there that the first battle was fought. The Mexican troops attempted to capture the Yaqui stronghold, but were driven back with heavy losses. The soldiers returned to Potam with their garments torn to shreds by contact with the jungle thickets, and hundreds were prostrated by the terrible heat. Torres and his army thereafter remained inactive for several months. The commanding general said he was awaiting cool weather, and that he would resume the campaign in the autumn. Meanwhile the Indians crossed the river and made their way to the mountains, where it is practically impossible to dislodge them from their positions. They took their women and children with them, and depleted many ranches of their cattle, which they drove to their camp in the Bacatete range.

In the early winter Torres began his advance, but has been unable to accomplish anything up to the present time. He seems to be satisfied if he can prevent the Yaquis from capturing any of the important towns in the western part of the state, and the only battles that have occurred have been precipitated by the Indians themselves, who swooped down in force from the mountains and attacked the Mexicans, and after inflicting as much damage as possible retreated.

The war is likely to be prolonged indefinitely, as the Mexican troops are unable to cope with the Indians. Recently Yaqui juntas have been established in several border towns in the United States, and considerable money has been raised to be expended in securing the independence of Sonora. Many adventurers from the United States are also said to be fighting with the Indians.

The Indians in the field number about 2,000 well-armed men, and the Mexican forces about 5,000, most of whom have little stomach for fighting. Recent dispatches from Mexico announce that 4,000 troops have been ordered to Sonora to re-enforce Torres. This would indicate either the war is assuming a more serious aspect in the eyes of the Mexican government, or that Torres' losses have been exceedingly heavy.

A New Mineral.

Mohawkite is the name given to a new mineral discovered in the copper mines at Houghton, Mich. It is an arsenide of copper in connection with an arsenide of nickel, united chemically, not mechanically. An alloy of copper and nickel is in good demand, and the new ore, it is said can be turned into copper, nickel, arsenic and cobalt with less than 1 per cent of waste. Cobalt is the base of the deepest blue dye. Arsenic is worth five cents a pound, copper 17 cents and nickel more than twice as much as copper.

INDIANS' DEEDS TO PENNS.

Old Pennsylvania Parchments at Harrisburg.

All the old parchment colonial deeds and records in keeping of the state department at Harrisburg have just been put through a process of preservation by Secretary of the Commonwealth Griest, says the Philadelphia Record. For years these records have been kept in tin boxes, and, as they were occasionally searched, the result was much confusion in the arrangement of papers. Many of the old wax seals were lost, and the crumpled papers were more or less damaged. Peculiar interest attaches to the Indian signatures, which are yet quite distinct on many of the documents. A large parchment contains the treaty of the Penns with the sachem of the Schuylkill Indians, and embraces the transfer of all the tracts of land or lands lying in or near the River Schuylkill and its branches, under date of September 7, 1742. The consideration for this land, as stated on the deed, included twenty brass kettles, 100 blankets, sixty linen shirts, twenty hats, six coats, twelve pairs of shoes and buckles, thirty pairs of stockings, twenty guns, twelve gunlocks, 300 pounds of gunpowder, 600 pounds of lead bullets, sixty hatchets, fifty planting hoes, 120 knives, 100 pairs of scissors, 100 tobacco tongs, twenty-four looking glasses, forty tobacco boxes, 1,000 flints, five pounds of paint, twentyfour dozen garters, six dozen small silk ribbons, twelve dozen rings, 100 pounds of tobacco, 400 pipes, twenty gallons of rum and £60. There are several large deeds transferring land from the Indians to the Penns, all bearing the peculiar signatures of the Indian chieftains, representing all manner of animals, reptiles, fishes, birds and insects. The most important of these deeds is that conveying to the Penns the territory controlled by the Six Nations, for which a consideration of $5,000 was paid. The signatures of the Indians to this document give the Indian names and their English signification.

WANTS TO SELL HIS BODY.

Contortionist Wants a Customer for His Corpse.

Although by no means desiring to shuffle off this mortal coil, Walter Wentworth wants to sell his body. He has done it twice already in his lifetime, and now, although in his seventy-fifth year, he is looking about for another purchaser, and if he finds one, he thinks he has a good chance of surviving him, too, says the New York Herald. Walter is what is ordinarily called a "freak." He is a contortionist, and the queer things he does with his legs and his arms, and even his spinal column, are enough to make the eyes of the ordinary person bulge out to a dangerous extent. Even physicians are puzzled at the curious way in which he handles himself, and it was a doctor who first suggested to Wentworth the idea of selling his body. It was just sixty years ago that Wentworth ran away from his home near Detroit, Mich., to ride race horses. Then he joined a traveling circus and went the whole world over. With all his knocking about and the seventy-five years he carries, he is just as lively and supple as a 15-year-old boy. It was while he was being exhibited in Detroit in 1870 that he got a chance to sell himself. Dr. Cowe was greatly interested in him, and offered $100 for his body after he had done with it, for dissecting purposes. Wentworth jumped at the offer; the money was paid down. The doctor, however, conveniently died within a few months. Wentworth came to New York five years later, and was able on the trip to persuade Dr. N. L. Wilder of the Kings county hospital to take stock in him at the same price, a case of getting in on the basement floor if Dr. Wilder should live. He thinks Dr. Wilder will be unable to fill his part of the contract. He is therefore anxious to find somebody else who will invest in him.

Remembering Father.

The chorus of one of the latest popular songs is as follows: Just a word for father, dear old patient father, Working with his heart and hand to make our troubles few. In our love for mother don't forget the other, But let us whisper just a word for father, too. It is eminently fitting that dear old father should be remembered, and we rather think he is in most cases, even if mother does get most of the attention in music hall songs. But the foregoing chorus is hardly calculated to carry the masses back with such intensity of feeling as something on this order would: Just a word for father, dear old sturdy father, Who could swing the trunkstrap with a grace possessed by few; How he used to take us in his iron grasp and shake us! These were strong points that dear old father once had, too.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Vaudeville During Lunch Time.

There is a prospect that Currier's restaurant on Fulton street, New York, may be converted into a playhouse, where continuous vaudeville will hold forth. Merchants in the neighborhood and their clerks are having heated discussions over the probabilities of success or failure of the enterprise. The idea is to give performances during the day, with especial attention to the lunching hour—say from 12 to 2:30—when tables will be plentifully supplied with the best that the market affords. A citizen can pay $1 at the door and not only obtain an excellent meal, but see a good show while eating.

A Good All Round Man.

Corporal Lorne Stewart of "G" Company, writing to his home in Prince Edward island, says: "I spent all morning in having a bath, washing my shirt, socks, towels, and darning my socks. I can make porridge, tea, coffee, cocoa, pudding, soup, boil vegetables, fry beefsteak, wash, darn, sew, clean cooking pots, wash dishes or do any sort of housework. Such is the result of campaigning. I am going out to service when I go home, so if you know of any one wanting a cook, housemaid, or general servant, just recommend me; I am equal to anything from nursing a Kaffir baby to washing the older children."

RAVAGES OF CANCER.

ITS INCREASE HERE AND IN ENGLAND.

Overindulgence in Rich Food the Principal Cause—The United States Has an Army of 100,000 Cancer Victims—Well-Fed People Are Victims.

The frightful increase in the ravages made by cancer is one of the most alarming facts of the closing century. Sir William M. Banks, the eminent English surgeon, attributes the increase in the mortality from cancer to overindulgence in eating rich foods. Sir William is a cancer expert of long experience and wide repute. In the United States, according to competent authority, there is a vast army of 100,000 victims of cancer. The army is increasing all the time, not only in size, but out of proportion to the natural increase of population. Dr. G. Betton Massey of Philadelphia has gathered a mass of statistics, and published an article based on them, showing that in seven of the largest cities in the country—excluding Chicago, whose records, presumably, are too recent to be of value—with a combined population of 8,207,464 in 1870, the ration of deaths from cancer in that year was 35.4 to 100,000 living persons. Twenty-five years later, in 1895, in these cities, which then had a combined population of 17,035,235, the ratio of deaths from cancer was 66.4 to 100,000 population, the ratio having nearly doubled in a quarter of a century. If this rate of increase is maintained for the next ten years, Dr. Massey finds that in 1910 there will be in each city an average of 80 deaths from cancer to 100,000 population. The greatest increase in any of the large cities of America is shown by San Francisco. Here the ratio leaped from 16.5 cases in 100,000 population in 1866 to 103.6 in 1898. In England and Wales the increase in the thirty-one years from 1864 to 1895 was from 38.5 to 75.5. Dr. Roswell Park of Buffalo predicts that "if the present rate of increase of cancer in New York state continues during the next ten years, its mortality will become greater than that of consumption, typhoid fever and smallpox combined." Discussing the conditions affecting the increase in cancer cases in England Sir William Banks notes that it is the well-nourished people who fall victims. For the past fifty years, he says, bread has been cheap and plentiful, while during the last twenty years the importation of animal food from other countries has been enormous. The increased wages and emoluments of all classes in this country have enabled them to purchase freely of the best there is to be had in the whole world of things to eat and drink. Our working classes fare admirably. Our better classes eat infinitely too much—especially of animal food partaken of at breakfast, lunch and dinner. But for the athletic tendency of the age and the general passion for games and exercises which pervades all classes this overstuffing must have proved very dangerous. I am pretty well convinced that when a man is over 45 years of age excess in food is perhaps worse for him than excess in drink. Apparently one of the results of too much nourishing food is the production of a widely spread second-rate kind of gout of a different type from the acute and furious attacks produced in former days by the copious drinking of beer and port wine. Moreover, I think distinctly that it has also to do with the production of the cancerous predisposition. It is curious to note that among the very highest mortality rates for occupations are those which include commercial travelers, coachmen and grooms, merchants, seamen, maltsters, brewers, innkeepers, butchers and plumbers. Most of these certainly are persons likely to eat and drink abundantly and not take too much exercise—persons who live well and do not work off their spare products. Singularly enough, medical men figure low in the list. Certain it is that the disease has not appeared to me to affect the weakling, tea-shriveled, mummy-like old maid, or the ill-fed, more-than-half-starved drunkard, who never has any money to spend on good food. Its most numerous victims are well-nourished persons, with plenty of beef and fat about them, and often with a fine, healthy color to their cheeks. In summing up the many operations I have done for cancer of the tongue my recollection of the patients is for the most part of biggish, powerful men, with large, strong jaws which were hard to saw through. The better the nutrition and the younger the patient the more deadly and rapidly growing is the cancer.

The Motive That Subdues Selfishness.

Some Christians are bountiful fruit bearers, and the reason is that they draw all their supplies of grace and all their inspiration of daily conduct from their deep grown heart union to Jesus. Love of Jesus is the motive that subdues selfishness, and loyalty to Jesus holds them as a stout root holds a tree amid the blasts of winter's tempests, or under the summer's parching droughts. Glorious old Paul was always abounding in the work of the Lord, and he tells the secret in it when he said "Christ liveth in me.". A drought never affects a well-rooted Christian whose soul is in constant connection with the fountain head of all spiritual power.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

A Combination Ticket.

A combination accident insurance and transportation ticket has been designed for use on railroads having a coupon printed in connection with the ticket good for insurance of a passenger between the two stations indicated, for which the passenger pays a small sum in addition to the regular fare.

Proof of Heredity.

"Do you believe in heredity, Mrs. Simpson?" "Indeed, I do; every mean trait Bobby has I can trace right back to his father." "Does his father believe in heredity, too?" "Yes, he traces Bobby's faults all back to me."

LIFE SPENT AT SEA.

Few Days in 66 Years When Captain Doane Was Ashore.

The life of Capt. William H. Doane, who died here the other day, was peculiar in one respect. During his seafaring life of sixty-six years, aside from the time he spent on a South Sea island, there were few days when he felt solid ground beneath his feet, his home being almost continuously afloat. For forty years he served either in a lighthouse or on a lightship for the United States government. Thirty of these forty years he spent on the Hen and Chicken lightship at the entrance of Vineyard sound. He was 80 years old, and first went on a whaling voyage when he was 14. On his next voyage he became ill. The captain, who, like the skipper on all whalers, was also the ship's doctor, was unable to cure him, and it was decided to put him ashore at Otaheite, one of the Society group. The chief who was asked to look after him consented on condition that the boy would become a member of the tribe. The chief's conditions were agreed to, and young Doane was taken ashore. He received kind treatment from the natives, and was soon nursed back to health. When he was strong enough to undergo the ceremony he was received into the tribe, the tribal mark being placed on the back of his hand. He remained with the tribe for many years, learning the language and becoming one of them in every way. He was finally taken off the island by an English brig and was landed on the South American coast. As the quickest way to get home he enlisted for service on the United States frigate Constellation, Commodore Clarney, which was on her way to Chinese waters. This was during our first trouble with China. It was four years after Doane reached home, all of that time being spent on the Constellation. The cruise in Chinese waters ended, he came to this city, where he ever after made his home. Soon after his return he again decided on a whaling voyage, but when three weeks out he fell through an open hatchway, breaking his left arm. That ended his career as a whaler, and soon after he got a berth on a lightship.—New Bedford (Conn.) correspondent New York Sun.

JAPANESE ARE VERY PATRIOTIC

Willing to Sacrifice Their Lives for Their Country.

No people on earth are more intensely patriotic than the Japanese soldiers and sailors. According to their belief the dead come back and tarry for a hundred years with the living. "There are no Japanese who do not return," says a typical Japanese. "There are none who do not know the way. From China and from Chosen, and from out of the bitter sea all our dead have come back—all! They are with us now. In every dusk they gather to hear the bugles that called them home. And they will hear them also in the day when the armies of the son of heaven shall be summoned against Russia." The influence of such belief, fervently, so passionately held upon the national life is difficult to exaggerate. It stimulates to self-sacrifice, and the fact that all the departed great ones are held by every Japanese to be at his side nerves the soldier to the utmost heroism, the statesman to sink self and seek the nation's interests. This is precisely the feeling which, as Capt. Hoeing has pointed out in his "Untersuchungen uber die Taktik der Zugunft," is needed in the modern soldier. It is the ignorant campaign waged by the missionaries against this beautiful and not un-Christian belief in the actual presence of the dead on earth that has so hampered their work. For Japan rightly feels that the belief is one essential to her national life and to her military efficiency."

LINCOLN AN INVENTOR.

Patented a Steamboat Device Before He Entered Politics.

In the patent office are many papers of interest. Not the least is one showing that Abraham Lincoln a dozen years before he became president belonged to that tribe known as inventors. The jacket in case No. 6,469 contains the papers, the indorsements thereon showing that A. Lincoln, of Springfield, county of Sangamon, state of Illinois, March 10, 1849, filed an application for a patent—petition, affidavit, specification, drawing and model—which was examined April 13, directed to issue May 10, patented May 22, recorded in volume 38, page 664, and Z. C. Robbin was the attorney. The petition is for a patent for "a new and improved manner of combining adjustable buoyant chambers with steamboats and other vessels, for the purpose of enabling the draught of water to be readily lessened, to enable them to pass over bars or through shallow water without discharging their cargoes," and, referring to the drawing, describes "the buoyant chambers constructed in such a manner that they can be expanded so as to hold a large volume of air when required for use and can be contracted in a very small space and safely secured as soon as their services can be dispensed with." In asking Mr. Robbin to secure the patent Mr. Lincoln remarked: "I thought a steamboat on that plan would run where it was a little damp."—Washington correspondent St. Louis Republic.

Carried Millions of Passengers.

In New York city the Metropolitan Street Railway company has 284 miles of track, and last year carried on them 255,835,000 passengers, or about half the number carried on all of the steam railroads of the United States.

Birth Announcements.

In some parts of Holland a birth is announced by fastening a silk pincushion on the doorknob. If the pincushion is red the baby is a boy, and if white a girl.

SOCIETY IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL.

Mrs. Dewey's Ambition to Become the First Lady in the Land.

(Washington Letter.)

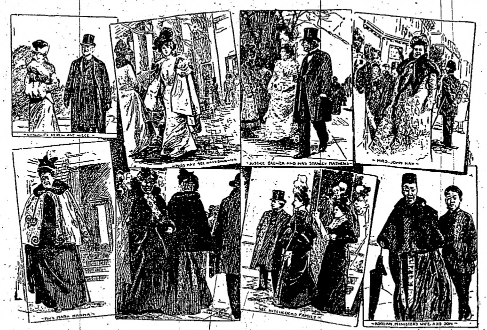
On account of the announcement of Admiral Dewey that he is a candidate for the presidency the name of Mrs. Dewey has become talked of throughout the world. Mrs. Dewey is no ordinary woman. Ever since she came to Washington as a girl of 18 she has impressed herself upon the social life of the capital. She has a strong personality, and an intelligence which fosters ambition. She is one of those women of whom Washington society before now has felt the power. Feeling her superiority to the majority of the women who shine in social ranks, she has not failed to show her contempt for small ambitions nor for the weak and faltering ones. The result has been that Mrs. Dewey has made many enemies in the social circles of Washington, but that goes without saying. Washington society is a strange thing, anyway, and the American of "the provinces" has rather hard work to comprehend it. For instance, the other day a hostess who was not well versed in all the "ins and outs" placed side by side at dinner the wife of the Austrian minister and the Mexican ambassador. This good lady had forgotten entirely that since the Archduke Maximilian was shot at Queretaro, Mexico, there had been a feud between the Austrians and the Mexicans, and officially these two nations had never exchanged international courtesies. So there was a row, and that most severe kind of one—the kind in which the women are the principal movers.

Mrs. Dewey is too well versed in the society methods of the capital to make a "break" like this, but in a long social career in Washington it is impossible that she should not have angered some persons and made friends of others. No woman with her strength of character could do otherwise. As the "first lady of the land" Mrs. Dewey would have an opportunity to pay off many old scores. Mrs. Dewey is not without power, without wealth, without brains, without ambition—she has them all, and with them a pleasing personality and a retention of good looks which also is pleasing. As "Wash" McLean's daughter, Miss Mildred McLean may have received some "snubs" from the set of people in the capital who are known as the "residents." But her father and mother were "residents" of a later growth, and Mrs. Washington McLean has one of the finest and most hospitable houses in Washington. As the wife of Gen. Hazen, Mildred McLean was able to repay twofold all the snubs that the McLeans had received when they first ventured on the stormy sea of Washington society. And the general was a quiet body out of uniform. When the general came to New York and reporters were sent to interview him, Mrs. Hazen sometimes was present, and then the general gave a talk which was of interest to everybody and harmed nobody. Gen. Hazen always trusted in the ability of his wife.

When it was announced that the Widow Hazen was to marry the admiral, Ned McLean, the young nephew of Mrs. Hazen, said to a reporter, "I tell you that Dewey is in great luck. (Dewey just at this time was fresh from the victory of Manila.) Her household will be a social and intellectual center and a salon such as has not existed since the days of Mme. De Stael." The enthusiasm of her nephew was not borne out by the "salon" of Mrs. Dewey. There are few Mme. De Staels to a century, but many persons in Washington have enjoyed the hospitality of the wife of the admiral. Since the widow of Gen. Hazen was married to the admiral she has held most of her receptions in the house of her mother, Mrs. Washington McLean. It is a large house, and much better fitted for social functions than the house which the people of the United States gave to the admiral.

When the victorious Dewey came back from the battle of Manila there were many surmises as to who would be his bride. It was not long before the fact was decided. Mildred McLean Hazen was the chosen one, and the whole country wished her good luck. The admiral had conquered Montijo, and Mrs. Hazen was the victor of the admiral. Mrs. Dewey speaks French, German and Italian. She is a sister of that well-known politician, John R. McLean, who not long ago was proprietor of a New York newspaper. The McLeans always have been ambitious, politically and socially, and Mrs. Dewey's brother made a financial success out of a paper in Cincinnati. His father was proprietor of the paper before John R., but did not seem to have the financial ability of his son. John R. still owns the Cincinnati paper, but the paper he bought in New York is run by other persons.

Mrs. Dewey has large, gray eyes and is of stout build. Her age is between 40 and 50. A woman is only as old as she looks. Recently Mrs. Dewey created a social uproar by taking precedence of other women of higher rank at the president's reception. She had a reception on hand herself, and, seeing an opportunity, paid her respects to the president out of order, taking the "pas" of several of her social rivals. Then she went to her house and received her own guests. The German ambassador was a trifle late, just a minute beyond the time which was announced on her cards. The result was that when he applied for admittance he was not admitted. There was an informal consultation of the diplomatic corps over the matter; but nothing came of it. The ambassadors could not press the case after Mr. McKinley had explained the matter. Mrs. Dewey is the best-known woman in Washington, and her family connection can supply many of the details of politics which the admiral will have to learn. Mrs. Dewey was a convert to the Catholic faith, and now it is announced that she has been reconverted to the faith of the Episcopal church.

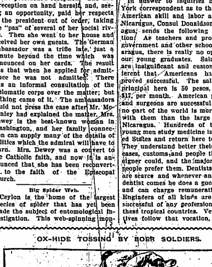


SNAP SHOT PICTURES OF NOTABLE PERSONS OF WASHINGTON.

Big Spider Web.

Ceylon is the home of the largest species of spider that has yet been made the subject of entomological investigation. This web-spinning monster lives in the most mountainous districts of that rugged island and places his trap—not a gossamer snare of airy lightness, but a huge net of yellow silk from five to ten feet in diameter—across the chasms and fissures in rocks, says Our Fellow-Creatures. The supporting guys of this gigantic net, which in all cases is almost strong enough for a hammock, are from five to twenty feet in length, made of a series of twisted webs, the whole being of the diameter of a lead pencil. As might be imagined, this gigantic silken trap is not set for mosquitoes, flies and pestiferous gnats, but for birds, gaudy moths and elegantly painted butterflies, some of the latter having a spread of wing equal to that of a robin or a bluejay.

OX-HIDE TOSSING BY BOER SOLDIERS.



Here is a picture which shows the Boers having fun in camp before Ladysmith at the time when the siege was going pretty well their way. As an English correspondent has pointed out, the popular tendency to represent the Boer as a "soldier saint" is somewhat without foundation in actual fact, for the rough and rugged young burgher of the veldt is about as boisterous and uncouth an individual as one could come across. The picture shows one of the Boers' favorite methods of passing the time while in laager. This game is known as ox hide tossing. To carry out the game a fresh hide is taken and held tight by a number of men, while one of their number is captured and placed on it. The victim is then tossed up in the air, as in the schoolboy fashion of "blanket tossing." Sometimes, it is true, a serious accident oc-

YOUNG MEN'S CHANCES

For Professional Work in Nicaragua Are Slim.

In answer to inquiries by a New York correspondent as to the field for American skill and labor afforded in Nicaragua, Consul Donaldson, of Managua, sends the following information: As teachers and professors in government and other schools in Nicaragua, there is really no opening for our young graduates. Salaries here are insignificant and customs so different that Americans have never proved successful. The salary of a principal here is 50 pesos, or about $17, per month. American physicians and surgeons are successful here, but no part of the world is more crowded with them than the large towns of Nicaragua. Hundreds of the native young men study medicine in the United States and return here to practice. They understand better their own diseases, customs, and people than a foreigner could, and the majority of the people prefer them. Dentists, however, are scarce and whenever an American dentist comes he does a good business and can charge remunerative prices. Engineers of all kinds are the most successful of any professional men in these tropical countries. Very few natives follow that vocation, and most of the engineers employed by the government are foreigners. An engineer's salary at the start is from 250 to 300 pesos ($80 to $100 in United States gold) per month.

GOLF WAS A KING'S GAME.

James I of England Founded the First Club.

The Royal Blackheath Golf club is the oldest golf club in England, and it also claims to be the oldest existing golf club in the world. It was founded by James I. in 1608. For two or three centuries before that time golf had been a popular game in Scotland, but there is no record of any club having been established prior to the Blackheath club. In 1457 the Scottish parliament passed an act enjoining that fute ball and golfe be utterly cryit downe, and nocht usit." A similar act was passed in May, 1491. The Royal and Ancient Golf club at St. Andrews is one of the most famous in the kingdom. It was instituted in 1754, a silver cup having been played for in the May of that year. In 1834 William IV became patron of the club and approved of its being in future styled "the Royal and Ancient Golf club of St. Andrews," and presented a gold medal to be played for annually.—Collier's Weekly.

CAPE TOWN STREET RAILWAYS

Cars Are Made in America, the Iron Posts in England.

J. G. Stowe, consul general of the United States at Cape Town, South Africa, reports to his government that the street railways of Cape Town have track mileage of twenty-five miles, that their employes number 300, that they have fifteen single-deck motor cars, thirty-two double-deck and eight trailer cars in use. The lines run to the suburbs and are extended to the docks. The cars are all made in America. The single deckers have large platforms in front and rear, with roomy seats for the accommodation of smokers. Trailers (open cars) with seats running crosswise are attached to the double deckers morning and evening to accommodate the increased traffic. All the cars, except the trailers, have a middle aisle, with seats on each side holding two persons. The upholstering of the seats is in cane, and is always neat, and the color of the cars (yellow) is kept bright and fresh. The "fourteenth amendment" to the United States constitution does not apply there, but as the English people are kind to the blacks, no distinction is made on the cars. New cars have been lately ordered from the United States to serve the increasing population caused by the exodus of foreigners from the Transvaal and the large numbers of soldiers in the city, who, at half price, are good patrons when off duty or riding to and from the various camps. As most of the merchants, clerks and government officials live out of the city proper, the tram lines are well patronized. No passes or free tickets are furnished. Consul-General Stowe reports also that, outside of the Philippines, there is not a city that has as large a population of Malays as this one. They are a pleasure-loving people, and Saturdays and Sundays are devoted to pleasure, principally picnics and fishing. They are good patrons of the tram lines. The charges are high, 6 cents being the regular rate for a distance of from two to three miles. Eight miles, the extent of the longest line, costs 36 cents.

CROOKS OF OLD CASTILE.

Old, But Clever Swindling Scheme Practical.

The publication in The Free Press of the story of an attempt to rob Michigan people by a clever person writing from Madrid, Spain, with a tale of woe and imprisonment, and of a huge fortune which he was willing to divide with the good friend who would help him regain possession of it, created much interest in spite of the fact that the swindle is an old one. It develops that in addition to the attempt made to interest John J. Potter of Alpena, which matter was placed in the hands of Postoffice Inspector Parsell, there have been many other people in Michigan addressed by the accomplished crooks in Castile, and at least one instance is known where a farmer not far from Detroit was persuaded to send along $1,175 in hopes of getting a portion of the fabled riches.

So exceptionally clever are these Spanish swindlers that it is more than suspected that they are in reality Americans, graduated from the criminal colleges of our large cities and settled in Spain to give greater appearance of likeliness to their strange and romantic stories. In every case the suggestion of gaining wealth by taking interest in their scheme is incidental; indeed, it is often not hinted at until the correspondence has progressed near to the climax. With a delicate sense of refined fraud they proceed upon lines that are criminally artistic and leave the defrauded person half inclined to doubt that he has been swindled even after his money is gone and all trace of his interesting correspondents lost.

In the several sets of correspondence that have been shown the Free Press, there is not one that is based upon the same foundation or romance, or any two that are signed by the same person. Yet so identical are the general situations, so similar the chirography and so uniform the pretensions of trouble and hidden fortune that there cannot be the slightest doubt that they all emanated from the same person or coterie of persons.—Detroit Free Press.

OSTRICH AS A WATCHMAN.

Sagacious Bird, Named Napoleon, Keeps Guard.

An ostrich watchman is the latest trained wonder in Florida. He can be seen every night making his rounds through the pens of an ostrich farm near Jacksonville, says a correspondent of the Philadelphia Times. About a week ago the sagacious bird, which has been named Napoleon, proved his capacity for the appointment. About eight months ago the owners of this herd of ostriches established the farm at this place. Previous to this time and since 1885, when they made their first importations of birds into this country, they carried on their extensive farm in California. Attracted by the salubrious climate and the shorter distance to their markets, they determined upon this step. When they established their farm at Jacksonville, they added as an especial attraction specimens of many rare birds and animals capable of easy domestication. Among the former was a flock of over 200 golden and other varieties of pheasants. In the course of events this fact became known to the many colored gentry, and knowing the darky's natural penchant for "chickin'," the owners feared for their latest purchases. The pheasants, they knew, would be tempting, because all birds look alike to coons, and these resembled more than anything else, nice, fat yellow-legged roosters, and so would become doubly tempting. Nor were the fears of the owners groundless. The "culled" population rapidly passed through the stages of hearing, investigating and finally seeing, the stage of the game the owners of the ostrich herd took steps to prevent the loss of their property, and Napoleon was called into requisition.

RICH PICKING FOR SAILORS.

British Tars Often Derive Fortunes in Prize Money.

As the minister of war has said, we are now at strife with an enemy which does not even possess a cockle-boat, and those brave sailors who are fighting patriotically with their soldier brothers have not the additional incentives that used to be held out to tars in the way of treasure ships, the capture of one of which, incredible as it may seem, in some cases gave each ordinary seaman as much as £2,000—worth then more than now—in prize money. It is not very long since an old sailor died in London who remembered serving on vessels in the royal navy that sometimes waited off one station for a year for a treasure ship they had been warned of, and who was present when our craft, the Ethalion, captured the Thetis, with $1,700,000 on board. About the same time three of our warships, after lying in wait for months, captured the Santa Brigada with a treasure of nearly $2,000,000 in her hold. It needed sixty-three artillery wagons—escorted by armed men and a band of music—to convey the treasure to the citadel of Plymouth; and each captain received as prize money £40,730; each lieutenant had £5,100 and each seaman and marine £182.

Restless Americanos.

All winter long, and into this, the second month of the violet-scented springtime of Mexico, we have heard two distinctive sounds—the click of the kodak and the "taconeo" or ticktack of the little heels of the American girl, marching through San Francisco, Profesa and Plateros streets. All they come, this flitting army of restless Americanos, male and female, as the Lord created them, and instinct with the hereditary nomadism of our race, for no one stays at home except for financial reasons. That is also why many of us here in the tropics will not go to the Paris exposition. It is well to be "franc" about it.—Boston Herald's letter from City of Mexico.

Food at $10 an Ounce.

"A few days ago," said a clubman, "I received a small jar filled with a peculiar brownish paste, which was sent me as a present by a young Chinaman who used to have a laundry here, but is now living in San Francisco. A letter which accompanied the gift explained that the paste was a combination of peanut buds and ginger jelly. That sounds like a joke, but it isn't.

"If you will break open the kernel of a peanut, you will find at the base a little cone shaped formation usually surmounted by two microscopic leaves. It is the life germ of the nut, and if planted would develop into a tree. As my friend Wong explained to me, the nuts are first roasted and then these minute growths are carefully extracted. They are so small it takes many thousands of them to fill a teacup, but when a sufficient number are collected they are put in a mortar and ground into a fine flour, which is subsequently mixed with the ginger jelly and rubbed down to a smooth paste.

"That sent me was about the consistency of cream cheese, and it had a peculiar aromatic taste that was rather pleasant. It is one of the queer semiconfections that the Chinese like to nibble at between courses, and as it costs $10 an ounce it is literally worth almost its weight in gold. I have eaten a little of the preparation, but I don't think I'm apt to acquire a taste for it."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Willie's Menu.

The New England small boy generally shows business capabilities at a tender age, if he is ever going to have them. I have heard of a certain small Boston boy who got into the habit of teasing his mother for pennies until at last she said to him: "Now, Willie, I don't like to give you pennies. If you want money, you should go to work and earn it."

The boy remained thoughtful for some time. Then within a few days the mother perceived that Willie had plenty of pennies. She wondered a bit where he got them, but did not question him. But one summer day she noticed that some sort of a hullabaloo was going on in the back yard. Looking out, she saw Willie surrounded by a mob of boys who were yelling with delight. She went down into the yard to see what was going on, and as she passed out she saw stuck up on the back wall of the house this notice, quite neatly "printed" out with a pencil:

WILLIE JONES WILL EAT.

1 small green worm for	1 cent
1 large green worm for	2 cents
1 small fuzzy worm for	3 cents
1 large fuzzy worm for	5 cents
1 small green toad for	25 cents

Willie was apparently doing a thriving business. His mother interrupted it—at any rate, in her own back yard. I don't suppose that she had any assurance that he wasn't still carrying it on somewhere else.—Boston Transcript.

More Than Imagination.

A commercial traveler, whose wife is one of those women who borrow trouble indiscriminately, had occasion to make a trip east.

His wife was very anxious about him and felt certain that he would fall a victim to smallpox, which was reported to be prevalent in the city to which he was going. She begged him to carry a little lump of asafetida in his pocket to ward off contagion.

Naturally he objected and positively refused to be made the permanent abode of such a persistent odor.

When he came home from his trip, he said to his wife:

"It is wonderful, the power of the imagination. Why, don't you know, I imagined that I smelled asafetida the whole time I was gone."

"It wasn't imagination at all," quietly replied the wily little woman. "I sewed a bit of asafetida in the corner of your coat before you went away!"—Memphis Scimitar.

A Flying Star.

On a summer evening you may see Arcturus high up in the south or southwest in June or July and farther down in the west in August or September. You will know it by its red color. That star has been flying straight ahead ever since astronomers began to observe it at such a speed that it would run from New York to Chicago in a small fraction of a minute. You would have to be spry to rise from your chair, put on your hat and overcoat and gloves and go out on the street while it was crossing the Atlantic ocean from New York to Liverpool. And yet if you should watch that star all your life, and live as long as Methuselah, you would not be able to see that it moved at all. The journey that it would make in a thousand years would be as nothing alongside its distance.—Professor Simon Newcomb in Youth's Companion.

THE PENALTY OF MUSIC.

Players Who Are Forced to Quit Because of Deafness.

"Few realize how many musicians are obliged to go out of the business on account of deafness," said an old musician to a reporter. "Only a few of the thousands of players in the country become famous. The great mass of them plod along day after day in the same old path. When one of us drops out, no one cares to inquire why, but many times the reason is deafness and nothing else.

"Loss of hearing is particularly the affliction of those who play brass instruments. A cornetist who has played in Kansas City orchestras for many years has stopped playing now because he is losing his faculty of hearing. He went out of the business before it was too late. Many of the old players hang to their instruments until the loudest strains of an orchestra or clamor of a band sounds to them like a mere hum. Then they are forced to stop. Their usefulness is gone.

"The musician's deafness is undoubtedly caused by the injurious effects of the constant vibration of musical notes upon the delicate machinery of the ear. A man who blows a cornet or a trombone or a horn of any kind for several hours will notice a queer buzzing in his ears. When the playing is kept up every day in the week and every week in the year for a long number of years, it's no wonder that deafness comes. Some musicians play without effort. Their skill is natural. They pour out music as free as breath. But the skill of others is acquired only by hard and constant labor. In addition to their regular playing in band or orchestra they must practice industriously several hours every day. And these are the ones who lose their hearing and drop out of sight unnoticed."—Kansas City Star.

HE GOT NO MONEY.

An Incident In the Boyhood Life of Louis XIII of France.

One day, when the dauphin, afterward Louis XIII, was 5 years old, the Duke of Sully came out to St. Germain well supplied from the treasury with pocket money for the dauphin, says Mrs. Lucy Crump in The Atlantic. The news of the superintendent's arrival set the whole household astir, eager for a share in the expected spoil. Mme. de Monglat hurried the dauphin into the great courtyard of the castle to receive Sully with as much honor as if he had been the king himself. To please the great man the little prince put his enfants d'honneur and other attendants through a drill with their toy arquebuses and swords.

At the end of the show M. de Sully gave the dauphin 50 crowns, which his mock soldiers seized out of his hands so quickly that he had scarce time even to feel them. At last but one piece remained, which he held fast hold of in spite of the efforts of Mme. de Monglat's tailor to get it from him. "He—he—he's trying to take it from me!" shouted the child.

Mme. de Monglat took it, gathered together all the rest of the coins from the reluctant hands of their possessors and kept them all. The dauphin did not complain, but soon after he said, "But I, too, was a soldier, and I didn't get any money."

Herouard always maintained that a certain reluctance to both spend and give, which characterized Louis in later years, was the direct result of Mme. de Monglat's teaching and example.

A Warning to Borrowers.

A man who was too economical to take this paper sent his little boy to borrow the copy taken by his neighbor. In his haste the boy ran over a $4 stand of bees and in ten minutes looked like a warty summer squash. His cries reached his father, who ran to his assistance and, failing to notice a barbed wire fence, ran into that, breaking it down, cutting a handful of flesh from his anatomy and ruining a $4 pair of pants. The old cow took advantage of the gap in the fence and got into the cornfield and killed herself eating green corn. Hearing the racket, the wife ran, upset a four gallon churn full of rich cream into a basket of kittens, drowning the whole flock. In the hurry she dropped a $7 set of false teeth. The baby, left alone, crawled through the spilled milk and into the parlor, ruining a brand new $20 carpet. During the excitement the oldest daughter ran away with the hired man, the dog broke up 11 setting hens, and the calves got out and chewed the tails off four fine shirts.—Kansas City Journal.

Saving Trouble.

A provident plumber, on leaving his home for a holiday with his family, placed a placard just inside the hall door couched in the following language:

"To burglars or those intending to burgle: All my plated jewelry and other valuables are in the Safe Deposit company's vaults. The trunks, cupboards, etc., contain nothing but secondhand clothing and similar matter too bulky to remove, on which you would realize comparatively little. The keys are in the left hand top drawer of the sideboard—if you doubt my word. You will also find there a check to bearer for $5, which will remunerate you for the loss of time and disappointment. Please wipe your feet on the mat and don't spill any candle grease on the carpets."—Collier's Weekly.

Gentlemen at Odds.

"Huh!" snorted Mr. Sourdropp to Mr. Arguso. "Huh! If you knew half as much as you think you know, you'd know a half more than you do now."

"Is that so?" growled Mr. Arguso. "Well, if you only knew twice as much as you don't know, you'd know three times as much as there is to know."—Baltimore American.

Sheep Shearing and Dipping.

There is no time when dipping sheep is more necessary than when shorn. After the fleece is removed dipping is most effectual and scab, lice or tick must succumb to dipping at that time; there is no wool to protect them, and every part of the body is touched by the dip. The same quantity of dip will go farther then than at other times, hence dipping is done then at less cost. The lambs must not be neglected; this is imperative. Parasites of all kinds will flock to the wool-covered lambs when uncovered by shearing their old hosts. If the parasites are left undisturbed on the shorn sheep the lambs will soon be fairly devoured by them; and if the sheep are dipped it is still necessary to dip the lambs, to destroy the parasites that have probably already taken up their abode on them. Sheep and lambs dipped at shearing time are more comfortable, happier and thriftier than if not dipped, and so they pay the cost of dipping many times over. A few weeks after dipping examine the flock closely and if evidence of parasites of any kind are discovered dip again, while the wool is comparatively short. Some nits may have escaped the first dipping that have gone into business since. It is poor economy to neglect this admonition.—Farm, Stock and Home.

Warning Against Forest and Prairie Fires

Office of State Forest Commissioner.
ST. PAUL, MINN., March 21, 1900.

Chapter 196 of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota for 1895 (Act of April 18th) constitutes Supervisors of towns, Mayors of cities and presidents of village councils Fire Wardens, and it is made their duty to take precaution to prevent forest and prairie fires, and if they occur, to go and extinguish or control them; and in emergencies to call upon any able-bodied male person, over eighteen years of age, to assist. Reports of such fires with particulars tending to fix responsibility therefor shall be made within reasonable time—usually within a week. The Forest Commissioner is required to provide and sign an abstract (as herein) of the penalties under said law, and it is made the duty of the County Commissioners of each county to cause said abstract to be published in at least three issues of the official paper in their respective counties each year between the 15th of April and 1st of November, and they are hereby instructed to publish this notice entire. Under said law.

The following are liable to a penalty not exceeding $500 or imprisonment in the state prison not over ten years or both:

Any person who maliciously sets or causes to be set on fire any woods, prairie or other combustible material whereby the property of another is destroyed and life is sacrificed.

The following are liable to a penalty not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding three months.

Any person refusing, without cause, to assist fire wardens in extinguishing forest or prairie fires.

Any fire warden who neglects to perform his duties.

Any person who wilfully, negligently or carelessly sets on fire, or causes to be set on fire, any woods, prairies or other combustible material thereby causing injury to another.

Any person who shall kindle a fire on or dangerously near to forest or prairie land and leave it unquenched, or who shall be a party thereto.

Any person who shall use other than incombustible fire wads for firearms or carry a naked torch, firebrand or other exposed light in or dangerously near to forest land.

Any person who shall wilfully or heedlessly deface, destroy or remove this or any other warning placard posted under the requirements of the above mentioned Act.

Any railroad company wilfully neglecting to provide efficient spark arresters on its engines; or to keep its right of way to the width of 100 feet cleared of combustible material; or which shall fail to comply with other provisions of Section 12 of the above mentioned Act.

The following are liable to a penalty of not less than $5 nor more than $50:

Any railroad employe who wilfully violates the provisions of Section 12 of the above mentioned Act.

Any owner of threshing or other portable steam engine who neglects to have efficient spark arresters, or who shall deposit live coals or hot ashes without extinguishing the same.

R. C. DUNN (State Auditor,)
Forest Commissioner.

C. C. ANDREWS,
Chief Fire Warden.

To L. B. King:—

You are hereby notified that on the 12th day of May A. D. 1890, in proceedings to enforce the payment of delinquent taxes pursuant to that certain real estate judgment, which was entered in the District Court in and for the County of Polk, in the Fourteenth Judicial District, in the State of Minnesota, on the 21st day of March A. D. 1890, the following described piece or parcel of land is situated in Polk county, State of Minnesota, to-wit:

Lot 20, block 33, Village of St. Hilaire was bid in to the state to satisfy the amount for which it was judged liable in said judgment, interests and costs, for the sum of one dollar and eighty cents; that the above described real estate has become and now is the absolute property of the state; That on the 15th day of March A. D. 1900 the above described real estate was sold by the undersigned county auditor of Polk county, as directed by the state auditor, in accordance with section 101 of Chapter 11 of the general statutes of 1878, and the several acts amendatory thereto, for the sum of eight dollars and eighty-nine cents; that the amount required to redeem said piece or parcel of land from such sale (exclusive of the costs to accrue on this notice) is eight dollars and eighty-nine cents with interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum from said 15th day of March A. D. 1900, until such redemption is made and that the time for redemption of said piece or parcel of land from such sale will expire sixty days after the service of this notice, and proof thereof has been filed in the office of the county auditor of said county.

Witness my hand and official seal this 24th day of April A. D. 1900

50 cents per year. Read by a greater number of Northwestern farmers than any other agricultural paper published. Are you among the number? If not, Why not? Every department in the hands of a specialist. Short talks department. A department where all kinds of questions are answered for the benefit of subscribers, is a leading feature of the paper. No northwestern farmers list of papers is complete without it. This paper and Spectator one year for $1.35.

Cosmopolitan,
New York World
and
The Spectator.

You wish to keep in touch with metropolitan life, through the medium of a great daily. The Thrice-a-Week World of New York is the equivalent of a daily and is a marvellous fund of knowledge concerning the happenings of the day. Each issue contains six to eight pages of eight columns each or over eight thousand columns of reading matter a year. In former days this would have cost you probably as much as $8.00 a year, by itself. Now you can have it, if you wish, in connection with your home paper and The Cosmopolitan Magazine. Three together one year for only $2.50.

At the assessors meeting at Red Lake Falls they finally agreed upon the following bases of assessment:—Horses $8, $15 and $25; cattle $5, $7 and $12; work oxen $15, sheep $1, hogs $2 per cwt, wagons from $5 to $20, sewing machines $3 to $15, watches and clocks $1 to $50, organs $5 to $30, pianos $20 to $100. Farm lands were averaged from $1.50 to $2.75 per acre.

A farmer recently drifted into a hardware store and when asked by the manager: "Don't you want to buy a bicycle to ride around your farm on? They're cheap now. Can give you one for $35." "I'd sooner put the $35 into a cow," said the farmer. "But think," said the manager, "how foolish you would look riding around the farm on a cow." "Oh, I don't know," said the farmer, "no more foolish perhaps, than I would look milking a bicycle."

Johnnie Kollisler, better known as Bohemian Johnnie, saved little Earnest Halverson from a watery grave Sunday. The latter having fallen in off the high bank on the west side of the race near the mill. Johnnie is about fourteen years old, but the instant he saw little Earnest fall, he jumped in and caught him as he was going down for the last time. Parents should warn their children from going down to such a dangerous place. Had the gates at the race been open it would have been impossible for either to be saved. Let this instance by a warning to all.

A Jail for Red Lake County.

The commissioners of Red Lake county accompanied by Auditor Zeh were here last night and met Capt. Rhinehart who is agent for the Canton Bridge company which ownes the cells that were used by the county in the old jail building and that are still stored here. It is understood that the commissioners propose to purchase the cells and remove them to the Falls where they will be used in making a bluff at the retention of the county seat there. They are good property and it will be money well placed if they are purchased for the use of Red Lake county.—Crookston Times, May 3.

Dentist.

—Dr. J. H. Thomas, the Crookston dentist will be at Hotel Markham, St. Hilaire, May 25th and 26th prepared to do all kinds of up to date dental work in all branches. All work warranted. Remember the dates 25th and 26th.

To Kill Gophers.

To kill gophers, spread a slice of bread, with butter or lard; sprinkle a liberal coat of strychnine over it and work it in with a knife. Then cut the bread into cubes about one-half inch square. Take an old broomstick and prod around between the heaps of dirt until the gopher hole is located, and with an old table fork drop a piece of bread in the hole. Open 4 or 5 places in each row of heaps, and you seldom fail to succeed with one application. In case of injury from rusty nails, salt saturated with kerosene oil bound on the wound will give almost instant relief, and I believe will check all danger of blood poisoning or lockjaw.—R. M. Morton, Chippewa Co., Minn.

—If you are troubled with rheumatism take the Imperial Blood and Rheumatism cure. It will positively cure all diseases arising from impure blood, and is sold under an absolute guarantee to benefit or money refunded. Call for free sample at the New Drug Store.

The Fortunate Farmer.

There is one farmer who will sit in the front door and smoke the pipe of contentment, he who looks to grass rather than wheat for a living, knowing that milking time comes whether it rains or shines, and that a little more milk, a little more butter and a little more beef. If he has a note in the bank he knows that the cows will pay the freight, and while a "little more rain" may mean to him "a little more profit. Then if he is fortunate enough to have a few sheep, a few hogs and a few hens he can say, "let her rain, there will be a chance to get up the hay before frost." That fellow won't worry a bit when the July hot and humid weather comes, though he may have few acres of wheat to be blighted. He knows that his neighbors will have some fifty cent wheat that he can buy, and if per chance the crop should be a total failure his flour bill can be met from somewhere by one or two good "bossies."—Hutchinson Independent.

Modern Woodmen.

Deputy Head Consul, W. A. Case, during the two weeks he has been working for the St. Hilaire camp has secured twenty-four applications for membership. If all are accepted St. Hilaire will have the largest camp of Woodmen in Red Lake County.

Climate and Crop Bulletin.

For the week ending May 7th, 1900.

There was practically no rain north of the Minnesota River during the week and in southern counties there were only light and much scattered showers. The weather was cool in the middle of the week, and on the mornings of the 2nd, 3rd and 4th there were severe frost and ice was formed in many places as thick as window glass. Early in the week high winds dried out the soil, and in Kittson county a severe dust storm was reported. The barley and oats are about all seeded; most of the wheat and much of the oats and barley are up and growing very nicely with good stands, though in Polk county it is said that wheat is not as even as it would have been with earlier and more abundant rains. The cool weather of the week has been favorable to the root growth and stooling of early sown small grains. Potato planting is pretty well advanced. Flax has been sown during the week, and in a few places it is all in the ground. Some corn has been planted, and a great deal of corn ground is ready for the seed, but many are deferring planting till the soil is warmer. Gardening is very well advanced, and the market gardeners have made the first deliveries of out-of-door grown stuff. The warm weather of the previous week, started the fruit buds, and wild plums, crab apples, cherries and strawberries are in full bloom, or nearly so: Reports as to the effects of the frosts are contradictory. The cold was severe enough, especially on low lands, to freeze the young plants of vegetables, and grains, and possibly the fruit blossom, and in some places the vegetables and all grains but wheat were wilted to the ground, but as the frosts of early May have not caused serious loss in previous years, it is probable that the injury to fruit and grains will be found to be slight this season. Pastures are green, but the growth of grass will not be rapid till there is more rain, and warmer weather.

—It is better than really money because it cures rheumatism constipation sick headache, indigestion. Imperial Blood and Rheumatism cure.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given that all persons found riding on bycicles on the sidewalk in said village will be prosecuted and dealt with according to law. Dated at St. Hilaire Minn., this 8th day of May 1900.

Dated May 7th, 1900. 41-43
[SEAL] ADAM ZEH,
County Auditor, Red Lake County, Minn.

I consider it not only a pleasure but a duty I owe to my neighbors to tell about the wonderful cure effected in my case by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I was taken very badly with flux and procured a bottle of this remedy. A few doses of it effected a permanent cure. I take a pleasure in recommending it to others suffering from that dreadful disease.—J. W. Lynch, Dorr, W. Va. This remedy is sold at The Imperial Drug Store.

Council Proceedings.

Regular meeting of the village council held Monday evening May 7th 1900. All members present. Meeting called to order by President Rapp. Minutes of last regular meeting was read and approved. On motion the report of the street commissioner was accepted. On motion the following bills were allowed:

H A Johnson, 1 month marshal salary	$40 00
D Patterson, work as per bill	15 00
A O Adams, " "	17 05
S Harris, street work "	42 00
St. Hilaire Lumber Co., lumber	6 75
D Patterson, 51 gal. gasoline	9 02

On motion the petition of K O Gigstad, et al was referred to road and bridge committee. On motion H E Adams was appointed special police officer for said village without salary. On motion the finance committee was instructed to negotiate with H E Ives for a tract of land to be used as a dumping ground for said village—price not to exceed $150.00. On motion the street commissioner was instructed to open up the alley in block No. 64 in said village. On motion meeting adjourned.

Attest:—

C. G. RAPP, President.

Regulate Your Watch.

At Johnson's barber shop and if it don't keep time, leave it, and we will repair it and warrant it to keep time for one year. New watches, clocks chains and jewelry for sale at the lowest prices. I will be at Johnson's barber shop the 10th 11th and 12th and 25th and 26th of every month. All work left at the shop has my personal attention. When you come to Red Lake Falls make the Palace Jewely Store your headquarters.

I am yours truly
PROF. J. Q. ADAMS,
Watchmaker and Optician.

The ancients believed that rheumatism was the work of a demon within a man. Any one who has had an attack of sciatic or inflammatory rheumatism will agree that the infliction is demoniac enough to warrant the belief. It has never been claimed that Chamberlain's Pain Balm would cast out demons, but it will cure rheumatism, and hundreds bear testimony to the truth of this statement. One application relieves the pain, and this quick relief which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. For sale by The Imperial Drug Store.

—For cuts and sores there is nothing better than the Imperial Carbolic salve.

Her Heart's Secret

Or Under a Spell.

By Jean Warner.

"Dear me! Who'd have thought it?" said Miss Felicia, advancing to meet her visitor. "Miss Grey, as I live, and looking so sweet, and so fresh, and so delightful. This is a pleasure, indeed!" and Miss Feenix, whose withered visage could never have been called either fresh, sweet or delightful, puckered up her face into a vinegary smile, and kissed Miss Marian affectionately on the cheek. 'Do come in and sit down. I was just straightening things up a bit. Widow Lee and Sophia Dawes—you know Sophia Dawes holds her head very high now, as if people could forget her father shoveled in their coals. Well, as I was saying, they stopped in for a chat and a cup of tea; and some people can't even take a bit of cake without leaving things all in a muck. Sit down here by the window and have a fan. Take a chair; it won't crush that lovely lawn. As I was saying to Mary Wirt, last Sunday, 'Miss Grey certainly has the sweetest taste in dress.' You know Mary Wirt—old Wirt, the soapboiler's granddaughter? Left her a lot of money; but, my dear, soap will stick. She always looks dowdy, dress how she will."

"I was just passing by," said Miss Marian, who felt that this sudden renewal of friendship required some slight explanation, and who never let honesty betray her into an awkwardness, "and your little place looked so sweet, Miss Feenix, that I thought of old times, when dear mamma used to bring us here, and felt I must stop for a chat. We have had so much company this summer, and I have had so little time to visit old friends—"

"I am sure of it," said Miss Feenix, accepting the calumet of peace eagerly, for Miss Grey's friendship would be quite a feather in her spinster cap. "Of course it's only natural that attractive young people like you and Mr. Laurence—dear me! it seems only the other day that he was little Laurie—it's only natural, I say, that you should draw gay young company to Greylands; and, then, Clive Towers is so near. I hear that they are having fine times there this summer. Miss Fannie just home—and what a sweet, lovely girl she is, so bright and charming, and that fairy-like creature, that was with her in church on Sunday. Is it really true that she is young Mr. Clive's intended? I couldn't help noticing that his eyes were fixed half the time on her face; but then, my dear—you will excuse my saying—I thought and told Louisa Knoll, who was speaking of the matter, that it had been a settled thing for years between Mr. Clive and you."

If Miss Feenix had intended to spur her visitor on, she could not have chosen her words more judiciously.

Miss Marion's eyes flashed; as she rejoined, loftily:

"You are quite mistaken, I assure you, Miss Feenix. Mr. Clive never has thought of me, nor I of him. I have been Fannie's particular friend, and, no matter what happens, will always be the same to her. But, as for any nearer relationship, I am happy to tell you there is no probability of it—none whatever."

"Dear me! now, who'd have thought it?" said Miss Felicia, with a long-drawn breath. "Things do turn out so differently from what people expect. Well, my dear, I can't say that I'm sorry, and I can't say that I'm glad, for Herbert Clive is the finest catch in the county."

"Do you think so?" asked the visitor, with scornful doubt.

"Do I think so, my dear? Why, I really know so!" answered Miss Felicia, positively. "Why, his father's wealth must be enormous. Not that he wasn't poor enough once, for his own parents left him nothing; but old Basil Clive, his father's only brother, adopted him, and schooled, and set him up fairly in business; then finished off by dying without any will, and leaving his nephew heir to everything. The old man was the queerest, most eccentric old being. No person had any idea of what he was worth until he died, and then he was found to have at least a million of money banked and stocked, and invested in every sort of way—not to mention the land about here, which is worth now fully a quarter of a million more. I happen to know so positively, because Luck Blake, the assessor's wife, is a particular friend of mine, and she says Robert Clive's taxes alone take a handsome sum yearly; for Robert Clive was old Basil's only heir."

Miss Marian's brow darkened; the skeleton, then, was not the fleshless gaunt of pecuniary distress; the proud Clives had never felt the pinch of poverty. There were no mortgages upon those smiling acres, those waving fields and shadowy forests; no debts were hanging over the Towers like a threatening cloud.

Miss Marian was rather disappointed. She had entertained a vague idea that it was some enraged creditor whose menaces she had overheard, some defrauded money-lender, who was making vain and desperate efforts to obtain justice.

"His only heir," continued Miss Feenix, who, when wound up for a gossip, would have kept at it all day. "Though there was, I remember, some sort of a queer story, at old Basil's death, of a wild young fellow making his appearance at the house and claiming to be his son by a private marriage. Of course, nobody believed him, and, indeed, 'twas said he acted more like a madman than a Christian; cursed and swore at Robert, and declared that he was betraying the old man's trust."

"Dear me!" exclaimed Miss Marian, with eager triumph flashing in her eyes; "and how was the matter settled? What became of the pretended son?"

"They got rid of him somehow, and hushed the matter up," answered Miss Feenix. "Of course, no one put any faith in his story, for old Basil Clive was not the sort of man to make a fool of himself, and everybody knew that Robert was his heir. If he hadn't been"—Miss Feenix nodded her head sagely—"he never would have got Agnes Dean for his wife; for, with her money and attractions, she could have looked for the best in the land. Her father would not give his consent to the marriage until Robert Clive was master of Clive Towers; then he was willing enough."

"But suppose the pretended heir could have proved his claim?" asked Miss Marian, who was listening, with breathless attention. "Suppose Basil Clive had, indeed, left a son? Then—then—"

"Robert Clive would never have touched a penny of his uncle's money," said Miss Feenix, positively—"not a penny; for there was no will. It would have been different for him and his, my dear—very different, indeed! Herbert and Fannie wouldn't be the catches they are now, I can tell you. 'Twas old Basil's money made them all."

"Old Basil's money!" Miss Marian walked home with the words echoing in her ears and a look of malicious triumph in her eyes.

As she repassed the open gate of Clive Towers, she paused and glanced in at the graceful group assembled on the flowery terrace.

A riding expedition through the shaded lane had been proposed, and the young people were just preparing to mount.

Fannie made the most bewitching of Di Vernons, in her dark-blue riding habit, with her soft, brown tresses and laughing face looking out from beneath a masculine beaver.

Fenton Forest was reining in his prancing military charger at her side, while Herbert Clive was carefully inspecting the saddle-girths of the snow-white Fairy, that was the especial pride of his father's stable, ere he trusted the spirited little Arab with the slight, graceful figure waiting quietly beside the granite pillar of the porch.

It was to this figure that Miss Marian's most malevolent glance was directed. Sybil Wraye was in her simple riding habit of olive-green, her lovely hair knotted up beneath a soft cavalier hat, whose drooping plumes shaded her beautiful face most becomingly, was a picture that might have disarmed the malice of any but a sister-woman.

But Miss Marian Grey was a woman, and a rival; hence, the light in her eye grew more pitiless as she recognized the beauty and grace she could not deny.

"Old Clive's money made them all," she repeated to herself—"old Basil Clive's money! What if it should not rightly be theirs? What if, after all, there is another heir? You have given me a clue, Miss Feenix—you have given me a clue—and it will not be my fault if I do not follow it to the end. It will not be my fault if Herbert Clive brings that white-faced chit as mistress at Clive Towers.'

CHAPTER XVI.

A Morning Ride.

It was chiefly for Sybil's benefit this ride had been proposed. Dr. Bond had suggested active recreation of all kinds as the best tonic for his patient, and Herbert and Fannie had, with praiseworthy earnestness, seconded his efforts to arouse their guest from the state of nervous depression into which she had fallen.

She started at every sound; the slightest whisper blanched her cheek to a deathly pallor; she could neither rest or sleep. Some ever-present terror seemed to haunt her night and day, and she drooped beneath it, like the flower that is shadowed by the deadly boughs of the Upas tree.

But, despite the cloud upon her happiness, the gentle girl had unconsciously entwined around her the affection of all at Clive Towers. Not only Herbert and Fannie, who were already captive to her charms, but every servant in the house rendered the unexacting guest most willing attention; and even Mr. Clive's prejudice had somehow melted away, and he had never carried out his first intention of writing to Madam Fleury and inquiring from her the antecedents of his daughter's friend.

His stern, cold eyes often followed Sybil's fairy-like form with a strange interest, and though she avoided him persistently, his tone, when they did meet, was as gentle and kind as when he greeted his own loved daughter.

Even stern, unyielding Robert Clive had fallen under Sybil's spell.

Only this morning, as the horses were being led out, he had stopped Herbert with a warning.

"The Arab is a little restive. If Miss Wraye is to ride her, be sure that the girths are safe. Fairy is gentle, but, as you know, she is easy to take fright; so keep an eye on her."

Herbert smiled to himself as he assented. It was scarcely necessary to warn him to watch the horse that Sybil rode.

Fannie and Fenton had dashed off in a mad race through the woods, and, for the first time since their meeting by the sunset river, now nearly a week ago, Sybil and Herbert were alone.

Their way led through a grassy lane, bounded on either side by thickset hedges and shaded by giant trees that met in a canopy over their heads. Their horses' feet fell noiselessly upon the grassy sward. In the silence of the summer morning they seemed brought again despite themselves face to face.

Herbert felt strangely embarrassed and constrained; his memory of Sybil's unconscious revelations were still fresh in his mind. He felt as guilty as though he had stolen into the pure sanctuary of her maiden heart and robbed it of its guarded treasures.

But there was no trace of maiden pride or maiden coyness in Sybil's manner—no reflection of the blush and smile she had worn in her dream; only the white rigid repressed expression of pain on every feature—the sudden, frightened glance of the beautiful eye—the shadow of fear and terror over all.

She guided her horse with a listless, uncertain hand, she seemed to hear without heeding, Herbert's effort at conversation; she answered absently and at random.

Pained and mortified, Herbert himself grew moody and taciturn, and they had gone on for some moments in silence, when Sybil suddenly seemed to arouse herself by a painful effort, and said, in a grave and earnest tone:

"I want to make a request of you, Mr. Clive—a strange request; one that you will not understand, and that I cannot explain."

"To ask of me is to obtain, Miss Sybil, as you know," was the somewhat constrained reply.

"No; I do not know," she corrected, "for I am aware that my request will seem an utterly unreasonable one. I want you"—she gave one of her frightened glances around her a sshe spoke, and lowered her voice almost to a whisper—"I want you to leave home, Mr. Clive; to go abroad, if possible, for an indefinite time."

"To leave home?" echoed Herbert, in unconcealed surprise. "To go abroad? My dear Miss Wraye, you are incomprehensible!"

"I know it," she answered, in a despairing tone. "I told you I could not explain. Yet, 'tis as Fannie's friend I speak; as—as"—her voice faltered, "as your friend. There is danger threatening you here, Mr. Clive—terrible danger; and—and, until that danger is removed, I beg of you to leave home."

Herbert's face flushed.

"Danger threatening me here, in my own home, and you would have me flee from it, like a coward? My dear Miss Wraye, you must have but a poor opinion of my manhood, of my courage!"

"There are perils against which manhood, courage, all are vain," she answered, in a voice thrilling with pain. "There is a danger which no hand, however strong, can combat—dark, unknown dangers, from which flight is the only safety; and—and"—her soft eyes fixed themselves upon him, full of terrible meaning, "Mr. Clive, it is such danger that threatens you. Oh, for your own sake, for the sake of all you love, be warned in time! Fly, fly, before it is too late!"

But his face only set itself sternly into the likeness of his father—into a stranger and more forbidding likeness still, that of his great-uncle, Basil Clive.

"You forget that you speak to a man, Miss Wraye," he answered, proudly—"to a man in whom obedience to such a warning would be both weak and cowardly. To fly from any danger is womanly but to fly from an unknown danger would be the basest pusillanimity."

"Then you will not hear me—you will not heed me?" she cried in a tone whose pathos went to Herbert's heart. "Surely, surely, the curse of Cassandra is mine!"

"Sybil, Sybil!" cried the young man, throwing off the mask of formality and speaking in a moved voice, "for God's sake have done with these mysteries! What is this shadow under which your young life is withering? What cloud is it that hangs between you and the sunshine of love and hope? For I know that no other love, no other tie, binds your heart. I know, darling—forgive me if I hold the precious secret dropped from your unconscious lips—I know the first pure love of that maiden heart is all my own!"

"You know that—that—"

Oh, the beautiful blush that stole like a dawn over that pallid face, the light that trembled in those downcast eyes, the quiver of those parted lips! For one bright moment the spell was broken; the statue lived, the woman breathed!

"I know that you do care for me a little, Sybil," was the happy answer. "Tell me, darling, is it not so? There is no other love binding your heart? Only one little word, Sybil—one little word will lift the weight of suspense from my heart. Say that I have no rival, Sybil—your hand and heart are free. Darling, I can wait patiently. I will not harrass you with vows of love if you will only tell me that I have some far-off hope of winning you at last."

"Hope, hope? No, no, there is no hope!" she answered, the life-light fading from her face. "But it is neither love nor lover that stands between us, Mr. Clive. You mistook my words strangely if you thought so. I have no thought of other or other lover when I tell you the barrier between us is one we ne'er can cross. But—but"—she hesitated for a moment, and then she went on, in a clear, sweet and sorrowful voice—"if it will make you believe me, trust me, listen to me more willingly, I will speak to you as one dead might speak from a far-off sphere, and tell you that, but for the dark abyss that yawns between us, I—I—might have loved you, might have listened to you, might have found earth's sweetest happiness at your side. It can never be now—never, never, never! But for the sake of what might have been; in pity for the heart that you have wakened, only to make it suffer more keenly, listen to me—fly and save yourself from dangers that I know, yet cannot avert!"

"I cannot listen to you, Sybil," he answered gravely. "I would brave death willingly at your bidding, but I cannot sacrifice my manhood. If danger threatens those dear to me, I must stay and share it. And for your other words, Sybil, there is a whispering hope in them that I will hold through life and death. As long as no other tie, no other love, stands between, you are mine, mine! Mine, darling, despite your fears, your tremors—despite your own little timid self! Mine, though I wait for years ere I can claim you. Mine, although a thousand shadowy perils stood between us—though death itself barred the way!"

Even as he spoke there was a rustle in the thick undergrowth beside him, and a dark face, inflamed with envy and hate, looked out upon the riders.

With a cry of terror, Sybil threw her horse back upon his haunches, as a sharp report rang out through the woods.

A flash for a moment blinded Herbert's eyes, and when he could see again, Sybil lay wounded and bleeding beneath the Arab's feet.

CHAPTER XVII.

Fannie's Fortune.

Fannie's pretty bay Terry, had won the impromptu race, and her mistress drew her up triumphantly in the little glade which was the appointed goal, and waited for the arrival of the cavalier, whose heavy charger had made no time at all against the spirited little mare.

"Good Terry, pretty Terry!" said the young girl, stroking the silken mane of her pet; "you have won my gloves for me this morning, and you shall have a new silver bit. This ugly curb hurts my beauty's mouth. There, there!" as the animal began to snort and quiver, "what's the matter? What do you see? There is nothing here to harm you, Terry. Why, Terry—"

But Fannie's soothing tone broke off suddenly in a cry of alarm, as she, too, caught sight of the object that had terrified her mare.

Just beside her the heavy undergrowth had parted suddenly, and a weird, ghostly figure appeared, as if emerging from the earth—a shriveled, palsied old woman whose still erect form and flashing eyes seemed in unnatural contrast to her trembling limbs and wizened features—a woman whose fierce gaze was fixed upon the young rider with such malignant hate that even thoughtless Fanny was quick to recognize and shrink from it appalled.

"So you are riding out, my fine young lady?" mumbled the old crone, showing her toothless gums in a hideous smile—"riding out this beautiful morning. Maybe you'd cross my hand with a silver sixpence, and let the old woman tell you your fortune. It ought to be a rare one, with such a face and form as yours. Cross my hand, pretty lady, and let the old woman read your fortune!"

Fannie glanced around her quickly; Fenton was not yet in sight; Sybil's warning recurred to her mind, and made her cold with fear; the old woman's glittering eyes, fixed full upon her, seemed to read her very soul.

She advanced a step, and placed her skinny, yellow hand upon Terry's bridle, while she still kept her uncanny gaze upon Fannie's frightened face.

"Your fine soldier gentleman has missed his way," she said, with a malicious leer. "I saw him galloping down the river lane fiv eminutes ago. What! are you afraid? Afraid! The daughter of the proud, haughty master of Clive Towers, afraid of an old woman like me? Ha, ha, ha! Why, your father would have poor Rizpah's carcass thrown to the dogs, if she dared to lay a finger on you. I know him, you see. Ha, ha!" There was something fearful in the old crone's discordant laugh. "Yes, yes, I know him well!"

"Then you know he would never harm the old and weak," answered the young girl, with dignity.

For, with all her childishness, there was a proud, noble spirit within Fannie Clive's breast.

"Never harm the old and weak?" repeated the old woman, bitterly—"he would never harm the old and weak? Try him, my beautiful lady. Tell him that old Rizpah is in his power, and see what he will do. Ha, ha! Why, he would grind me into power! He would crush these palsied bones one by one. There would not be a hair of this aged head left, if Robert Clive had his haughty way!"

Fannie trembled at the old creature's words. She was mad, evidently. None but a mad woman could talk talk thus wildly of her papa. And, oh, how quiet and lonely the place was! Fenton must have lost his way. She must humor this poor creature; she must try and get away from her quietly, for those fierce, eager eyes warned Fannie that old Rizpah would be dangerous if enraged.

"Tell my fortune for me, won't you?" she said, drawing off her pretty gauntlet, and placing a silver piece in the old woman's withered hand. "I have never had it told yet, so be sure you make it a true one."

With trembling eagerness the old woman clutched the girl's snowy hand.

"I will make it true enough never fear—true enough! Ha ha! Old Rizpah will make it true enough!"

And still holding the little hand in a grasp that was almost painful, she began to mumble and mutter over its delicate lines, as if repeating some evil incantation.

Fannie's terror was for a moment conquered by the fascination all young minds feel in such efforts to unveil the unknown.

Surely, she, whose present was so bright, and full of promise, had only dazzling hope and happy love to look forward to in the future.

With a blush and a smile, this darling of fortune lifted the veil of Fate.

"Well, mother, what do you see?" she asked, gaily.

"What do I see?" repeated Rizpah, slowly lifting her fierce, malignant gaze to the young girl's face. "Does the daughter of Robert Clive, the spoiler, the usurper, ask what I see? Listen, then," she said, sinking her voice to a low, threatening whisper, that sounded to the terrified Fannie like the hiss of a reptile before it launches its deadly sting. "I see only poverty, ruin, disgrace. I see a broken home and a blackened name. I see a false lover, a false friend, a false servant. I see a darkened life and a broken heart. It is enough. Ha, ha!" Rizpah's wild laugh of triumph echoed through the woods. "Enough—aye, enough even for the fair young daughter of Robert Clive! Not I, but the stars have said it. It is enough—it is enough!"

"Fenton! Fenton!" shrieked Fannie, as that young gentleman's horse at length appeared through the trees. "O, Fenton, come—come quick to me!"

"Call him!" said old Rizpah, with her malignant laugh—"aye call your fine lover to your side. He cannot change the fates—he cannot change the future. Call him now! Ha ha! the day will come when you will call him in vain!"

"She is mad—she is mad!" exclaimed Fannie whose lovely face was ashen with terror. "Do not harm her Fenton; the poor creature is mad!"

"What has she said? I'll break every bone in her wretched old body!" said the young man fiercely. "You cursed old hag how have you frightened this lady?"

"How have I frightened her?" repeated Rizpah, with an evil smile. "By unveiling the truth. It is an ugly thing to look at sometimes, though not as ugly as a false heart, that is bought by ill-gotten gold—not as ugly as a fickle mind, that turns, like the wethercock, to every passing wind. Ha, ha! I have shown her the truth. Let her profit by it in time!"

And still shaking her hand with a threatening gesture at the pair, old Rizpah disappeared among the forest shadows.

"Who is she? What did she say to you?" asked Fenton, indignantly. "My darling, my darling, I am here to protect you now; do not tremble so; but what did she say to you?"

"Oh, I don't know—I don't know!" answered Fannie, hysterically. "Everything that was cruel and dreadful. Oh, Fenton, if it should be true—if it should, indeed, be true! If poverty and disgrace should, indeed, be before me?"

"Absurd!" answered Fenton, cheerily. "Poverty and disgrace before you! Why, the old witch must be as mad as a March hare; she can't even know the tricks of her trade. Poverty and disgrace before you, my beautiful queen of hearts—you, whose pathway is gilded by the brightest sunshine of fortune—you, who already have a worshipper at your feet who would count life a paltry sacrifice in your service! Fannie, Fannie, if you would only believe in the depth, the fervor, the fidelity of my love! If you would only listen to me seriously, darling, for I love you—I do love you from my very soul!"

The shadow on Fannie's swet face made it serious enough now.

"You love me, Fenton? Ah, yes, perhaps you think so now; but if trouble, sorrow should come upon me; if I were no longer gay, and bright, and happy, would you love me then, Fenton? You have often told me that you turned to me like the flower to the sun. But if the sun were darkened, Fenton?"

"Do you think so poorly of my heart's deepest love, Fannie, as to suppose anything could change me?" was the reproachful answer. "Why, my own sweet little love, I would welcome, aye, gladly, the storm that would send you to my arms, to my heart for shelter and support! You do not know what a man's love is, dear, or you would not wound me by such a thought, such a suspicion. But, alas for me! your fortune is so sure, your home so happy, your life so blessed, that I cannot make it brighter by my love. I can only plead, and, I fear, plead in vain."

"Not in vain," said Fannie, softly slipping her little hand into his—"not in vain, dear Fenton. I thought that—that we were only playing lovers. Until this morning, I did not know the value of a true and faithful heart. If you do love me truly, Fenton, I will love you, and—be true to you forever!"

"My darling—my own sweet love—bless you for those words!" was the rapturous reply. "True to you, Fannie! Darling, you are my own sweet love, forever and forever. You are my own sweet love forever and forever!"

Even with his words, a sharp report rang out through the forest—the pistol shot that had laid Sybil Wraye at her lover's feet.

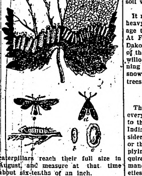
FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

American Procris.

The scientific name is Harrisima Americana. The caterpillar is quite destructive to the foliage of the grapevine. The eggs are deposited in clusters of 20 or more. The caterpillars of the Procris do not scatter after leaving the eggs, but feed side by side on the under side of the leaf, their heads all directed towards the margin of the same. These little black and yellow insects eat at first only the soft tissues of the foliage, leaving the fine net-work of veins untouched; but as they grow older and stronger all but the large veins are eaten. The caterpillars reach their full size in August, and measure at that time about six-tenths of an inch.



The little moth is a bluish or greenish-black color. It has very narrow wings, which expand nearly an inch across, and flies during the warmest hours of the day, when it frequents flowers. Its flight is rather peculiar, and is quite slow and unsteady. Wherever this insect occurs in large numbers it becomes quite injurious, but as it leads a social life in its caterpillar state it can readily be destroyed by the use of arsenical poisons.

Benefit of Top Grafting.

(Condensed from Farmers' Review Stenographic Report of Wisconsin Roundup Institute.)

George J. Kellogg read a paper on top grafting, in which he said in part:

I have probably 50 varieties now growing top-worked on different stock. Twenty of these varieties are on Duchess stock. I find Tetofsky worthless as a stock. Transcendent is a good stock, but I find that winter apples on this stock tend to early maturity of fruit. Many kinds are a success on transcendent crab, and I have great hopes of seedlings grown from this crab to give us roots that will better stand our dry winters. For successful top-grafting we must have vigorous stocks, and for this reason I have great faith in the Virginia and other strong growing crabs; for they get hold of the soil and get all there is in it. Virginia crab has particularly strong limbs, and is much the best of any I have seen. Shields' crab is the best one I have tried in the nursery, as one scion will form a top; but a Virginia crab, with a leader and four arms grafted is worth many times its cost for an orchard tree.

There is no limit to this top-grafting enterprise. I am told that in the orchard of Mr. Burbank in California there is one tree that has been grafted with 525 different varieties. What a sight that tree will be when it comes into bearing!

My success with pears and plums has not been as good as with apples. I have increased the productiveness of Miner by grafting one-third of the top with DeSoto. I find no plum stocks equal to Americana; the Mariana is a failure.

There are a few pointers that lead to success in top-grafting. After the stock is established the sooner it is worked the better. If stout enough to hold the scion firmly, scions no larger than your finger are best. Avoid grafting limbs needing the saw. When top-working the Virginia crab the scions should be inserted not more than six to twelve inches from the body. The earlier in spring the grafting can be done the more successful is it likely to be, for if you wait till June the scions are likely to be a little off. But even in June, if the scions are in perfect condition, I have had 95 per cent of the grafts live, when they were on apples and pears. Plums and cherries, for best results, must be grafted before the frost is out. Liquid wax, applied warm, I consider best; and to protect from sun and keep off the birds, a piece of newspaper wound about the wax is a benefit. Some prefer waxed cloth, but in whatever way the wax is applied, it is of more importance than the setting of the scions. Scions may be cut in October or any time after that except when the wood is frozen. They may be cut in the spring when the buds are swollen, if immediately inserted. Great care is necessary to have the scions in perfect condition. Old trees are not profitable to top-work, not even Duchess of Oldenberg, while Duchess may do fairly well when young to use as a stock.

Horticultural Observations.

It would be perhaps a good thing if our horticultural and other similar societies would give more attention to ornamental gardening. It is one of the needs of our Western farm life. To surround a family with beauty frequently means to make them contented. Trees and flowers affect the character of those that live among them. If a care of such things is necessary in the East, where trees and plants naturally abound, it is the more necessary in the West, where homes have been established on plains that were once treeless and swept even now by drouth-breeding winds.

In planting trees in regions that have before been treeless many adverse conditions have to be overcome. In the first place the soil is covered with a sod, and this is not a promising condition for tree growth. The soil is not naturally in the condition where it will hold water, for it lacks humus. The best way to overcome these obstacles is to plant the trees close together, so that it will be impossible for grass to thrive in their shade. This of course does not include such trees as the cottonwood. In planting thickets it is advisable to get rid of the grass at the beginning and give the trees a fair chance.

In the effort to change bleakness into beauty the greatest ally is the tree. The tree is the easiest to establish because it can send down its roots long distances into the moist subsoil, and will exist when smaller plants perish with the drouth. The trees once established protect smaller plants that are afterward set out and become the sturdy barriers against destructive winds and withering heat. Trees, however, must be themselves protected and fostered till they have obtained a firm hold of the soil and have established the ability of appropriating the soil water.

It may not be generally known that heavy snows sometimes do great damage to planted groves of forest trees. At Fargo, the location of the North Dakota experiment station, the trees of the grove are protected by a row of willows ten rods to the north and running parallel with the grove. The snow drifts in the lee of the willow trees instead of in the grove.

Growing Pop Corn.

The demand for pop corn increases every year, yet the crop is never equal to the market, says Joel Shomaker in Indiana Farmer. Farmers do not consider the profits of this special crop or there would be more grown for supplying home demands. Pop corn requires about the same soil as that demanded by the sweet and field varieties. A sod or vegetable mould, containing more sand than clay and having previous clean culture is best adapted to corn growing. If plowed in the fall or winter and left to freeze until the spring weeds begin to grow before planting, the land will be in fine condition. This crop wants plant food like all others, but can get along with little nitrogen. An average fertilizer might contain about 8 per cent each of phosphoric acid and potash and perhaps 1½ per cent to 2 per cent nitrogen; from 400 to 600 pounds per acre would be considered a fair application. Another popular fertilizer for corn is a mixture of about 350 pounds of fine ground bone and 100 pounds muriate of potash per acre broadcasted and well mixed with the soil before planting time.

Pop corn may be planted closer than any other varieties. His plan of planting is to make the furrows three feet apart and have the corn stand one stalk in a hill, 14 inches apart in the rows. If the corn is planted very early or late it will not suffer so much from the worms as the medium planted crops. Where irrigated, care must be taken in keeping the water from the stalks and not give the plants more than two periods of irrigating during the growing season. The poor ears can be fed to poultry with profit and the fodder is relished by the cows, sheep and horses.

The English Fighting Preservatives.

Reports from England indicate that the British government has taken up the fight against preservatives in milk. Boracic acid, as well as the more injurious preservatives, is to be brought under the ban of the law. This will be encouraging to the Americans for the English example has been constantly urged as one reason why we should not have more stringent laws regarding preservatives. In some investigations made by the government, one scientist said that he believed this promiscuous dosing of the public by ignorant persons to be very dangerous. That is the most potent reason why preservatives be not allowed in milk. We have no certainty as to how much acid is used, and it is to the interests of the manufacturers of the preservatives to have as large doses as possible used. This is particularly dangerous in the case of children living on an exclusive milk diet. We will never know how many lives have been cut short by this "promiscuous dosing of the public by ignorant persons."

Staggerbush.

This poisonous shrub is called also kill-lamb. It is a weak-limbed, deciduous shrub, two to four feet high, with thick, conspicuously veined leaves and showy clusters of tubular white flowers. It is frequent in low, damp soils near the coast, from Connecticut to Florida.

FIG. 20.—Staggerbush (Pieris mariana), showing flowering branch, one-third natural size.

The farmer should be careful in purchasing nursery stock. One Nebraska farmer several years ago planted a large orchard of supposedly summer, fall and winter varieties of apples. When they came into bearing all the trees bore Hyslop crabs.

A Matter of Headway.

"She is so interested in higher education," said the young woman.

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "A mortar board is very becoming to her style of beauty, and she knows it."—Washington Star.

British Aristocracy Blamed.

Many people attribute their recent reverses to degeneracy. The life of luxury does not produce vigor. Indigestible suppers, constant nerve strain and lack of exercise upset the stomach. The blood that makes heroes must come from healthy stomachs. Hostetter's Stomach bitters purifies the blood and strengthens the stomach. It cures constipation, indigestion and dyspepsia.

That Tired Feeling

Just as surely indicates that the blood is lacking in vitality and the elements of health as does the most obstinate humor that the vital fluid is full of impurities. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures that tired feeling by enriching and vitalizing the blood, creating a good appetite and invigorating every organ of the body.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"I had that tired feeling all the time. Was as tired in the morning when I rose as I was when I went to bed. I took four bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and it made me feel like a new man. I could work hard and not feel tired. I recommend Hood's to all who need a good medicine." A. P. Charter, Creston, Iowa.

Two Kitchener Stories.

What Lord Kitchener is doing may be best summed up in two stories that are going the rounds in regard to him. It is said that he was asked the other day whether he did not propose to reorganize the transport. His reply was: "No: I am going to organize it." The other story is that he paid a surprise visit to the principal hotel in the city, the resort of all these among the officers who can, while in Cape Town, afford the luxuries of life at the Mount Nelson. He called for the visitors' book, and carefully ran his finger down the list of military guests. He subsequently inquired of each officer his reason for being at the Mount Nelson hotel and not at the front. In most cases, of course, there were excellent reasons for the presence of those gentlmen in Cape Town. In some, however, the reasons were not so good—were not, in fact, satisfactory, and in one or two cases the leave was immediately canceled and the laggard soldiers sent to their regiment.—London News.

Mine Rats in Colorado.

Mountain rats in the mines in Colorado are about as big as a wharf rat, but they have a bushy tail like a squirrel and are pets of the miners. Whenever the luncheon hour comes you will see them come from their holes, or nests, or wherever they live in the intervals between meals, squat on their haunches and sit there until one of the miners shares his dinner with them. Whatever they get of the scraps of that meal they sit up and eat just as a squirrel does. The miner doesn't exist that would no tshare his meal with them.—Indianapolis News.

ALABASTINE Is a durable and natural coating for walls and ceilings, made ready for use by mixing with cold water. It is a cement that goes through a process of setting, hardens with age, and can be coated and recoated without washing off its old coats before renewing. Alabastine is made in white and fourteen beautiful tints. It is put up in five-pound packages in dry form, with complete directions on every package.

ALABASTINE Should not be confounded with kalsomines, as it is entirely different from all the various kalsomines on the market, being durable and not stuck on the wall with glue. Alabastine customers should avoid getting cheap kalsomines under different names, by insisting on having the goods in packages properly labeled. They should reject all imitations. There is nothing "just as good."

ALABASTINE

Prevents much sickness, particularly throat and lung difficulties, attributable to unsanitary coatings on walls. It has been recommended in a paper published by the Michigan State Board of Health on account of its sanitary features; which paper strongly condemned kalsomines. Alabastine can be used on either plastered walls, wood ceilings, brick or canvas, and any one can brush it on. It admits of radical changes from wall paper decorations, thus securing at reasonable expense the latest and best effects. Alabastine is manufactured by the

DAN. GROSVENOR SAYS:

"Peruna Is an Excellent Spring Catarrh Remedy—I am as Well as Ever."

Hon. Dan. A. Grosvenor, of the Famous Ohio Family.

Hon. Dan. A. Grosvenor, Deputy Auditor for the War Department, in a letter written from Washington, D. C., says:

"Allow me to express my gratitude to you for the benefit derived from one bottle of Peruna. One week has brought wonderful changes and I am now as well as ever. Besides being one of the very best spring tonics it is an excellent catarrh remedy." Very respectfully, Dan A. Grosvenor,

Hal P. Denton, Chief National Export Exposition, Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "I was completely run down from overwork and the responsibility naturally connected with the exploitation of a great international exposition. My physician recommended an extended vacation. When life seemed almost a burden I began taking Peruna, and with the use of the fifth bottle I found myself in a normal condition. I have since enjoyed the best of health."

Almost everybody needs a tonic in the spring. Something to brace the nerves, invigorate the brain, and cleanse the blood. That Peruna will do this is beyond all question. Everyone who has tried it has had the same experience as Mrs. D. W. Timberlake, of Lynchburg, Va., who, in a recent letter, made use of the following words: "I always take a dose of Peruna after business hours, as it is a great thing for the nerves. There is no better spring tonic, and I have used about all of them."

INTERESTING CHAPTERS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

How Successful Farmers Operate This Department of the Farm—A Few Hints as to the Care of Live Stock and Poultry.

Dairy Notes

The use of the Babcock milk test can be abused, and too frequently is abused. Sometimes this comes from ignorance on the part of the user, but often it comes from intention to deceive. To prevent abuses due to ignorance, there is now quite a demand among dairymen that some laws be passed requiring all users of the test to take out licenses. The state of Vermont has just passed a law making it compulsory on a man to pass an examination and take out a license before using the Babcock tester in a public way. Of course this does not apply to the man that wants a Babcock tester for use in his own herd, for the public does not care whether his tests are accurate or not. But the man that makes the tests at the cheese factory or at the creamery should be able to accurately make that test, and the public should know that he is able to make it. Probably before long we will have such laws in all of the states where there are many cheese factories or creameries. Certainly there will be no element of the community that will oppose such beneficent legislation.

The state of Michigan is taking energetic steps to insure that Michigan dairy products are put on the market for what they are, and also to see that the make of each factory creamery is branded, so that the source of all such products may be known. A law is in force there that requires each owner or company owing a factory or creamery to register same with a description of its location and name of the party or parties owning it. The time for registry each year is set for the 1st of April, and blanks are furnished for the registry, which is without fee. There must be a new registry of all such places each year. By this registration all cheese factories attain to the right to use the state brand of "Michigan Full Cream Cheese," for the use of which $1 fee per year is charged.

When strong flavored foods, like turnips, are to be fed, it should be after milking and not before. The controversy over the feeding of turnips has simmered down to this. In the past many men have refused to feed turnips asserting that it gave the milk a turnipy taste. It has finally come to be recognized that the flavor gets into it through the air that is in the stable at milking time, or, at least, if the flavor does go through the cow, it is eliminated before the next milking time comes around, provided the feeding is done after and not before or while milking.

The man that would be a successful dairyman cannot afford to be ignorant on any matter that comes to the public attention. In other words he cannot afford to be behind the times. This he will be if he does not read current literature bearing on his work. What is true of the dairyman is true of the creamery man and cheesemaker. There are not only good periodicals that treat of dairying, but there are a number of most excellent books. All of these should be in his library. A small sum of money spent in such a way is well spent.

In the construction of stables for cows, and in the construction of milk rooms an effort should be made to have the walls so simply built that they will be easy to clean and easy to keep clean. It is a mistake to construct such places with a great number of crevices and recesses that are difficult to keep clean. If one smooth surface can be made for each wall, so much the better. This will prevent the accumulation of dust and other kinds of dirt that are detrimental to the business that is being carried on.

Strong smelling roots and fodders, as well as other things that have a decided scent, should either be kept out of the stable altogether or removed before milking time. It is easier to keep them out than it is to renew the air in the stable after they have been there. Carelessness in this regard causes many a dairyman to lose on his butter, especially when it is sent to private customers.

* * *

A person that has a contagious disease or that has been exposed to a contagious disease should no more be permitted to work around the cow stable than he should be permitted to come into your house and sit at table among the members of the family. Milk is a fruitful carrier of disease germs.

Poultry Notes.

Some poultry papers tell amateurs not to buy birds to bring onto their farms, yet carry the advertisements of men that have birds to sell. It is true that roup and other contagious diseases, as well as lice, are brought onto farms by importing birds. But it is still necessary to import. The man that goes out into the country and picks up fowls hit or miss is almost sure to get something that he did not intend to purchase. But in buying from professional breeders there is little danger of importing diseases. In the first place diseases are not likely to exist on well kept poultry farms, and in the second place, if they do exist they are recognized and steps are taken to get rid of them. On our farms it often happens that such diseases exist without being recognized.

Avoid Bad Grain.—There is no gain to a farmer in feeding his fowls on spoiled grain half of which is worthless for food. We hear of cases where this spoiled grain is purchased for poultry food at say one-half the cost of ordinary grain. But as half of it is worthless for food, on account of consisting of weed seeds and shriveled wheat, it is evident that the real cost of the grain is the same as if wheat were bought at full price but of good quality. There is the added danger of getting musty grain, which is said to be one of the causes of bowel disease in fowls.

Wheat as a Poultry Food.—A writer in a poultry paper says that none of the grains is rightly balanced for the best results to be obtained in their feeding. This is true. He further says that the one grain that comes nearest to be well-balanced is wheat. This is not true. Oats come nearest to furnishing a balanced ration, according to all the experiments of feeders and of chemists. Wheat contains too little of the carbo-hydrate element. Wheat, however, may be balanced with corn and even when wheat is high it may be balanced with corn economically.

We wish that more readers of the Farmers' Review would keep a record of egg receipts and other debits and credits connected with their poultry, and would send them in for publication. Experiences are very useful. Comparative reports are interesting and often instructive. The experience in combating diseases, lice and praedatory animals should be given to the public. They will bring out other information that may prove exceptionally valuable to the writers.

The man that wants to make money out of the poultry market must furnish that market with the kind of goods it demands. If the market demands a yellow skin he must use a breed that will give yellow skin. If it wants white-skinned fowls he should find it out and supply that demand. These things are fancies in the mind of the buyer, but they are none the less the points that he considers in making his purchases.

* * *

We hear of some poultrymen trying to keep their houses warm in cold weather by means of oil stoves. The work will prove very expensive and well-nigh useless. It has been demonstrated that while a few more eggs may be obtained with warmth than without it, the extra eggs will in no wise pay for the extra expense.

Sorghum as Feed.

Latest investigations strengthen the opinion that sorghum as a feed is most valuable when young. When it is two feet high it contains three times as much nitrogenous matter, twice as much fats and only two-thirds as much woody matter as it does when it has attained its growth and formed seeds. Mr. R. W. Thatcher of the Nebraska agricultural college says that sorghum is, when young, an almost perfect food for animals. It contains flesh-forming materials and fat-forming materials in the proportion of about seven to one. When nearly mature the fat-forming materials increase greatly and the ratio becomes about twenty-three to one. As we are after a ratio of about six to one, it will be seen that the young stage is the time when sorghum most conforms to the requirements. Therefore it should be used for green soiling or pasturage before the seeds form. Mr. Thatcher advises to begin pasturing it when it is not more than two feet high, so that the stalks first eaten off may produce a crop of green cane. However, sorghum, though a perfect food, is no more a complete food for animals than is milk, for the reason that it contains too much water. The animals simply cannot eat enough of it to give them the solids they need. It is necessary to add to the feed of sorghum grain or some other condensed food. Sorghum in its young stage contains about 85 per cent of water, which is not much different from the percentage of water contained in milk. When sorghum is to be cut for fodder, the cutting should take place at as early a stage as the sorghum will cure. In fact, sorghum fodder is not regarded as valuable for feed, as it contains too little of the protein element.

Carrots for Horses.

The great value of carrots as a food for horses and colts is all too little understood or more of them would be grown. A few carrots fed to a working horse once a day or even once in two or three days, is a great regulator of digestion. For such a use they are probably superior to bran, and they can be grown without great cost, says The Farmer. For colts and brood mares they are equally good, and especially in winter, when the other food is dry. Other field roots, as turnips and mangels, are also good, but the carrot is probably better relished than either of these. Carrots are easily grown. They yield immense crops. They are a sure crop, and they are but little subject to diseases. They ought to be planted early, and on well-cleaned soil; that is to say, soil well cleaned on the surface. They can be put in straight rows with the hand seed drill, using about two pounds of seed per acre. Where the patch is small, it will pay to hand rake it over before the carrots appear. Then careful cultivation should be given. Half an acre will furnish enough for several horses. Thin them to about four inches in the line of the row. The Mastodon is one of the best varieties for Minnesota. Try a small patch next year. Boys, if you have some colts or calves grow a few carrots for them. They are as good for calves as for colts.

Make a New Window.—There are many poultry houses that might be greatly improved by making a window on the south side. Some of them were not built for such. They were originally constructed to serve as wood-sheds or for some like purpose, perhaps as tool houses. The windows were not constructed with the idea of giving light to fowls. A little work in making an orifice for the light to enter will add very greatly to the value of such a place for the fowls.

Cochins were introduced into the United States in 1847 or 1848. They created a great sensation at the time and started such a movement for poultry culture that it has been since humorously called the "hen-fever."

In England, fifty years ago, as high as $250 was frequently paid for a cochin cock.

Oxford sheep are adapted to strong land, and respond readily to high breeding.

SCIENTIFIC TOPICS.

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

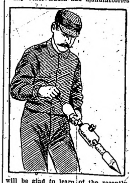
A Combination Ax and Bit — The Invention of a Canadian Genius—A Continuously Heated Soldering Iron—Electric Light Telegraphy.

Electric Light Telegraphy.

A patent has been granted to Carl Zickler of Brunn, Austria, says the Telegraph Age, on a system of telegraphy by means of electric light. In this method of wireless telegraphy, signals are transmitted by means of rays emitted from an arc lamp, the rays of short wave length (mostly ultra-violet rays) being the ones made use of. These rays are sent out from the sending station at intervals corresponding to those of telegraphic signals and in the direction of the receiving station, where they produce weak electric waves, by which the signals are made visible as sparks, or are made audible by telephone or electric bell, or, if preferred, may be printed by Morse apparatus. The most serious objection, however, to the new system is the lack of speed; for so far it has been impracticable to arrange transmitters and receivers to accomplish more than 8 to 12 words a minute.

Continuously Heated Soldering Iron.

Plumbers, tinsmiths, canneries and many other trades and manufactories will be glad to learn of the recently patented soldering iron, illustrated herewith, the novel feature of which is that it never grows cold while in use. Of course it is self heated, containing within itself a gasoline burner fed by a reservoir located just below the handle. In order to make it effective the vaporizing fluid has to be fed to the burner in very small quantities, and this is accomplished by means of a needle valve operated by a rod projecting through the handle, so as to be conveniently opened and closed by the operator. The advantage of having an iron that never grows cold, in that it enables the workman to do more rapid and effective work, is so apparent as to require mere mention to be appreciated. William C. Herbert, of Canada, is the patentee of this interesting soldering iron.

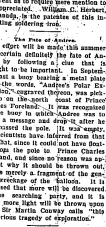


The Fate of Andree.

An effort will be made this summer to ascertain definitely the fate of Andree, by following a clue that is thought to be important. In September last a buoy bearing a metal plate with the words, "Andree's Polar Expedition," engraved thereon, was picked up on the north coast of Prince Charles Foreland. It was recognized as the buoy in which Andree was to place a message and drop it after he had passed the pole. It was empty, and scientists have inferred from that fact that, since it could not have floated from the pole to Prince Charles Foreland, and since no reason was apparent why it should be thrown out, it was merely a fragment of the general wreckage of the balloon. It is supposed that more will be discovered by the searching party, and it is hoped more light will be thrown upon what Sir Martin Conway calls "this mysterious tragedy of exploration."

Combination Ax and Bit.

Lumbermen, campers, carpenters and wharf builders, and many others who have to work with heavy lumbers, and who have but limited facilities for carrying around a number of tools, will welcome the combination ax and augur which is here illustrated. The ax-head contains a receptacle in which a bit can be rigidly adjusted as desired. In the end of the ax handle is a small hand-grasp, similar in shape and capable of rotation just the same as the ordinary brace handle. Maxime G. Lambert of Canada, the designer of this device, asserts that an ax lends itself admirably for use as a brace as the heavy head forms a convenient grip for the hand and its weight makes it easier to operate.



Fighting Hail With Artillery.

In Styria, and in the country around Brescia in northern Italy, the vineyards are protected against hailstorms in a most warlike manner. About three years ago, Burgomaster Moritz Stiger of Styria invented a small cannon, having a funnel fixed upon its mouth, which was discharged at the clouds when hail threatened to fall. The charge used was two or three ounces of black powder, and the effect produced was the prevention of the formation of hail. Now a new style of breech loading, rapid-fire gun has been substituted for Stiger's pattern of cannon, and those guns are being placed at 800 stations in the neighborhood of Brescia for the protection of the vineyards. The vortex of air shot from the gun rises about a mile and a quarter from the ground, and its whistling sound is heard for a quarter of a minute after the discharge.

A Fly Dance.

Morris Gibbs describes—what probably thousands of our readers have observed—the very curious hovering, or dancing, habit of a species of two-winged flies, which assemble in groups of from 20 to 100 or more, in some spot sheltered from the wind, and indulge in a fantastic dance for hours at a time. The motions consist of alternate rising and falling in periods of a few seconds, and over a distance varying from one to four feet. The insects seem to become so interested in their sport, if sport it is, that they cannot be driven away from one another, but immediately re-form their companies when disturbed. Many species of insects have the habit of hovering in the air, some in parties only and some singly.

New Wealth in Michigan.

At the latest annual meeting of the Geological Society of America, Prof. I. C. Russell called attention to the recent discovery that many of the swamps and lakes in the southern peninsula of Michigan are rich in calcareous marl, suitable for making Portland cement. Although partly composed of shells, the Michigan marl is principally a chemical precipitate which is still being formed. The precise method of its formation is not yet understood. The supply is practically inexhaustible. Large cement works have lately been constructed, others are in contemplation, and Prof. Russell says that Michigan can easily take a leading place in that industry.

Curious Origin of Flavors.

Among the most remarkable glimpses into hidden corners of nature that recent scientific advance has afforded are the frequent discoveries of micro-organisms in unexpected places, where they produce phenomena heretofore supposed to arise from other causes. For instance, Dr. A. Petterson of Upsala, Sweden, has ascertained that in preparations of meat and fish containing, for purposes of preservation, salt to the amount of 15 per cent, micro-organisms grow luxuriantly, and he concludes that the flavors and odors that are peculiar to various salt conserves are due to the micro-organisms with which they are crowded.

A Writing Telephone

Monsieur Dussaud, a French inventor, has combined a phonograph with a telephone in such a manner that a message spoken into the telephone is impressed upon a wax register at the receiving end, in case the person to whom it is addressed happens to be absent. The registered message can at any time be turned into speech by setting the phonograph in operation. A similar device has been employed in Germany by another inventor, Herr Poulsen.

To Cultivate Nettles.

The fact that nettle fiber has of late been found to produce the finest tissues obtainable from any vegetable source, has led to a project in Germany to introduce the cultivation of nettles in the Kamerun region of Africa. If the experiment is successful, the enterprise will be undertaken on a large scale in connection with the weaving industries.

Notes.

It is proposed to build a suspended bridge at Duluth, over the ship canal, similar to that over the Seine at Rouen. The city power house is to supply the current.

According to the Engineer the daily total of water supplied to London during last November was 201,281,664 gallons for a population estimated at 6,015,142, representing a daily consumption per head of 33.46 gallons. A large percentage of the water was obtained from the Thames.

Consignments of vegetables grown on the farms of the Cuban Industrial Relief commission have arrived and they have met with high favor. The potatoes are said to be superior to the best Bermudas, as they have not the insipid sweetness of the Bermudas and are more mealy.

A French naturalist quoted by Popular Science News asserts that "if the world should become birdless, man could not inhabit it after nine years' time, in spite of all the sprays and poisons that could be manufactured for the destruction of insects. The bugs and slugs would simply eat up all the orchards and crops in that time."

Prof. Elihu Thomson has pending, ready for issue, a patent on what he calls the "sun furnace," which he claims is adaptable to smelting ores and generating heat far more intense than the electric furnace. Metallurgists say that it is well adapted to glass-making and manufacturing of carbide. The application made by Prof. Thomson is a wide one, and after carefully studying it at the patent office, he has been granted a complete novelty. The invention is likely to interest mining men and large smelters of ore.

It is possible that Sierra Leone will be a good source of supply for India rubber. The native collectors in their endeavor to increase the yield of rubber are now frequently bleeding the roots of the tree as well as the body. This is said to be fatal to them, and at the same time the rubber gathered from this source is of inferior quality. It is suggested that this inferior root rubber should be refused altogether by buyers in the local market and in turn by the foreign markets, in order to prevent the destruction of the forests. Unfortunately the demand for raw rubber prevents this being done. The government and officials are fostering a plan for planting rubber trees and vines in the colony.

Baptist Missionary Society.

After one of the most interesting and largely-attended conventions in the history of the organization, the twenty-fifth annual convention of the Woman's Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of the West came to an end at Sioux Falls, with suitable exercises at the Auditorium. The most important work of the day was the election of officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: President, Mrs. J. E. Scott, Evanston, Ill.; vice president, Mrs. J. F. Randall of St. Paul; state vice-presidents: Colorado, Mrs. N. B. Kay, Denver; Illinois, Mrs. B. A. Green, Evanston; Indiana, Mrs. O. J. Dearborn, Indianapolis; Indian Territory, Mrs. J. L. Drink Water.

The body needs internal as well as external baths to keep it healthy. To give the body an internal bath drink plenty of water. Two quarts should be taken each day, beginning with a glass just after rising and ending with a glass just before retiring. If you are inclined to stoutness, do not drink during meals or within half an hour before or after them. If your complexion is bad, nothing is more conducive to a cure than drinking water, either hot or cold, but preferably the latter.

FOR WOMAN'S HEALTH

Earnest Letters from Women Relieved of Pain by Mrs. Pinkham.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Before I commenced to take your medicine I was in a terrible state, wishing myself dead a good many times. Every part of my body seemed to pain in some way. At time of menstruation my suffering was something terrible. I thought there was no cure for me, but after taking several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound all my bad feelings were gone. I am now well and enjoying good health. I shall always praise your medicine."—MRS. AMOS FESCHLER, Box 226, Romeo, Mich.

Female Troubles Overcome

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I had female trouble, painful menses, and kidney complaint, also stomach trouble. About a year ago I happened to pick up a paper that contained an advertisement of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and when I read how it had helped others, I thought it might help me, and decided to give it a trial. I did so, and as a result am now feeling perfectly well. I wish to thank you for the benefit your medicine has been to me."—MRS. CLARA STIEBER, Diller, Neb.

No More Pain

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Your Vegetable Compound has been of much benefit to me. When my menses first appeared they were very irregular. They occurred too often and did not leave for a week or more. I always suffered at these times with terrible pains in my back and abdomen. Would be in bed for several days and would not be exactly rational at times. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and menses became regular and pains left me entirely."—MRS. E. F. CUSTER, Brule, Wis.

Most Useful Tongue.

A teacher in a Paisley school, while examining his pupils in general knowledge, asked one small boy what was the most useful modern tongue. The child looked bewildered. To suggest the answer, the teacher put it in another way. "What is it," he asked, "that your elder brothers learn?" A light dawned on the little chap, and he answered: "Swearin', sir."—San Francisco Wave.

CONGRESS

Resume of the Week's Proceedings.

The Senate.

Washington, May 1. — Again the question of extending sympathy to the Boers was thrust upon the senate. This time it came in the form of calling up from the calendar Mr. Pettigrew's resolution which was before the senate last Saturday. The motion was defeated, 20 to 20. The conference report on the joint resolution regarding Porto Rico was agreed to. The Alaskan code bill was taken up but no progress made. A house bill authorizing courts of the United States for the Southern district of Mississippi, to be held at Biloxi, Miss., when the senate convened yesterday. A bill appropriating $40,000 to enlarge and improve the public building at Burlington, Iowa, was passed. Resolutions offered by Mr. Jones of Arkansas were agreed to calling for information regarding alleged irregular practices of William Theobald, special treasury agent at New York.

The House.

The house yesterday passed the Lacey bill to enlarge the powers of the department of agriculture and to prohibit interstate commerce in game killed in violation of local laws. It authorizes the secretary of agriculture to provide for the introduction and restoration of game, song and insectiverous wild birds. It gives him the power to prevent the introduction of undesirable foreign birds and animals and prevents the killing of game in violation of state laws for concealed shipment to states where it can be sold in the open market. The senate bill to create a commission of five to investigate commercial and industrial conditions in China and Japan was debated at length but was vigorously antagonized by the Democrats, and they finally succeeded in striking out the enacting clause in committee, and this motion was pending when the house adjourned. If the motion prevails in the house the bill is dead. The bill for a constitutional amendment to disqualify polygamists for election as senators and representatives and to prohibit polygamy, which was reported by the committee on the election of president, vice president and representatives in congress, was referred to the committee on judiciary after meeting with opposition from both sides of the house. Every speaker who antagonized the bill said he opposed polygamy, but did not see any reason for legislating in the constitution and invading the rights of the states. The house agreed to the conference report on the joint resolution extending the tenure of military officers in Porto Rico.

The House.

Washington, May 2. — For the first time during the fifty years of agitation of the project of the construction of an interoceanic canal the house of representatives yesterday entered upon the consideration of a measure to actually authorize the building of a canal. Many times propositions bearing upon the subject have been before the house, but this was the first time positive action can be predicted. The bill will be voted upon before adjournment to-day. The debate yesterday was memorable because of the unexpected powerful opposition it developed. Mr. Burton of Ohio, chairman of the rivers and harbors committee; Mr. Hitt of Illinois, chairman of the foreign affairs committee, threw the weight of their influence against it, not because they are opposed to the building of the canal, but because they considered the time for authorizing its construction was not ripe. Mr. Burton and Mr. Hitt contended the bill would violate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which guarantees the neutrality of the canal, and Mr. Cannon quoted Admiral Walker, chairman of the isthmian canal commission, as saying that the commission was not yet prepared to say which was the best route. Mr. Cannon contended that the authorization of the construction of the canal over the Nicaraguan route at this time would delay its building for years and cost the government $30,000,000. The debate also developed other lines of opposition. Some of the Democrats insist that the amendments striking the words "defend" and "fortifications" from the bill are designed to make it harmonize with the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and it is, therefore, objectionable. The anomalous situation is, therefore, presented of practically every member on the floor professing his friendship for the canal and yet of powerful opposition arrayed against it on various grounds. The bill was ably and vigorously championed by Chairman Hepburn, of the interstate commerce commission, Mr. Lovering of Massachusetts, Mr. Ransdell of Louisiana and Mr. Corliss of Michigan. Mr. Fletcher of Minnesota was the only member of the commerce committee who opposed the passage of the bill at this session.

The Senate.

After having been under consideration more than two months the Alaskan civil bill was passed by the senate yesterday. Mr. Carter, to do this, withdrew the amendment relating to alien location of mining claims and all other points in disputes. The army appropriation bill, carrying supplies for the military establishment of more than $114,000,000 was then taken up. The feature of the discussion of the measure was a debate on trusts precipitated by an amendment offered by Mr. Berry of Arkansas providing that the quartermaster's department should not purchase supplies from any recognized trust. The amendment was defeated. The bill had not been completed when the senate adjourned.

Washington, May 3.—The house yesterday, at the conclusion of the most stormy debate of the present session of congress, passed the Nicaragua canal bill by the overwhelming vote of 225 to 35. An attempt to retain in the bill the language of the original bill for the fortification of the canal and to still further strengthen the language on that line was balked and the victory of Mr. Hepburn and the committee was complete. A motion to recommit the bill with instructions to report back another bill leaving the selection of the route to the president was buried under an adverse majority of 171 to 52. Mr. Cannon, chairman of the appropriations committee, and Mr. Burton of Ohio, chairman of the river and harbors committee, made a game fight to stall off action at this session, but their appeals were in vain, and the members rode rough shod over all protests. Much excitement reigned throughout the day and several bitter words were used. The excitement reached its climax in a highly dramatic scene between Mr. Hepburn and Mr. Cannon when the former used the words "lie" and "liar" as he denounced the distinguished chairman of the appropriations committee for attempting "to dishonor him." The house was in riotous confusion in a moment. The members crowded the aisles and the situation at one time was so threatening that Mr. Wheeler of Kentucky sought to pour oil on the waters by raising a point of order. But he was not upheld, and the two irate members carried their war to the very hilt. There was a show of peace at the close of the incident, but the feeling between the two men ran so high that the mutual retractions with which such incidents generally end, were but the cloaks for keenest and most cutting sarcasm.

The Senate.

Considerable of the army appropriation bill in the senate yesterday developed a debate on the treatment of volunteer soldiers sent to the Philippines that at times was very bitter. Mr. Turner (Dem., Wash.) made a very vicious attack upon the administration because of the accommodations afforded the volunteers on the transports returning from the Philippines. He was followed by Mr. Pettigrew who, in a long speech, violently arraigned the government for not discharging the South Dakota volunteers when their time had expired. Mr. Mason of Illinois delivered a speech on the investigation made by the committee on manufactures of the adulterating of food. He strongly urged that congress should take immediate action to remedy existing evils. Just before adjournment a sharp colloquy occurred over the proposed consideration of the resolution to unseat Mr. Clark of Montana which indicated that the unanimous recommendation of the committee on elections and privileges will be sharply contested.

The House.

Washington, May 4.—The house yesterday, without division, passed the "free home" bill which has been pending before congress for a number of years. The bill provides that the government shall issue patents to actual bona fide settlers on agricultural lands on Indian reservations opened to settlement. These lands were taken up by settlers who contracted to pay for them $1.25 to $3.75 per acre. By the terms of the bill the government assumes the payment of the purchase price to the Indians and changes the existing law relative to agricultural colleges so as to insure the payment of the endowments, which heretofore have come out of the sale of public lands in case of deficiency. These payments involve $1,200,000 annually. Of the 29,000,000 acres in the Indian reservations opened to settlement for which the government is to pay or has paid $35,000,000, about 8,000,000 acres have been taken and about 2,000,000 are supposed to be still available for agricultural purposes. A remarkable thing in connection with the passage of the bill yesterday was a speech in its favor by Galusha A. Grow of Pennsylvania, the venerable ex-speaker of the house who, forty-eight years ago, fathered and passed the original homestead bill. He was then the youngest and is now the oldest member of the house. The remainder of the day was devoted to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the last but one of the great supply bills.

The Senate.

The senate yesterday adopted the motion of Mr. Hoar to take up the resolution of the committee on elections declaring that Mr. Clark of Montana was not duly elected to the senate and then postponing consideration of the resolution for a week. The army appropriation bill after a rather spirited debate was passed without division. The day closed with the passage of a number of private pension bills, including bills to pension Mrs. Julia MacV. Henry, widow of the late Gen. Guy V. Henry; Gen. James Longstreet, Mrs. Margaret M. Badger, widow of the late Commodore Badger, and Mrs. Harriet Gridley, widow of the late Capt. Gridley of the navy.

The Senate.

Washington, May 5—Yesterday's session of the senate was rendered especially notable by the passage after a debate lasting only three hours of the army reorganization bill. In military circles the measure is regarded as one of the most important of the present session. It practically revolutionizes the present staff arrangements of the army. It proposes to change the present system of permanent appointments in certain staff corps to one of detail by a gradual process as the officers now in those corps go out of active service. As vacancies occur in departments of the adjutant general, the inspector general, quartermaster general and commissary general they are to be filled by details from the line, the details to be temporary and not to exceed four years. The new system is not applied to the corps of engineers, medical department, pay department or judge advocate general's department. The bill discontinues the regimental organization of the artillery and establishes an artillery corps of two brigades, viz., 126 batteries of coast artillery and 18 batteries of field artillery with a total of 17,448 men. It provides for an increase of 100 in the corps of cadets at West Point, two at large from each state and ten more to the present number of twenty from the United States at large. The rank of the commanding general of the army is raised to that of lieutenant general, and that of the adjutant general to major general, the latter being during the incumbency of the present adjutant general, Gen. Corbin. The president is empowered to place on the retired list any officer who has been suspended from duty by sentence of court martial or by legislative order in mitigation of such sentence, for a period extending to or within one year of the time of his compulsory retirement for age. This is well understood to apply to Commissary General Eagan. An amendment creating a veterinary corps for the army consisting of a colonel and thirty-five other commanding officers was attached to the bill after a spirited debate, the amendment being adopted by a vote of 25 to 23. The fortifications appropriation bill carries about $7,500,000.

The House.

The house made fair progress yesterday with the sundry civil appropriation bill, completing 73 of the 132 pages of the bill. Much of the time yesterday was consumed in an effort of members of the naval committee to cripple the coast and geodetic survey in retaliation for the refusal of the house to agree to their recommendation when the naval bill was before the house, to place the survey of the waters of our insular possessions in the hands of the navy. They tried to strike out of the bill the item authorizing the coast survey to survey the coasts in the jurisdiction of the United States. They made a point of order against a new vessel for the survey and against an appropriation of $182,745 for enlisted men on survey vessels, but the latter appropriation went back into the bill in another form.

News of the Northwest

FROST DAMAGE.

Fears Are Expressed That the Fruit Crop Has Suffered.

Langdon, Minn., May 6. — A hard freeze has occurred here for two nights past, the mercury dropping to 28 deg. Ice formed to the thickness of a quarter of an inch. Early gardens have suffered considerably. The fruit crop is badly damaged, as the trees are in full bloom.

-o-

Stewartville—A heavy frost struck this place. Small grain is all in the ground and the most of it is coming up and looking fine. A good warm rain is badly needed.

-o-

Montevideo—Ice has formed to the thickness of nearly a quarter of an inch the past two nights. The plum and early apple trees are in full bloom and it is feared that both are severely damaged. Spring crops were never more promising than now.

TOWN ALMOST WIPED OUT.

Destructive Fire in a Mining Town in British Columbia.

Victoria, B. C., May 6.—Sandon, a British Columbia mining town, was all but obliterated by fire. The big Reco hotel and the Canadian Pacific railroad station were among the first buildings to go, and then, fanned by a strong wind, the fire climbed up the hills to the residence portion of the town. Sandon is situated twenty miles from Kaslo. It is the terminus of the Nakusp & Slocan railway and has a population of 2,000 people. The big silver mines at Sandon are reported to have lost their office and plants by the fire.

HORRIBLE MILL ACCIDENT.

Large Splinter Driven Through the Neck of a Stillwater Employe.

Stillwater, Minn., May 6.—William Rabloff was instantly killed at the Staples-Allee mill. He was employed on an edger and a splinter five feet in length was hurled with such force that it passed through his neck. Others went through his arm and lacerated his face. He was about forty years of age and leaves a wife and child.

HE SWINDLED RICH MEN.

And Now There Is a Warrant Out for the Arrest of Banks.

New Whatcom, Wash., May 6. — A warrant has been sworn out for the arrest of J. E. Banks, rancher. It is alleged Banks went to New York and fleeced W. C. Whitney, Amos J. Cummings and other Gotham capitalists out of several thousand dollars by a bogus mining scheme.

RAT PORTAGE FIRE.

Several Business Houses Burned Out —Loss $10,000.

Winnipeg, May 6.—Fire at Rat Portage did $10,000 damage. Delbridge's livery, Duncan's grocery, King's harness shop and Virden's butcher shop were burned.

Saved From Forest Fires.

Milwaukee, Wis., May 6. — A Wausau special to the Sentinal says the village of Hatley, where are located the mills and yards of the Fenwood Lumber company, was saved from destruction by the fire department of Wausau. The fire which has threatened the village of Mosinee is also now under control, as is also the forest fire in the swamps and lands between Mosinee and Marathon City. Unless rain comes soon these and other fires may be revived and much damage will result.

Perished in Forest Fires.

Marinette, Wis., May 6. — David Malafon, his wife and little child, settlers near Crelvitz, are missing, and it is feared that they perished in the recent forest fires. They were living on a homestead and it is supposed that on the approach of the flames they fled from their home and were overtaken by the fires. Neighbors who went to look for them found their dwelling place deserted, but could secure no trace of the missing three.

Driven Crazy by Practical Jokes.

Menominee, Mich., May 6. — Philip Holub, aged thirty years, in a fit of despondency shot himself through the heart yesterday. His body was found at the farm of Joseph Stohol, two miles north of the city. Holub stated Thursday that two of the men employed with him in the lumber yard had driven him crazy by playing practical jokes and tantalizing him while at work. Warrants are out for the two men who tantalized him.

Killed by a Street Car.

Detroit, Mich., May 6.—Dr. Edward Everett Vincent, who was one of the party of Peary's Arctic expedition, was run over by a street car and killed yesterday. Dr. Vincent was riding a bicycle along Grand River avenue. His wheel was struck by the car fender. He was thrown under the wheels and instantly killed. The body was fearfully mangled.

King Oscar Visits Victoria.

London, May 6.—The king and queen of Sweden, foregoing the usual custom which has heretofore marked their visits to England, went to Windsor hotel, accompanied by their suite. Queen Victoria received her royal guests at the entrance of the grand quadrangle. After luncheon their Swedish majesties returned to their country residence.

Kansas Corn for India.

Topeka, Kan., May 6.—The Kansas India relief committee has instructed Secretary Anderson to order the purchase of 20,000 bushels of corn in New York, to be loaded in a relief ship which sails next week for Bombay. Treasurer Coburn's cash receipts to date are $10,272.

Pierre, S. D., May 6. — The state brand commission adjourned after passing 354 brands, making the total number of brands filed to date 3,260.

Scholl Building Contract Awarded.

New Ulm, Minn., May 6.—The board of education awarded the contract for the erection of the new high school building to Frank Keute, a local contractor, for $18,452. The contract calls for the completion of the building not later than Oct. 15.

Death of an Aged Jurist.

Washington, May 8.—Amiel J. Willard, chief justice of the supreme court of South Carolina during reconstruction days, died suddenly of apoplexy at his home here in his seventy-ninth year. He was born in Albany, N. Y.

VICTORY FOR EDDY.

Indications Are That He Will Have a Majority of the Delegates.

Fergus Falls, Minn., May 8. — Reports from all parts of the Seventh district indicate that Congressman Eddy's victory at the primaries Saturday night was even more complete than was at first supposed. Big Stone, Kandiyohi, Marshall, Becker, Douglass, Stevens and Otter Tail counties have unquestionably elected Eddy delegates. These include all the doubtful counties, and indicate that Eddy's forces have carried every county where a contest has been made. The only unfavorable report thus far received is from Hallock, and it is believed that the vote of Kittson county at large will counterbalance that of its leading village. Wilkin county will hold primaries this evening, and it is now thought that an Eddy delegation will be sent to Moorhead from that county and that Hon Ezra C. Valentine will head the delegation.

HIS LIFE CRUSHED OUT.

Granite Falls, Minn., May 8.—Thomas Paulson, who resides at Sacred Heart, was instantly killed here. He was trying to run a threshing rig up to the repair shop, and was in the act of reversing the engine when he was caught between it and the separator. He was twenty-seven years old.

Insurance Tax Apportioned.

Pierre, S. D., May 8.—The state insurance commissioner has apportioned the tax among the different towns of the state, which they secure as the 2 per cent of premiums allowed them under the law which provides for such payment where there is a fire company. The total is $5,252.47, an increase of $331 over last year.

Hurt in a Runaway.

Colfax, Wis., May 8.—G. W. Higby of this city, met with a serious accident at Cedar Falls. While leaving the lumber yard his team became frightened and ran away, killing one horse. A boy on a load of lumber ahead of Mr. Higby was thrown to the ground and was injured so badly it is thought he may die.

Teddy Will Visit St. Paul.

New York, May 8. — Gov. Roosevelt has accepted an invitation to be a guest of honor at the national convention of Republican clubs to be held at St. Paul, Minn., July 17, 18 and 19. He will probably make a speech there.

Attempted Suicide.

Stillwater, Minn., May 8. — Charles Schultz, who recently had trouble with his wife, tried to kill himself with croton oil, but physicians were summoned and administered an antidote. He will recover.

Grand Rapids, Minn., May 8.—Dennis Mulcahy of Cohassett was instantly killed about four miles from here by the east-bound passenger train. He was seated on the track when the locomotive struck him.

Body Is Identified.

Valley City, N. D., May 8.—The body of William Campbell, a railroad employe killed here, was identified on a telegram from his mother by a scar on the left wrist, and will be shipped to St. Thomas, Ont.

Lumber Barge Sunk.

Hastings, Minn., May 8. — A large [illegible] with lumber and slate for the St. Croix Lumber company, was partly sunk at the levee and about 8,000 feet of lumber floated down the river as far as Dudley island, this side of Prescott. [illegible]

GOV. LIND INDORSED.

The Populist State Convention Satisfied With the Administration.

Minneapolis, May 5.—The Populist state convention at Minneapolis before adjourning indorsed Gov. Lind and his administration, and recommended C. A. Towne as a vice presidential nominee. The delegates at large to the Sioux Falls national convention are: S. M. Owen, Thomas J. Meighen, P. M. Ringdahl, T. S., Reishus; alternates, Frank Ives, C. A. Nye, E. C. Lommen, D. D. Evans.

The following district delegates were selected:

First District—W. A. Hotchkiss, H. C. Nelson, I. I. Vermilya, A. E. Ball, Edward Keife, T. H. Morgan.

Second District—Spurgeon Odell, W. R. Hodges, L. A. Sweet, J. N. Byington, J. C. Marshall, P. J. Jenkins.

Third District—J. M. Bowler, W. M. Cory, M. R. Tompkins, A. C. Welch, H. J. Peterson.

Fourth District—F. H. Clark, M. R. Prendergast, N. C. Hardy, M. E. Murray, J. E. Johnson.

Fifth District—Paul Fontaine, Thomas Chapman, Everet Nymanover, W. R. Dobbyn, L. D. Brown, W. F. McCullom.

Sixth District—Z. H. Austin, A. H. Hendrickson, Charles Leytze, Oscar Daggett, S. Mixon, O. P. Erickson.

Seventh District—M. J. Daly, H. P. Bjorge, Victor E. Lawson, F. P. Olney, P. J. Wrangleburg, A. M. Eckman, P. Glavin, George N. Lamphere.

The following resolutions were adopted:

"We, the representatives of the People's party in Minnesota, in convention assembled, hereby reaffirm the Omaha platform of the national People's party of 1896, and in connection therewith the declaration of American independence.

"Resolved, That, as we are now standing at the parting of the ways; one leading toward a republic and all that it implies, the other toward monarchy, the empire, despotism and all that they imply, we believe that it is the duty of every citizen to take the political action necessary to give the utmost practical effect to his opposition to the monarchial direction, regardless of the ties or prejudice of partisanship.

"Resolved, That in pursuance of the foregoing, we favor the nomination and election to the presidency of the United States of the man who will most surely combine the opposition to the prevailing tendency of the present national administration, and who, if elected, will most faithfully and untiringly devote himself to the re-establishment of the principles of popular government that were declared and adopted by the revered fathers of the republic.

"Resolved, That the trust is monopoly; monopoly is despotism. Trusts now govern us. Hence our government must be essentially despotic. We demand the abolition of trusts and all other forms of monopoly, to the end that this may be a government of, by and for the people.

"Resolved, That we extend our sympathies to the South African republics and all other peoples in the gallant fight they are making for life, liberty and home rule.

"Resolved, That we enter our solemn protest against that imperialism of the McKinley administration which governs and taxes as an alien country the people of Porto Rico, and proposes to govern conquered countries without their consent. We regard this as but one form of imperialism and denounce all other forms, such as the surrender of the functions of coining and issuing money by the federal government to private banks, as a policy which is unconstitutional, undemocratic, unrepublican and despotic.

"Resolved, That we indorse the present administration of Gov. John Lind and his efficient colleagues."

No Music in Saloons.

W. F. Parker, the recently elected mayor of Tracy, has recommended to the city council the adoption of a city ordinance prohibiting the use of musical instruments of any and every kind in the saloons of the city; also the abolishment of pool and billiard rooms unless a license of $100 per table is paid by the owner of same. He also recommends an ordinance prohibiting owners of billiard or pool halls from allowing minors either to patronize the games or to loaf in rooms used for that purpose on penalty of fine or imprisonment or both. As a reason for the recommendations he states that the musical instruments tend to draw in the younger element, and that the open billiard and pool room is productive of more harm to the young men than is the licensed saloon. The mayor has the support of the council and the ordinance will undoubtedly be enacted.

REBELS ARE WINNING.

Getting the Best of the Fight in Colombia.

Kingston, Jam., May 5. — News brought here yesterday by the British steamer Floridean, from Colombia, is to the effect that the rebels are getting the best of the fight in that department and they are prepared to advance on Bocas del Toro. In view of no soldiers being available the government has sent twenty-five policemen to Bocas del Toro on board a launch belonging to the government. The situation is considered serious. The country is under martial law and crews of vessels have been warned not to go ashore after dark. When the Floridian left Colon, April 30, nothing was known of the reported capture of Cartagena by the insurgents.

RED RIVER VALLEY FARMERS.

They Adopt Dairying and Cheesemaking More Extensively

The farmers of the Red river valley are adopting dairying and cheesemaking as a means of diversifying their business and creameries are being started in various parts of the district. One of the latest communities to take the matter up is the township of Louisville, where private dairying has been largely done in the past. Dennis Lazotte, president; Alphonse Darwin, vice president; B. Dalbec, secretary; A. Beauchaine, treasurer, and N. Beauchaine, O. Lemieux and Felix Beauchaine, directors. The company will begin business with 250 cows, and by the time the necessary buildings are erected will increase this number to 400.

Land values in the vicinity of Crookston are increasing and farms are changing hands at a rapid rate, nearly all the purchases being made by actual settlers. Every train brings its quota of homeseekers, and real estate dealers are reaping a harvest. The business of the United States land office at Crookston for April was 35 per cent greater than that of the corresponding month in 1899. A total of 193 claims were taken, and the rate for the first three days of the current month proves that if this record is maintained the increase will be greater than that of last month.

TAX CLAIMS ARE NOT OUTLAWED.

Supreme Court Decides Tax Clearance Sale Case.

Judge Caldwell's decision in the case of Scott County vs. Ward was reversed by the state supreme court. The decision had been anxiously awaited, as it affects a great many pieces of property which will come under the hammer at the tax clearance sale May 14, and to the relief of the auditor, the decision favors the state. Judge Caldwell held that the state cannot sell property for delinquent taxes, when these taxes are due for years preceding 1893. The statute of limitations by which debts are outlawed unless a claim is presented within six years Judge Caldwell believed held true in the case of these taxes. The supreme court, however, takes the stand that the taxes are equivalent to entries of judgment, which do not become outlawed until after ten years. As the forfeited tax sale will take place under a law of 1898, the taxes due for ten years previously, that is from 1888 onward, may all be collected on the property sold, while otherwise the state would have had a claim only for taxes due since 1893. A circular giving the decision will at once be sent to the county auditors.

BROUGHT A PREMIUM.

State Capitol Certificates Wanted by Capitalists.

The state capitol commission recently opened bids for the new issue of $250,000 certificates of indebtedness. The entire issue was awarded to Pepper & Stern, St. Paul, at the following premiums: One hundred thousand dollars, maturing in 1906, $55; $100,000, maturing in 1905, $46; $50,000, due in 1907, $31.50.

State Treasurer Koerner, on behalf of the state, offered to take the entire issue at par. These were the only bids for the entire issue, and the only firm offering a premium were Popper & Stern.

Convention Is Closed.

The eighth annual session of the Dakota County educational association, held at Farmington, is closed. The convention was the largest and most successful ever held in the county. Friday afternoon was devoted to the discussion of problems of interest to school trustees. Senator Albert Schaller of Hastings and Representative C. F. Staples of Mendota delivered addresses. In the evening Gov. John Lind and State Superintendent J. H. Lewis addressed a large audience in the opera hall. Saturday morning Superintendent Kunze of Hastings addressed the meeting upon the subject of "Geography." He pleaded for a higher grade of geographical instruction, and gave some valuable hints and suggestions. Mrs. Hodges of Farmington gave a paper on "Reading in the Rural Schools." Papers were also read by Superintendent Daley of West St. Paul and J. P. Magnussen of Hastings. At the business meeting in the afternoon the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, F. P. Phipps, Farmington; vice president, Burton Hurd, West St. Paul; secretary, Miss Thompson, Lakeville; treasurer, Mr. Day, Rosemount.

Three judges of the district court at Duluth have united in a decision upholding the law of 1897, providing for the perfected tax sale, which sale was held last May. The case was of great importance, not only because large amounts of money and property were involved in it at Duluth, but because the law was practically the same one under which sales are to be held all over the state this year. The case decided was one of several hundred that were started attacking the law and sales held under it.

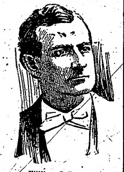
BRYAN AND TOWNE

TICKET NAMED BY THE SIOUX FALLS CONVENTION.

People's Party Again Places Bryan in the Field for the Presidency—Sharp and Stubborn Debate Over the Advisability of Naming a Condidate for Vice President Ends in the Nomination by Acclamation of C. A. Towne for That Office — Platform Denounces Imperialism and Trusts and Demands the Initiative and Referendum.

Sioux Falls, S. D., May 12.—The national Populist convention concluded its session at 1 o'clock this morning and adjourned sine die after nominating Hon. W. J. Bryan for president and Hon. C. A. Towne for vice president. This result was accomplished after a struggle of several hours' duration at which an effort was made to have the question of the nomination of a vice presidential candidate referred to a committee to confer with the Democratic and Silver Republican conventions. A motion to this effect was defeated, 268 to 492. Both candidates were nominated by acclamation, but before this was accomplished various names were placed in nomination and then withdrawn. The nominations were made amid great enthusiasm.



William J. Bryan.

While the day was full of events in the national Populist convention it began rather inauspiciously for the consummation of its work. There were three sessions during the day. The first of these was barren of results excepting for supplying the machinery for committee work, and the session was well under way before the assemblage got Down to Business.

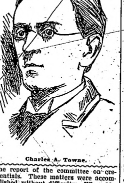
The morning session was given up to organization by the election of Hon. T. M. Patterson for permanent chairman and the selection of other officers. Some time was spent on passing upon the report of the committee on credentials. These matters were accomplished without difficulty. When Mr. Patterson had finished his speech the convention, at 12:20 p. m., adjourned, as the committee on resolutions was not ready to report.



Charles A. Towne.

Wen the convention reassembled the committee was not ready to report and the convention gave attention to addresses pertinent to the occasion. One of these was by Mrs. McDonald-Valesch, a lady delegate from the District of Columbia, who reviewed in a forcible manner the labor troubles of Idaho.

Contrary to expectation of some of the delegates the resolutions aroused no debate, and with these once adopted the convention found itself rather suddenly and unexpectetly face to face with the nomination of candidates. Mr. Bryan's nomination was by acclamation and was accomplished with expedition and tact. There were half a score of speeces in Mr. Bryan's behalf. All these were brief and pointed, while full of praise to the candiadte. The speakers were led off by Senator Allen of Mr.

Bryan's Own State

and he was followed in quick succession by ex-Congressman Jerry Simpson of Kansas, "Cyclone" Davis of Texas, Senator Marion Butler of North Carolina and one or two others. Each Mention of Mr. Bryan aroused enthusiasm, and when there was a call to rise in support of a proposition to make his nomination unanimous, not only did every delegate rise in his seat, but each rose with a shout and a hurrah and with a waving of hands. The scene was an animated one, but it was not prolonged, and after a minote or two of demonstration, the delegates sank back into their seats. Thus was Mr. Bryan again formally made a candidate for the presidency. And thus was his campaign of 1900 inaugurated. Then towards the close of the afternoon session began the real contest of the convention. This was the fight over the vice-presidency, or, rather the fight over the proposition not to make any nomination for the vice presidential office, but to refer the entire matter to a committee to be appointed to confer with the Democrats and Silver Republicans in their conventions to be held at Kansas City. Both propositions to nominate and to refer and also vairous compromise suggestions were presented, but upon them was based quite a memorable debate, wich not only developed a but came near terminating in a fisticuff. Speeches were made by E. Gerry Brown and George F. Washburn, who, both from the State of Massachusetts, differed on both propositions, by Senators Butler and Allen, who also differed, by Gen. Weaver and Jerry Simpson, Dr. Taylor of Chicago, who spoke warmly for Charles A. Towne, and others. They presented all sides and shades of the controversy, the debate lasting far into the night before the close was reached. The exciting event of the convention was occasioned when Congressman Kelly of South Dakota, becoming excited over a failure to secure recognition, rose in his seat and denounced the occupant of the chair as a "bunco steerer." To this Chairman Patterson responded spiritedly. There were cries of "put him out" and a number of delegates gathered about Kelly. Quiet was, however, soon restored, and the convention proceeded as if nothing unusual had occurred.

Great Deal of Oratory,

The motion to refer the nomination of a vice presidential candidate to a committee to confer with the Democratic and Silver Republicans was defeated by a vote of 268 to 492.

Towne Is Nominated.

Nominations for vice president were then taken up. Mr. Bowler of Minnesota nominated C. A. Towne and seconds came in from several states. Several other candidates were placed in nomination, but they afterward withdrew one by one and Mr. Towne was nominated by acclamation. The result was greeted by the Minnesota delegation with great delight and the blowing of tin horns.

Mr. Grace of Michigan moved that a committee of one from each state be appointed to go to Kansas City to confer with the Democratic and Silver Republican conventions with regard to nominations by those bodies. The regular order was adopted, however, and the convention proceeded with the selection of the national committee. After some debate the convention by an almost unanimous vote decided to select three members from each state for the national committee.

Thanks to Sue.

Thanks were tendered the city of Sioux Falls for its entertainment of the convention. Dr. Taylor of Illinois moved that the new national committee be made the committee on conference with the national Democratic and Silver Republican parties, the committee to have plenary powers. The motion was carried unanimously.

A motion that Permanent Chairman Patterson, with a committee of his appointment and Temporary Chairman Ringdal and a similar committee be appointed to notify W. J. Bryan and Charles A. Towne of their nomination was also agreed to.

The call of states was proceeded with in much confusion, many of the delegates leaving the hall. At its conclusion a motion was made and agreed to that the national committeemen named be declared the national committee.

A motion to adjourn was carried and at 12:58 this morning the convention adjourned.

The Platform.

The platform consists of a preamble and a long series of resolutions. The preamble congratulates the People's party on the marvelous growth of its principles during the last four years among people of all political parties. The resolutions on imperialism and militarism deplore the conduct of the administration in the Spanish-American war, and denounce its conduct in connection with the Philippines. Demand is made for the cessation of this war. With reference in this connection to Porto Rico, it is declared that the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the American flag are one and inseparable. It is also declared in this connection that the island of Porto Rico is a part of the territory of the United States, made so by our promises and the consent of the Porto Ricans themselves.

The increase of the standing army is denounced. There is a strong resolution of sympathy for the Boers, a declaration against the monopolizing of public land for speculative purposes, a demand for a return to the original homestead policy, a declaration for the placing of all goods controlled by the trusts upon the free list, a condemnation of the governor of Idaho and the federal government in connection with the Coeur d'Alene troubles, and the usual demand for the initiative and referendum.

Trusts are denounced, and the government control of public utilities, such as the railroad, and telegraphic systems, and of the issuance of money is recommended as the proper remedy for this evil. They deamnd direct legislation, giving to the people the lawmaking and veto power under the initiative and referendum. The importation of Japanese labor under contracts is denounced. The gold standard act of the present congress is denounced in strong terms. The party is pledged anew "never to cease agitation until the financial conspiracy is blotted from the statute books, the Lincoln greenback restored and the bonds all paid and all corporation money forever retired." The system of issuing injunctions in cases of disputes between employers and employes is, under certain circumstances, denounced as an evil, and to remedy it legislation is demanded. The election of president, vice president and United States senators by direct vote of the people is also urged, as is the governmental ownership of railroads and telegraph lines, home rule in the territories, the employment of idle labor on public works in time of depression, and the payment of just pensions to disabled soldiers and the establishment of postal savings banks. A fair ballot is also demanded, and "the wholesale system of disfranchisement by coercion and intimidation" in some states is condemned as unrepublican and undemocratic.

Yesterday's Session.

Sioux Falls, S. D., May 11.—The national convention of the People's party began business at 2:20 o'clock yesterday in the big tent wigwam on the top of the hill on the western side of the city of Sioux Falls. There have been larger crowds in attendance upon national conventions, and possibly there have been questions upon which more enthusiasm has been manifested but there have been few similar events which have been marked by more evident sincerity of purpose or more pronounced decorum of behavior. It was evident that delegates were there for a well understood purpose, and that whatever that purpose, it was to be carried into effect. The big tent was arrayed in full dress attire for the reception and entertainment of its guests, and the structure proved in every way equal to the service required of it. The accommodations for delegates, for distinguished guests, for the press and for ordinary visitors proved

Exceptionally Good

—equal to those of most conventions held in buildings of more permanent character. There were probably 500 delegates in their seats and surrounding them there was a fringe of alternates and visitors numbering 600 to 800. Seats had been provided for a much larger number, but the attendance did not appear meager, and it may be tritely remarked that what was lost in attendance was compensated for in enthusiasm. From the arrival of the Minnesota delegation, bearing Bryan and Towne banners, there were outbursts of applause at every convenient opening and upon the slightest provocation. United States Senators Butler, Allen and Heitfield received liberal greeting, while Senator Pettigrew was overwhelmed by the cordiality of the welcome accorded him. There was also generous applause when the name of Mr. Bryan was mentioned by the speakers of the day. Many

to the echo, and this was notably the case with Gov. Lee's reference to the Boers and the Filipinos. It should be stated that Sioux Falls is proving entirely equal to the demand of entertaining the convention. The attendance is somewhat smaller than had been anticipated by some of the more sanguine residents, but there are still a very large number of visitors here for a small city to entertain, and there would be confusion but for the exceptional system which prevails in taking care of them.

The convention was called to order shortly after 2 o'clock by Chairman Butler of the national committee. Prayer was offered up by Bishop O'Gorman, and then the call for the convention was read by Secretary Edgerton. Amid applause Senator Butler then introduced Gov. Lee, who, on behalf of the state, to South Dakota. Fitting response was made by Senator Butler. P. M. Ringdal of Minnesota was then presented to the convention by Chairman Butler as the temporary chairman of the convention. Mr. Ringdal delivered a short address which aroused considerable enthusiasm. Temporary secretaries were appointed and Chairman Ringdal then announced the committees, after which adjournment was taken until 8:30 in the evening.

Welcomed the Convention

The evening session was devoted to singing and music. The convention adjourned to 9 o'clock this morning.

BETING ON "BOBS."

That He Will be in Pretoria in Two Months.

London, May 12. — Members of the house of commons were freely betting in the lobbies last evening that Lord Roberts would be in Pretoria in two months. The ministerialists are building confidential hopes upon the comprehensive plans he has communicated to the war office. Predictions are definitely made he will be in Kroonstad on Monday, and it is believed his advance guard is already reconnoitering in the vicinity of Venters, where the hilly country begins again. Beyond Kroonstad is an intricate and difficult country, and if the Boers should elect to fight it is possible they could check the progress of the British until Lord Roberts' numerous cavalry had time to ride around their flanks and Threaten Their Rear.

Fifteen to twenty thousand is the highest estimate of the Boers under the command of Gen. Botha, who is said to have forty-six guns. Gen. Botha and Gen. Dewet are reported to have quarreled. Lord Roberts is pressing hard after this force with 35,000 men and 140 guns and 20,000 more men are easily available. Lord Roberts' concise summaries of results are not supplemented by any up-to-date press telegrams. The correspondents are confined in their narratives two or three days old so far as Lord Roberts is concerned. President Steyn, with 8,000 men, is said to have been at Thaba N'Chu Thursday, and that a battle was imminent. The advance guards of Gen. Brabant and Gen. Rundle were close to him. According to a dispatch from Durban, dated Thursday, Gen. Buller's army but a complete embargo is laid on the correspondents with him. The Boers are still holding the mountains adjacent to Springfield. New Zealand scouts burned the homestead of a farmer named Greyling in whose house arms were found at Deering. During a concert for the relief of the sufferers from the Begbie works explosion, given Saturday evening at Pretoria in the Galety theater, the doors were suddenly closed and every man in the audience was commandered. All the horses were taken from the conveyances outside. President Kruger has released the Daily Mail correspondents, Messrs. Hallowell and Hoffmeyer.

Is "Showing Activity,"

Cheers for Canadians.

London, May 12.—A contingent of Canadians belonging to Strathcona's horse was heartily cheered as they debarked yesterday at Liverpool. They will sail from London for South Africa to-day by the British transport Ashaye.

M'GILL WILL GET IT.

Davis Will Recommend Him for Postmaster at St. Paul.

Washington, May 12. — The report that Former Gov. McGill would be appointed postmaster at St. Paul when Postmaster Smith retires, was yesterday verified by Senator Davis, who pronounced the statement true. The senator said that while he has not received any word as to when Postmaster Smith will resign, he felt that as he had settled the question definitely in his own mind it would be the proper thing to make the fact known.

Struck by Lightning.

Ann Arbor, Mich., May 12. — In a heavy thunder storm lightning struck a barn on the farm belonging to the Christian Cook estate, near Saline, totally destroying it. Loss, $1,800 to $2,000. Horses and cattle were burned.

Broken Neck.

Waterville, Minn., May 12. — Carl Monskle, a farmer residing at Kennayville, fell from his wagon and broke his neck. He lived about ten hours and was conscious and talked rationally.

LANDED BY BARKER

PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEE OF THE MIDROAD POPULISTS.

Ignatius Donnelly Unanimously Named for Second Place on the Ticket — Congressman Howard Prevents a Rupture by Withdrawing as a Candidate for President—J. A. Parker of Kentucky Elected Chairman of the National Committee — The Platform Reaffirms Belief in the Principles of the Omaha Platform.

For President—Wharton Barker of Pennsylvania.

For Vice President—Ignatius Donnelly of Minnesota.

Cincinnati, May 12.—Above is the ticket which was placed in the field yesterday by what is commonly known as the middle-of-the-road Populist party, but which, according to the leaders of the movement is the one and only People's party. For a time during the day's session of the convention it appeared as if nothing could prevent a complete disruption of the plans so carefully wrought out by the men who separated themselves on Feb. 19 last at Lincoln, Neb., from the fusionist element of the People's party. A steady current against the cut-and-dried choice of Barker and Donnelly almost destroyed the foundation upon which the ticket stood. Former Congressman Howard of Alabama had suddenly become the idol of an apparently winning number of delegates and he clinched his claims on the presidential nomination through his eloquent address on assuming the temporary chairmanship of the committee on Wednesday. Yesterday as the time drew near for nominations word was quietly passed, confirmed by Mr. Howard himself, that the Barker following the convention should their leader be turned down. Owing to the fact that the Alabama delegation would not support Mr. Howard matters were further complicated. He took the only course for the restoration of harmony. He said that he had no ambition to head the national ticket and came to Cincinnati without the slightest intention of being a candidate, and he withdrew his name. Nevertheless when the roll call was completed on the first ballot Howard was at the top of the column—only a few short of the nomination. On the second ballot his plainly stated desire for harmony took effect and the seventy ballots that went to Donnelly on the first roll call were gradually worked over to the Barker column. Mr. Donnelly's name had been withdrawn, although the Minnesota delegation protested against the withdrawal. After the ballot and before the announcement it was evident that the Minnesota votes could settle matters in a harmonious manner by going to Barker. They were cast for the Pennsylvanian and gave him the nomination. Mr. Howard moved to make the selection of Barker unanimous, which was done. Without a dissenting voice Ignatius Donnelly was declared vice presidential nominee. The next order of business was the selection of a national committee and the selection of a chairman of that body. This precipitated against the Barkerites anew. A motion was made that the convention proceed to elect a chairman of the national committee, superceding the ordinary course of allowing the committee to select its own leader. After a long parliamentary wrangle the motion was finally carried, and Milton Park, the retiring national chairman, was placed in nomination. A motion was just about to prevail to make Park's selection unanimous, when Howard, in an eloquent address, presented the name of Jo A. Parker of Kentucky. His words and praise of Parker was about the strongest thing heard on the floor and won for him the unanimous selection of the national chairmanship. After having been in session continuously with the exception of twenty minutes recess from 8:30 a. m. to 4:45 p. m., the convention was adjourned sine die.

Would Bolt

IGNATIUS DONNELLY

The following of Social Democracy and Eugene V. Debs for the presidency found small comfort in the convention which they hoped a few days ago would indorse their idol. Three of them, W. E. Farmer of Texas, A. W. Rinker and L. M. Morris of Iowa, left the convention after the nominations had been completed, and it was rumored would select the Debs ticket, but their action attracted no attention whatever.

The Platform.

The platform affirms unshaken belief in the principles set forth in the Omaha platform. It demands the initiative and referendum and the public ownership of railroads, telegraph and telephone lines, coal mines, etc. The platform opposes alien ownership of land, and the holding of land by railroads and corporations in excess of their actual needs. On the question of finance the platform says: "A scientific and absolute paper money, based upon the entire wealth and population of the nation, not redeemable in any specific commodity, but made a full legal tender for all debts and receivable for all taxes and dues and issued by the government only without the intervention of banks and in sufficient quantity to meet the demands of commerce, is the best currency that can be devised; but until such a financial system is secured, which we shall press for adoption, we favor the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold at the legal ratio of 16 to 1."

The platform demands the levying of a tax on incomes and inheritances, also the election by popular vote of president, vice president, federal judges and United States senators.

The platform closes with a declaration against trusts.

Yesterday's Session.

Cincinnati, Ohio, May 11.—Yesterday at 10:50 a. m. the middle-of-the-road Populist national convention was called to order at Robinson's opera house. There were 470 persons in the delegates' chairs and 75 in the galleries when National Chairman Deaver rapped for order. Committees were appointed and retired to their halls; Ignatius Donnelly delivered an impassioned address, in which he declared that the middle-of-the-roaders must stand together and save mankind.

At the evening session the credentials committee reported and precipitated the first struggle of the convention. It arose over the votes to be allowed the delegations which were not fully represented. It was finally voted to amend the report in accordance with the call for the convention and allow the delegates to cast the full vote of their respective states. Permanent organization was effected by the selection of Col. W. L. Peck of Georgia for chairman and ex-Gov. Waite of Colorado for vice chairman. Wharton Barker of Pennsylvania, whose appears to have been effectually puncture, addressed the convention. He spoke on the motion of Mr. Donnelly. At 11:15 p. m. the convention adjourned until 8 o'clock this morning.

IOWA REPUBLICANS

Meet in State Convention and Elect Delegates.

Des Moines, Iowa, May 12. — The State Republican convention was held here yesterday, and those who attended furnished a spectacle of political harmony, confidence and strength seldom witnessed. The fact that no state officers were to be named deprived the convention of much interest and conduced largely to the elimination of discord from the political chorus. The delegates at large and their alternates, and the twenty-two district delegates and their alternates accredited to the national Republican convention at Philadelphia were in all but the Eleventh district selected by acclamation. The platform was adopted unanimously. It sends the Iowa delegation to the Quaker City instructed for McKinley, commends the administration in all its acts and policies and favors protective legislation against trusts and combination in restraint of trade. For new possessions the platform favors the extension of the privilege of self-government as rapidly as they demonstrate their capacity to exercise it.

ABSENCE OF RIOTING

Among St. Louis Strikers and Their Sympathizers.

St. Louis, May 12.—The feautre of the day in the street railway strike was the conference between Gov. Stevens, the members of the executive committee of the local street railway employes' association and the officers and attorneys of the transit company. Nothing was accomplished. The strikers' officials announced that they were willing to arbitrate the question of differences provided the proposition to do so came from the railway company. The railway officials refused to entertain any such proposition, stating they had nothing to arbitrate. Riotous demonstrations on the part of the strikers and their sympathizers were entirely missing yesterday. The Suburban company carried passengers under police protection the entire day without intereference. The Transit company ran two cars over a branch of its system, but attempted to carry no passengers. Another fatality as a result of the strike was reported yesterday. As Flora McLeod, a young woman, was crossing Wash street, carrying an infant in her arms, she was hit on the head with a brick that had been hurled at a passing street car on the Suburban system. He skull was fractured and she died shortly after being carried to the city hospital.

WAS A SUICIDE.

Unhappy Ending of a Marriage in Opposition to a Mother's Wishes.

La Crosse, Wis., May 12.—Sensational developments came to light in connection with the death of Mrs. William Robinson (nee Hannah Rush), a former La Crosse woman who died at Mankato, Minn., and was buried here yesterday. The death certificate gives cause of death heart failure. The facts in the case are that the woman committed suicide in the woods near Mankato by taking carbolic acid. She was missed from home and the body was not found until next day. Every effort was made to keep the fact of the suicide a secret, but the facts came out. Despondency is given as the cause. She was married a few years ago against her mother's wishes and they never spoke to each other after that. Deceased was thirty-six years old.

BITTEN BY A HORSE.

One of the Harper Brothers in a Critical Condition.

New York, May 12. — Horatio R. Harper, a member of the famous family of publishers, is in a serious condition at his home at Sands Point, L. I., having been terribly bitten by a horse. Mr. Harper entered the stall of the horse and the animal turned on him fiercely and caught the unfortunate man's upper lip between its teeth. A small portion of the lip was bitten completely off and the rest of it hung by a few shreds. Mr. Harper was cut and bruised in many places on the body where the hoofs of the horse struck him.

HE FOUGHT FOURTEEN.

Single Handed Young Birtscher Killed Seven Filipinos.

Texarkana, Tex., May 12.—Charles Birtscher of this city has received a cablegram from Col. Hare, Manila, confirming the report that the old gentleman's son, James, was attacked by a band of fourteen Filipinos while doing guard duty and young Birtscher met the assailants single-handed and killed seven of them. He was slightly wounded in the shoulder.

St. Hilaire Spectator.

ST. HILAIRE, - MINNESOTA.

Dignity always begins where boasting ends.

A pessimist is a person who believes that whatever is is wrong.

When the state of Mississippi gets soaked she makes a thorough job of it.

A man wisely makes use of the present when he sells a duplicate wedding gift.

The woman who marries a blockhead doesn't care to celebrate her wooden wedding.

The employer who works harder than his clerk evidently believes in the force of example.

Naturally, the United States senate is in favor of electing itself in the old-fashioned manner.

Grace will ever speak for itself and be fruitful in well-doing; the sanctified cross is a fruitful tree.

The Boers would be sure to regard the recall of Buller as in the nature of taking a mean advantage.

The South African war appears to have got its "second wind;" at least the generals down there are making a windy time of it.

Affection is the confession of inferiority. It is an unnecessary proclamation that the individual is not living the life he pretends to live.

Some idea of the American exports to Australia can be gained from the inventory of a cargo recently shipped from New York. It contained 6,000 packages of sewing machines, 1,100 tons of paper, many organs and pianos, 8,000 cases of canned meats, 111 trucks for trolley cars, wagons, buggies, wheels, axles, barbed wire, typewriters, windmills, 1,100 tons of iron pipe, leather, shoes and dry goods.

Pedro Paterno, head of the Filipino national assembly, has been captured by the American troops, and General Otis' dispatch thoughtfully adds that he was too sick to escape when the troops pursued him. Senor Paterno should not go unrewarded for his consideration in thus permitting himself to be surrounded. If Aguinaldo would be kind enough to break a leg or contract a fever he might yet be captured, but it appears to be impossible for General Otis to overtake any of the Filipino leaders while they retain good health and active limbs.

Among other features of the South African war the new developments in the use of the heliograph are worth noticing. The idea of telegraphing by means of flashes of sunlight first came into prominence during the Franco-Prussian war. The electric light was at once suggested to make the system independent of interference from clouds, but the difficulty of getting electricity in the field has thus far interfered with a successful combination of the two inventions. In the present war the British have made some use of the electric searchlights from their ships for purposes of optical telegraphy, but sunlight is still their main reliance. A writer in the Engineering Magazine for May states that the ordinary range of the heliograph is fifty-five miles, but when the electric arc light is used the range can be extended to 400 miles. The success with which the heliograph was used in communicating with the besieged garrisons of Ladysmith and Kimberley is a good demonstration of the progress made with this invention since 1870.

The engineering world of Europe has not, it is said, recovered from the surprise over the remarkable performance at Antwerp of a big dredge-boat constructed in Belgium for the Russian government on plans prepared by an American engineer, a Chicagoan. Under the contract the boat was to have a capacity of 1,600 cubic yards of dredging per hour. She recorded a capacity of 1,800 yards on trial. So great was the interest in the trial that most of the foreign ambassadors were present, the Belgian cabinet, commissions from Australia, India, Germany, France, the Argentine Republic and hundreds of engineers from all parts of Europe. Trains were run at reduced rates to accommodate the people eager to see the American dredge, the most powerful in the world, and for six weeks boats were kept running at Antwerp to carry visitors to the point of operation. The immediate effect has been to cause orders to be placed for similar dredges for India, Australia and Russia. The facts were reported to the state department by Consul General Holloway at St. Petersburg.

The men who manage the affairs of corporations are the only source from whom any information as to their condition can be had. That was well enough in the day of small things. It will not answer now, when the stocks of corporations are so extensively traded in and figure so largely in the wealth of the country. Better facilities for obtaining accurate information of the actual condition of corporations must be provided than those which exist now. There must be more publicity.

Admirers of the Chicago ball club will doubtless be delighted to note that the team is showing much more dash, decision and determination this year than last season. The club is already in seventh position, while it took no less than four months to tumble to the same spot in 1899.

What dupes we are of our own desires. Destiny has two ways of crushing us—by refusing our wishes and by fulfilling them. But he who only wills what God wills escapes both catastrophes.

DEMOCRATIC LETTER.

DISHONESTY AND EXTRAVAGANCE OF M'KINLEYISM.

How Army Officers Are Permitted to Draw Double Pay in Direct Violation of the Constitution of the United States—Militarism Running Mad.

(Washington Correspondence.)

The American people have just been given a new object lesson in the dishonesty and extravagance encouraged by this administration. It comes to light that the American army officers, occupying administrative positions in Cuba, have been drawing enormous perquisites from Cuban revenues in addition to their regular salaries.

This has been done by the connivance of the war department, and Secretary Root tries to justify it by saying that the officers needed the money in order to live in proper style in Cuba.

There is a law which prohibits an officer of the army or navy drawing more than one salary, and that, his pay as an officer, but the administration allows the extras as a sort of "bonus," and is trying to hide behind the technicality that it comes from the Cuban revenues and not those of the United States.

It is said that the governor's palace in Havana has been refitted and furnished in truly imperial style, and the Cubans are being given the object lesson of American extravagance which completely overshadows the expenditures of Spanish officials in the old days.

Congress may investigate the matter, but the majority are already trying to explain that they didn't know it was going on, and even if it was there was justification. The trouble is that the Republicans are accumulating altogether too many things which need explanation and justification. The people would prefer a policy which omitted such mistakes.

In the case of Porto Rico the double salary and bonus for cost of official living is about to be inaugurated, and the President took the precaution to send a message to congress asking that the military officers be permitted to perform civil functions while the administration is trying to make a selection of office holders from the mob of carpet-baggers who surround the White House.

The message, of course, neglected to state that the double salaries would be paid, but that will be the case if Mr. McKinley's congress approves his recommendation—and it probably will.

The Porto Rican government bill was very carelessly drawn. It suspended the old courts and made no provisions for the establishment of new ones, and provided no definite time when the new civil government should go into effect. It included, however, a provision which would allow the administration's executive council to give out all the valuable franchises without let or hindrance. The Republicans are discussing some amendment in this respect—which will give out the franchise privileges just the same but not quite so openly.

The new government is to be instituted with all the pageantry and pomp and splendor with which Rome was accustomed to install proconsuls in conquered territory.

Presumably the administration wants to impress both the Porto Ricans and the Americans with the fact imperialism is now an accomplished fact and not a theory.

The "carpet-baggers" are rather disappointed that there are not enough Porto Rican plums to fill all the hungry mouths, but the administration is soothing them with promises of still bigger plums in the Philippines when that troublesome "insurrection" is quelled and the cowed natives are ready to be plundered without protest.

Congress is being asked to lavish money on the navy in all sorts of ways. The armor plate factories want a free hand to charge $545 per ton, or any other price they please, for armor plate, though it has been proved that the very best Krupp plate could be manufactured in a government factory for about $200 a ton. It really doesn't make much difference how the bill is amended, the war department officials propose to give the armor plate combine whatever price they desire.

The naval bill asks for $13,000,000 more than was ever wanted for the navy in any preceding year. Battle ships are being built faster than officers are educated to man them. Though the present bill asks the outrageous sum of six millions of dollars under the pretense that this sum is needed to train officers at Annapolis. The fact is that it is wanted to furnish luxurious quarters so that the cadets will be trained for the sumptuous living already provided for officers on the battle ships.

Chairman Hepburn of the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce announces that the Nicaragua Canal bill will be ready for consideration on May 1.

The bill which is now proposed gives the United States the distinguished privilege of digging a canal, but there is neither "fortify" or "defend" clause in it.

The administration henchmen blandly explain that Great Britain already feels rather offended over the shelving of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and it may be as well not to irritate her by suggesting that this country will defend the canal, suggesting that this country will fortify the canal. In fact these Pro-British Republicans have the audacity to recommend that the canal be built first, and when it is finished—say six or seven years from now—the question of fortification might be taken up. Sentiment among the Republicans is pretty well divided over the measure, but even if it passes the house it will be torn to tatters in the senate. The senate Republicans have discretion enough left to know that the country has had more than enough of the administration's friendship with Great Britain, and that it will be wise not to add any more fuel to this particular flame.

It is all a part of the administration's policy of unlimited extravagance that the war taxes are to be allowed to pile up an immense surplus in the treasury. The Republican party can find plenty of ways of spending it if only the people will return it to power for another four years.

It would be, perhaps, of some campaign advantage to reduce the taxes in certain directions, but the enormous expenditures in every direction must be partly recompensed by a portion of these heavy taxes, and it is regarded as too delicate a matter to make a partial reduction. So the people are to bear the taxes, in time of peace, as long as the Republicans have the power to continue the exaction.

JACKSON DAY.

THE APOSTLE OF CANT.

Would it be gilding refined gold and painting the lily to say that President McKinley is the Apostle of Cant—meaning by that cant in its most offensive term, the slimy, sliddery cant that disgusts honest men? In none of the mantles of cant does Mr. McKinley appear to worse advantage than when posing at missionary meetings, as at Ocean Grove during the past summer, and as he will appear at Carnegie hall, April 20, before representatives of missionary societies at work in all countries, from Greenland's icy mountains to India's burning strand. As the vast congregation stands up to sing Bishop Heber's immortal missionary hymn, which long ago burst through sectarian lines and became the possession of all Christian people, we wonder what burning thoughts will flash through Mr. McKinley's mind at the words

"Shall we whose souls are lighted,
With wisdom from on high,
Shall we to men benighted,
The lamp of life deny?"

Will the Apostle of Cant think at that moment of the blotches of blood and the foul stains of crime which he has draggled over the annals of the republic founded by our fathers, a light to enlighten the world with liberty, and the glory of godly people? We think not. On the contrary, we feel assured, that after the singing of the hymn is over, President McKinley will arise and shuffle off a choice collection of truisms from his book of canting phrases, ending with a phonographical selection of elevated sentiments like those he voices before every one of his mean and shuffling acts.—Newark (N. J.) Ledger.

The New Democracy Stands Firm.

The reclamation of the Democratic party by the people, and its new baptism in the faith of the fathers drove the money kings and corporations, together with their agents and attorneys, into the Hannaite camp. They carried with them a large number of voters, mostly residents of cities who were influenced by the ravings of the subsidized commercial press. But notwithstanding this Democratic candidates polled a million more votes than were ever cast for any candidate at a preceding election.

Four years have passed during which time the scenes have been varied and shifting, presenting new and alluring temptations. But the regenerated Democracy has stood steadfast through all and today the people are in absolute control of the party with their sentinels upon its outer battlements challenging the foes of popular government and successfully maintaining the integrity of their organization against the assaults of open and concealed foes. They stand steadfast for all that they represented in 1896 and without a break in their ranks interpret with one voice the new issues that have been presented by the application to them of the fundamental principles upon which the government is founded.—National Watchman.

Senator Hoar's Inconsistency.

Senator Hoar's great speech in the Senate Tuesday will be widely read and discussed, but it is doubtful if it will arrest the Senator's party in its progress toward avowed imperialism. Said the senator:

"Perseverance in the present policy will be the abandonment of the principles upon which our government is founded; it will change our republic into an empire; our methods of legislation, of diplomacy, of administration must hereafter be those which belong to empires and not those which belong to republics."

Why does the Massachusetts statesmen continue to support a party which is bent on ruining the country? He declares that nothing can be accomplished save through the Republican party, the policy of which he denounces as that of Aaron Burr.

It is a curious example of the power of tradition and a party name. George F. Hoar, in point of learning, character and public service, stands at the very head of American public men. But, in spite of his convictions, party spirit controls him. Washington's warning can have little weight with ordinary politicians when men like Hoar disregard it.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Arguments of Kings.

Those arguments that are made, that the inferior race are to be treated with as much allowance as they are capable of enjoying; that as much is to be done for them as their condition will allow—what are these arguments? They are the arguments that kings have made for enslaving the people in all ages of the world. You will find that all the arguments in favor of kingcraft were of this class; they always bestrode the necks of the people—not that they wanted to do it, but because the people were better off for being ridden.—Abraham Lincoln.

Costly But Necessary.

The first "ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay" Philippine commission, of which Professor Schurman was president, cost the taxpayers $117,185. There is no telling what the second one, piloted by Judge Taft, will cost. "Government by commission," and imperialism and luxuries which the republican administration must have, no matter if they do come high. The people are weary and sick of the whole blamed business.—Kansas City Times.

JEFFERSONIAN EXPANSION.

In his great speech in the United States Senate in opposition to the McKinley Philippine policy, Senator Hoar of Massachusetts, explained the expansion of this nation, territorially, under Thomas Jefferson, in such a clear and convincing manner, that no man but an unthinking one or an untrustworthy Republican politician can stretch it over to cover the "criminal aggression" of William McKinley. Speaking of the broad scope of the Declaration of Independence, the senator said:

"There is expansion enough in it, but it is the expansion of freedom and not of despotism; of life, not of death. Never was such growth in all human history as that from the seed Thomas Jefferson planted. The parable of the mustard seed, than which, as Edward Everett said, 'the burning pen of inspiration, ranging heaven and earth for a similitude, can find nothing more appropriate or expressive to which to liken the Kingdom of God,' is repeated, again. 'Whereunto shall we liken it, or with what comparison shall we compare it? It is like a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth.'

"'But when it is sown, it groweth up, and becomes greater than all the herbs, and shooteth out great branches, so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.' THIS IS THE EXPANSION OF THOMAS JEFFERSON. IT HAS COVERED THE CONTINENT. IT IS ON BOTH SEAS. IT HAS SAVED SOUTH AMERICA. IT IS REVOLUTIONIZING EUROPE. IT IS THE EXPANSION OF FREEDOM. IT DIFFERS FROM YOUR TINSEL, PINCHBECK, PEWTER EXPANSION AS THE GROWTH OF A HEALTHY YOUTH INTO A STRONG MAN DIFFERS FROM THE EXPANSION OF AN ANACONDA WHEN HE SWALLOWS HIS VICTIM. OURS IS THE EXPANSION OF THOMAS JEFFERSON. YOURS IS THE EXPANSION OF AARON BURR. IT IS DESTINED TO AS SHORT A LIFE AND TO A LIKE FATE.

Until within two years the American people have been wont to appeal to the Declaration of Independence as the foremost state paper in history. As the years went round the Fourth of July has been celebrated wherever Americans could gather together at home or abroad. To have signed it, to an American, was better than a title of nobility. It was no passionate utterance of a hasty enthusiasm. There was nothing of the radical in it; nothing of Rousseau; nothing of the French Revolution. It was the sober utterance of the soberest men of the soberest generation that ever lived. It was the declaration of a religious people at the most religious period of their history. It was a declaration not merely of rights but of duties. It was an act, not of revolution but of construction. It was the corner-stone, the foundation of a great national edifice wherein the American people were to dwell forevermore. The language was the language of Thomas Jefferson. But the thought of every one of his associates.

As the Christian religion was rested by its author on two sublime commandments on which hang all the law and the prophets, so these men rested republican liberty on two sublime verities on which it must stand, if it can stand at all; in which it must live or bear no life. One was the equality of the individual man with every other in political right. The other is that you are now seeking to overthrow—the right of every people to institute their own government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness, and so to assume among the powers of the earth the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them. Equality of individual manhood and equality of individual states. This is the doctrine which the Republican party is now urged to deny.

A Republic Cannot Govern Colonies.

It will be a sad thing for the country, it will be a sad thing for mankind, if the people of the United States come to abandon their fundamental doctrine. We are giving it a hard strain in our dealing with the negro at the South. We are giving it a hard strain in our dealing with the great problem of immigration. But it cannot stand if this country undertake also to exercise dominion over conquered islands, over vassal states, over subject races; if in addition to the differences of race and the differences of education we attempt to govern great masses of people, aliens in birth, of strange language, of different religions. If we do it, our spirit will not, I am afraid—God grant that I may be wrong—the American spirit will not enter into and possess them, but their spirit will enter into and possess us.

An aristocracy or a monarchy may govern subject states. It never was done and never will be done successfully by a democracy or a republic.—Senator George F. Hoar, Massachusetts.

The Constitution Is Supreme.

An arbitrary government may have territorial governments in distant possessions because an arbitrary government may rule its distant territories by different laws and different systems. Russia may govern the Ukraine and the Caucasus and Kamchatka by different codes or ukases. We can do no such thing. They must be of us—part of us—or else estranged. I think I see, then, in progress what is to disfigure and deform the constitution. * * * I think I see a course adopted that is likely to turn the constitution under which we live into a deformed monster—into a curse rather than a blessing—into a great frame of unequal government, not founded on popular representation, but founded in the grossest inequalities; and I think if it go on, for there is a great danger that it will go on; that this government will be broken up.—Daniel Webster in United States Senate, March 23, 1848.

GREAT PLACE FOR SAILORS.

Philadelphia's Contributions to Uncle Sam's Navy.

Though only established in its present location since Jan. 15, the naval recruiting office in Philadelphia has already become the foremost one of its kind in the United States, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. So successful has it been that in all probability it will be made permanent and will be expected to furnish a large part of the new material for the United States navy as the battleships now under construction are placed in service. The station is in charge of Lieutenant-Commander Charles Laird, U. S. N. During the first five weeks the office was opened for recruiting, from Jan. 15 to Feb. 23, there were over 400 applicants. Of these 311 passed the examination and are now ready to be mustered into service. All of the new men are native born and are of a character superior to the recruits from the offices in other cities. There are over 3,000 vacancies in the naval service at present, and this number will be materially increased before the session of congress is ended, as provision must be made for several men-of-war to be named within a year. The recently enrolled men will join the ranks as landsmen, the lowest grade of the seamen's branch. They are chiefly laborers, farmers, mechanics and clerks, who enter the service at the pay of $16 per month and rations. Special efforts are being made to elevate the naval service throughout, and inducements are now offered so as to make it desirable for a good class of young men to enlist. Preference is given to Americans, who will be given every oportunity for advancement. These recruits may advance to the positions of petty officers, the pay for which is $60 per month, with retirement after thirty years of service at a pension of $40 per month.

INSIST UPON HAVING ROYAL.

Royal Baking Powder is in the stock of probably every dealer of groceries in the State. If not, the grocer will add to the reputation of his store by keeping it.

Royal Baking Powder itself, and the packages which contain it, comply with all the food laws and every other law of the State, and if any dealer attempts to hinder its sale he does so for the purpose of palming off upon the customer a cheap and inferior substitute.

Consumers requiring pure and healthful baking powder, free from alum, should call for Royal. The authorities certify this brand of greatest value, highest in strength, pure and wholesome.

Death on Cockroaches.

Edison's early wanderings brought him at 17 years of age to the Cincinnati office of one of the big telegraph companies, where his absorption in electricity and predictions of its future power confirmed the sobriquet "Luny," which clung to him even until his fame was established, says Collier's Weekly. "We have the craziest chap in our office," said the telegraph manager to the editor of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette. "He does all sorts of queer things. I wouldn't be surprised if he would turn out a genius some day. Let me tell you his last prank. We have been annoyed for some time by cockroaches. They infested the sink. They don't now. 'Luny' fixed them. He just ran two parallel wires around the sink and charged one with negative and the other with positive electricity. Bread crumbs were then scattered and when Mr. Cockroach appeared and put his little feet on the wires ashes were all that were left to tell the tale." In this cockroach "annihilator" was the germ of the incandescent light.

Society—at least in the larger cities—cannot resist the temptation to be extravagant. A few years ago there was a reaction from the custom of giving expensive favors at dinners and germans. Rich articles of jewelry were tabooed as "bad form," and flowers and bonbons were again the thing. But the whist parties have offered another opportunity for lavish display. The prizes are magnificent pieces of cut glass and silver, embarrassing to the recipient. Now there is a protest against this form of display as well. No one will deny, of course, that gifts like these are in bad taste. It is doubtful, however, if any permanent reform will be brought about. The trouble is that ostentation has become so deeply ingrained in the social world that a return to simplicity is well-nigh impossible. Money rules here as elsewhere, and when one sets the pace all the others follow.—Providence Journal.

Indorsing.

About forty years ago L. M. Mason was a well-known citizen of Detroit and the president of the Farmers' and Mechanics' bank. He was famous as a liberal indorser of commercial paper, and his services for this purpose were much in demand. One day he published a notice in the city papers that he had abandoned the indorsing business and had transferred all his right and title in it to George Jerome, who was at the time as widely known in Detroit as was Mr. Mason. In the next issue of the city papers appeared a reply from Mr. Jerome, who set forth therein that he accepted with gratitude the trust and was proud of the confidence reposed in him. He asked the indulgence of the public until he acquired the routine of a business that was entirely new to him, saying that at first he should wish to know at least the name of the maker and the amount of the note.

Clerical Salaries in Germany.

In view of the advance in salaries of other state officials, the German clergy have been petitioning their respective governments for increased remuneration. The greater cost of living calls for such increase. An addition of $10,000 was voted for this purpose. Ministers will now receive for the first five years $450 per annum and a parsonage; for the second five years $600; for the third five, $765; for the fourth five, $750; then $825, $900, and thirty years' service, $950.—Chicago Tribune.

THE DRY TORTUGAS

TO PROTECT THE PROPOSED NICARAGUA CANAL.

Hereafter This Stragetic Point Will Be a Naval Station—Fort Jefferson to Be Transformed Into a Powerful Naval Fortress.

There is an old and still unsettled controversy between navy and army as to their respective relations to coast defense, says the Army and Navy Journal. It is contended on the part of the navy that steam wars confirm the teaching of the sailing wars respecting fortifications; that they have never withstood a determined attack from the sea; have never given or restored command of the sea, though they have sheltered beaten and inferior fleets. The naval wars of 1870 and 1855 are cited to show what the navy has accomplished in carrying on war even from undefended bases, as at Longeland and Kioje Bay, in the Baltic, by the French Admiral Bouet-Willaumez, at Nargin; in the Caspian sea by the English, during the Crimean war, and by Nelson from the anchorage of Madalena, off Sardinia described by him as the best harbor in the world.

On the other hand, it is contended that the navy has its own sphere of action quite apart from the defense of ports and coaling stations, which belong to the army, and that the navy in attempting to hold positions on land will be hampered in following its legitimate role, which must be essentially offensive. The true solution of the difficulty is found in a thorough cooperation between land and sea forces, such as it is practically impossible to obtain. Hence extreme advocates of the navy position go to the length of insisting that all coast defense on land or sea should be in the hands of the navy.

The president has accepted the navy view of this controversy, so far as to transfer to its control the island of Dry Tortugas, off the coast of Florida, in the Gulf of Mexico. The argument for the transfer of this island to the navy is well stated in a communication from Admiral Bunce to Admiral Bradford at the beginning of the war with Spain. In this he said:

"Tortugas is important from a naval rather than from a military point of view. Difference of opinion may always be expected in such matters when viewed from the standpoints above stated, and necessarily so, as the military (army) view is confined to the consideration of the effect of operations with which it is familiar. The naval view is also influenced in the same way. As the forces to be considered and for which defense is to be provided on our coasts are naval, the naval view is alone based upon the knowledge of the power of the attack and of the great importance of stopping the enemy before he reaches positions from which he can harass the commercial or industrial interests of the country. The military view provides fortifications to defend a point or locality; the naval seeks to receive the attack at points removed from centers of population and commercial importance, and there force the enemy to expend his strength without disturbance to the vocations of the people. The fortifications of New York, for example, are, with one exception, within the limits of the city itself, and some of them near its geographical center.

"The divergence of views, referred to above, has in Europe, resulted in confiding the defense of the coasts of Germany entirely to the navy; in France every gun covering the sea or entrance channels is in charge of the navy. In England the transfer of all sea-coast defenses is now under consideration.

"The main argument for this is that the naval officer alone knows the powers and defensive capabilities of the enemy to be met by these coast fortifications, and therefore the defense is more positive and direct than if commanded by any one unfamiliar with the sea and the handling and fighting of naval forces. A second is that the naval men must professionally know the harbors and their approaches, the influences of the wind, weather, currents and tides on naval movements, and when the defense includes a naval force, as it is sure to do, the whole will be under a single control.

"In my opinion, if the army declines to fortify and hold Tortugas, it should, as a strategic necessity, be fortified, manned and held by the naval forces of the North Atlantic station."

Thus is established the first fortified naval base under the exclusive control of the United States navy, and a precedent is given which may have far-reaching results, the navy for the first time assuming the responsibility of maintaining the land as well as the naval defense of a coast fortification. At Fort Jefferson, in the Tortugas, are extensive fortifications, requiring only modern ordnance to transform them into powerful auxilaries to the naval control of the Gulf of Mexico, and thus of the projected Isthmian canal.

The Mother Love.

It is given to few people to understand the workings of the child mind, and it is only by the exercise of patience and the utmost sincerity that one can get to know the ideas and desires that are formed in the ever busy little brains. A pretty story was once told by Sir Edwin Arnold of three children of his acquaintance, whom he asked at their bed time, when about to say their prayers, if they would pray for what they wanted most. After the two eldest had made their requests, the youngest, a little girl, knelt down and, putting her hands together, said: "Dear God, love me when I am naughty, like mamma."

THE RAISING OF OSTRICHES.

Five Farms Now Carried on in the United States.

There are now five ostrich farms in the United States—two in California, one in Texas, one in Florida, and one in Arizona. The last named, although the youngest, is the largest and most flourishing in the country. It is located near Phoenix, and the Salt river valley seems well adapted to the African ostrich. No protection whatever is required for the birds during the winter. They graze the entire year in the fields, the same as horses and cattle, and are healthy and thrifty. The man in charge of the Arizona farm, who spent 15 years handling ostriches in South Africa, says the birds do just as well in the Salt River valley as in Africa, and that the climatic and other conditions surrounding them here seem as well adapted to their requirements as those existing in their native home. After the birds attain the age of four weeks there is little danger of their dying from natural causes for many years. It is not positively known how long an ostrich will live under normal conditions, but there are birds on South African farms which are believed to have reached or passed the century mark, many of them having been in captivity there over fifty years. Most people have the idea, obtained, probably, from their old geographies when they were children, that the female ostrich, after laying her eggs in a nest scooped out of the desert sands, covers them up with the sand and leaves them, trusting to the heat of the sun to hatch them. This is not the fact. The birds always pair off during the breeding season, the male bird making the nest by resting his breastbone on the sand and turning slowly round and round, scratching the sand away with his feet until a shallow hole is made, some three feet in diameter and about a foot deep. The female then lays, usually, 15 eggs, and the birds take turns sitting on them, the female sitting during the daytime and the male at night, except that the male allows the female about an hour in the middle of the day to feed, when he takes her place on the nest.—Boston Herald.

ON THE ELEVATED.

An Incident with Complications Just a Little Out of the Usual.

"It always disturbs me," said Mr. Biffington, "to see a man on the elevated road offer his seat to a woman when he is about to get off; he has perhaps let her stand in front of him for blocks, and now when he is about to give up his seat anyway he makes a show of giving it to her, a curious exhibition of about three-quarters conceit and the rest cheek. Usually the woman pays no attention to this man; she takes the seat without thanks, without taking any notice of the man whatever. But occasionally there is a variation of this incident. Sitting in an end corner seat, by the door, was a tired man, who, in a crowded car had kept his seat seemingly because he thought it was right that he should—if he had thought it out at all—but who now when he was about to leave, wanted to have the right person get the seat he was leaving. With this idea in his mind, and not with any conceit of gallantry, he, when he had risen, touched the sleeve of a young woman who had been standing by the door on the other side of the car opposite to him, to indicate to her that here was a seat. He was slow about this, with the slowness of one tired, or unaccustomed to asserting himself, and while he was stepping forward a small boy who had been standing by the door slid in back of him with boyish celerity and took the seat. And he kept it."—New York Sun.

Waited for One Cent Change.

"I never felt so cheap in all my life," said Short, "as I did one day in a department store. I bought a book for 99 cents and while I was waiting for it a young woman, whose good opinion I valued, came up and we began to talk. The book was wrapped up and handed to me by the girl at the counter and after a short while the young woman asked: 'Are you waiting for your change?' I replied that I was, but, in fact, I hadn't been thinking of it. I wanted to talk to her and made that an excuse for staying. After the usual delay, when it had passed entirely out of my mind, the girl at the book counter stepped up and said: 'Here's your change, sir.' And she held a bright new cent in her open hand so that the other girl saw it. I felt a chill at once and just because it appeared to the young woman that I had been waiting all that time for a cent. I got a reputation for closefistedness that is still sticking to me."—Pittsburg News.

Did Not Like Samples.

A young man who had spent his early life in the country and had never tasted the pleasures of town life, recently came to Memphis to seek his fortune. On the day of his arrival he went into a restaurant where business men's lunches are daily served, and ordered dinner. The waiter brought the dinner, in all those little side dishes sacred to hotel existence, and arranged them in tempting array around the young man's plate. For half an hour he sat and looked at his untouched dinner, and then, overcome by hunger, he called to the waiter and said: "Look here, fellow, if you don't hurry and bring my dinner I'll eat up your samples!"—Memphis Scimitar.

Comforts of Home.

"Why is that dreadful explosive called lyddite?" asked Mrs. Blynx, "be-cause it blows the lid off the shelf?" "No, snarled her infinitely worse half; "more likely because the inventor's wife was named Lydia, and the stuff was more like her than anything else he could think of."—Pick-Me-Up.

Distinction and No Difference.

"Don't you think you're making a rather broad statement when you say every pessimist is necessarily a married man?" "But I didn't say that." "Oh, didn't you? I thought you did." "No. I said every married man is necessarily a pessimist."—Philadelphia Press.

TRUSTS TO RESCUE.

POURING MILLIONS INTO REPUBLICAN TREASURY.

Fear the Vengeance of the People at the Polls in November — Are We to Have Another Coercion Campaign Like That of 1896?

The enormous campaign fund the Republican party expects to collect to re-elect President McKinley amounts to $6,200,000.

A letter, carefully prepared at a conference between Senator Hanna and the moneyed members of the Republican National Committee, has been sent out by that organization.

This letter calls attention to the profits the trust manufacturers have been able to secure under Republican rule, and says that to enjoy them in the future the re-election of President McKinley is absolutely necessary. This letter has gone only to the richest trusts, but the smaller ones will be squeezed later.

These contributions are expected:

Carnegie, the Federal Steel Company, and the other members of the Steel and Iron Trust, $1,500,000.
From the Standard Oil Company, $800,000.
From the Shipbuilding Trust, $500,000.
From the Sugar Trust, $500,000.
From the Tobacco Trust, $450,000.
From the Paper Trust, $200,000.
From the Cracker Trust, $150,000.
From the American Wool Company, $150,000.
From the American Lead Company, $200,000.
From half a dozen smaller trusts and highly "protected" industries, $1,750,000.
Total, $6,200,000.

The Republicans display great alarm over the situation and are especially dismayed by the outlook in Ohio.

The Banks Take the Cake.

Under the bill, now a law, if an ordinary man buys a government bond he is out the use of his money and draws interest on the bond; but under this law, if a national bank buys the same bond, it can deposit the bond, get the face value of the bond in bank notes, thus getting its money back, and then it can draw interest on the bond besides. The ordinary man can eat his cake or keep it; the bank can eat its cake and keep it, too. (Laughter and applause.)

And why? Because the Republican party is putting the state above the man; because the Republican party is legislating in the interests of aggregated wealth and neglecting the rights of the great majority of the people.

Republicans, you never heard a man stand before an audience in this city and declare that your national debt is a national blessing; and yet that bill, recently made a law by the signature of your president, contemplates a permanent debt and an increasing debt. How are you going to have a permanent bank currency resting on bonds unless you have a permanent debt for it to rest on? And how are you going to have a bank currency increasing to meet the needs of population and business unless you have an increasing debt for it to rest upon. Your bill, your infamous bill, proposes to make the national debt permanent; proposes to increase it and make the common people pay the interest while the bankers make the profit out of the debt. (Applause.)—W. J. Bryan, Los Angeles, Cal., April 10, 1900.

Preaching Morals, Practicing Immorality.

The case of Senator Hoar is precisely similar to that of President McKinley. He sets forth his belief in the highest ideals of statesmanship and patriotism. He declares in behalf of common decency, justice and humanity, and makes a powerful appeal for political righteousness. He shows up the imperialistic policy of his party in all its hideousness, and denounces it. And then, having no Governor to speak for him, he speaks for himself, and declares that he is ready to indorse the infamy which he is arguing against by supporting the Republican party.

This is the flower and conservatism of modern Massachusetts statesmanship—to approve the right and refuse to do it, to approve justice and proceed to work injustice, to stand up for liberty and then aid in crushing it, to pay a tribute to freedom and join in killing it, to advocate what is right and just and then flout it, to put in a plea for humanity and join with those who are guilty of inhumanity, to set up high and noble ideals only to kick them over.

Such is the attitude of Mr. Hoar and the rest of the eastern Republicans who have been all along fighting the policy tooth and nail. Of what avail is his eloquence, or his beaming, or his citations of maxims and traditions if he is to join hands with those whose plans and schemes he is denouncing? We cannot conceive of a more vicious brand of statesmanship than this. It is comparable only to the frolic of a whale whose spoutings mean nothing. In the case of Senator Hoar they are calculated to shock the moral sense of those who are sensitive to concussion of this kind. Of what avail would be the eloquence of a lecturer on morality if we knew that, on the whole, he preferred to consort with those whose immorality was undeniable?—Atlanta Constitution.

Republican Party Degenerate.

Senator Hoar of Massachusetts has often pleaded with his party not to push the nation on its way to destruction by violating all the principles of law, justice and honor, but the Republican party, made mad by the wine of imperialism, rushes on blindly. It requires a seared conscience to resist his philippic delivered in the senate on April 17, and an indurated heart to ignore the following appeal:

"I stand here today to plead with you not to abandon the principles that have brought these things to pass. I implore you to keep to the policy that has made the country great, that has made the Republican party great, that has made the president great.

"Especially if I could, would I persuade the great Republican party to come back to its old faith, to its old religion, before it is too late. There is time yet. The president has said again and again that his is only an ad interim policy until congress shall act. It is not yet too late. Congress has rejected, unwisely, as I think, some declarations for freedom; but the two houses have not as yet committed themselves to despotism; the old safe path, the path alike of justice and of freedom, is still easy. It is a path familiar of old, to the Republican party. If we have diverged from it for the first time, everything in our history, everything in our own nature, calls us back."

Growing on What They Feed On.

How do the "plain people" of the United States like the Republican idea, as frankly set forth on the Pacific coast, of taking part in the partition of China and thereby enabling their millionaires to grab more wealth and at the same time hire the cheapest labor that can be found on the face of the globe?

This is the McKinley object, pure and simple, today. The Philippines are to be reduced to absolute subjection and made the basis of operations against the huge, but tottering, Chinese empire, whose coast is only 600 miles away. The Republican platforms adopted in different states, but particularly those of the far west, are all dilating on the great trade advantages to be derived from the "open door" in the orient, which, put into plain language, means the using of the money of the people of the United States for the maintenance of a big army and navy for purposes of foreign aggression.

The trusts and syndicates which secured McKinley's election four years ago are indeed becoming bold. They confined their ambitions then to the American continent, but now they are prepared to consider the whole world as their prey. They are certainly growing on the meat they feed on.—New York News.

The Oak and the Vine.

A giant oak stood in the forest. It had weathered the storms of centuries, and its appearance betokened stern and unyielding strength. Around its trunk and around its branches twined the vine whose rootlets pierced the oak and sapped its strength. The oak complained.

"I am tired," it said, "of nourishing you. Why can you not stand alone?"

The vine rustled its leaves in horror.

"What base ingratitude!" it cried. "After I have supported you all these years!"

The oak was mildly surprised.

"I thought," it faltered, "that you were dependent upon me——"

But the vine waxed indignant.

"Fool! Ingrate! What would you be but for me? How could you rear your head so proudly but for the support of my clasping fingers? How could you endure the fierce storms and howling winds but for my beneficent protection? Instead of complaining of my presence you should be thankful that you are permitted to lean upon me?"

And the oak bowed its branches and was more than ever convinced of the dependence of labor upon capital.

Abandoning the Constitution.

Only two years ago this nation went to war with Spain and appropriated $50,000,000 at the first step to carry on the war; and it went to war in order to help the Cubans to secure a government for themselves, so they would not be dependent upon the Spanish cortes for a government, good or bad. The line is drawn between the doctrine of self-government and the doctrine of force. Republicans, your doctrine of imperialism nullifies every proposition contained in the Declaration of Independence. Republicans, your doctrine of imperialism tramples upon the constitutional rights of those who swore allegiance to our flag. Republicans, if you are willing to abandon the declaration when you deal with Puerto Rico, if you are willing to abandon the constitution when you deal with the Philippines, how long will that declaration and that constitution protect the American citizens who are willing to trample upon the rights of other people? (Applause.)—W. J. Bryan, Los Angeles, Cal., April 10, 1900.

IMPERIALIST BLACKMAIL.

The Washington correspondent of the Indianapolis News (Rep.), speaking of the persistency with which the Porto Rico tariff was sought, says:

"A Republican member of congress, who doesn't wish his name used, gives the following reasons why this tariff bill had to be jammed through:

"On the fate of this legislation depends the ability of congress to exploit—we might say blackmail—the new possessions. By means of a tariff congress can touch the business interests of this country by tariff legislation, but the extent to which blackmail can be levied is limited. The interests in this country are represented in congress. They have paid their agents and attorneys. Generally the legislation is in their favor, but the plan is for congress to get in its grip the power to operate a tariff against the colonies so that the latter shall have no representation in congress. They will have no means of protecting themselves against the blackmail. Every session congress can juggle the tariff rates, touching an interest here and there, and there will be nothing for the interests to do but to fill the hall with lobyists and come down with the coin. Work in a small way with Porto Rico will work in a larger way with the Philippines. The patronage feature in exploiting the colonies is insignificant compared to this. This is the end-of-the-century way of doing the business. Spain was out of date and bungling. We will show them how."

Large Returns for Small Investment.

It is estimated that the state of Kansas, with a voting population of 325,000, pays the trusts a profit of $32,500,000. For the purpose of keeping up this robbery, the Jeffersonian Gazette of Lawrence, Kan., says:

"The Republican party will spend no less than two millions of dollars in Kansas this year. As there are not over 160,000 Republican voters in the state, at most, it means than an average of $12.50 will be spent on each voter. Now the total amount looks like an enormous amount, but when you figure what it costs a man to be a Republican, you will readily agree that $12.50 is not near enough pay in return from the trusts."

The Gazette thinks that, while this is an inadequate division of spoils, still it is better than the old established price of $2 per head, and there having been many complaints, the price was raised to $12.50 per head. Of course, it is squarely an issue of the dollar against the man. If Kansas can be bought, the Republican party will carry the state, otherwise Bryan and fusion will triumph.

An Unwise Prophet.

The New York Herald recently said that Admiral Dewey could do his country as great service as he rendered at Manila by running for president as an independent candidate and thereby defeating Mr. Bryan. The Herald left the inference that this was the only way Mr. Bryan could be defeated. But just why it should be supposed Dewey would draw more votes from Mr. Bryan than from Mr. McKinley is not clear. In our opinion there are a lot of disgusted Republicans who would vote for Dewey rather than McKinley, if they had the choice, and it is quite possible that those who are banking on the election of McKinley through running Dewey as an independent candidate would be disappointed in their expectations.—Buffalo Times.

Amen! Mr. Sulzer.

Congressman Sulzer of New York took high ground while speaking to a pro-Boer resolution recently. After arraigning the Republican majority for referring it to a committee that never meets he said:

These brave Boers are now fighting, perhaps for the last time, for republicanism against monarchy; for democracy against plutocracy; for home rule against the bayonet; for the ballot against the throne; for the love of home against the love of gold; for Saxon freedom against British tyranny; for the integrity of their country against a ruthless invader; for the schoolhouse against the army barracks; for religious freedom against foreign domination; for the fireside of civilization against the blazing torch of devastation; for free institutions against imperialism; and, above all and beyond all, they are fighting a battle for the rights of man. God grant that their liberties and their independence shall not be destroyed.

Now mark:

Railway discrimination has fastened an anthracite coal monopoly upon us.

Railway discrimination has fastened the Big Four Beef Combine monopoly upon us.

Railway discrimination has fastened a bituminous coal combine monopoly upon us.

Railway discrimination has fastened the Grain Elevator Combine monopoly upon us.

Railway discrimination has fastened the Sugar Trust monopoly upon us.

Railway discrimination has fastened the Standard Oil Trust monopoly upon us. Also,

Railway discrimination has created and maintained almost every commercial monopoly that curses the American people today.

The Way It Goes.

The miners of Cripple Creek, about five thousand, dug out $14,700,000 in gold last year. With this about $3,000 each they ought to be in pretty good circumstances after paying their grub and clothing bills and the washerman. This is pretty good pay for working eight hours! That is what they would have got had the mines been public property, but as it is, there is much poverty and distress there, while those who are doing nothing got nearly all that gold. But then the workers believe that the planet can be bought and sold, and that those who do not own any of it have no right to be on it.

Narrow-Gauge Prosperity.

Strikes among workingmen of all kinds, from house builders to miners, are every day increasing in number in all parts of the country, the effect both of trust-fixed wages and the prices of the necessaries of life. And now the over-protected steel and wire trust has itself shut down twelve of its mills and at once thrown out of all work over 4,000 men with dependent families. Truly, this trust-given "prosperity" we hear so much about is a very narrow-gauge as well as a single-track affair.—Clinton (N. J.) Democrat.

Won't Have to Support It.

How can Governor Allen of Puerto Rico, when he takes his oath of office, swear to support the constitution of the United States, when that instrument has no binding force beyond the shores of our mainland? The republicans will have to send him over an oath made by act of congress. An expert swearer, like Grosvenor, ought to be equal to the task of preparing the proper sort of article.—Kansas City Times.

It May Be.

It may be that a kingdom is better than a republic. It may be that an empire in this late day is preferable to a democracy. It may be that the people are incapable of governing themselves; that the majority rule is a mistake, and that self-rule is a failure. But William McKinley and his advisers are first of all men on the soil of Columbia to say so.—Lafayette (Ind.) Journal.

The Colt's revolver is probably one of the descendants of the old-style horse pistol.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

SOME GOOD STORIES FOR OUR JUNIOR READERS.

Boys and Clean Cities—Words to Be Avoided—The Small Boy's Plaint—A Visit to Grandma's—Father's Evasive Answer—Introduced.

The Small Boy's Plaint.

When the blizzard is blowing outside in the street, I have to stay here in the house.
I have to sit quiet the whole of the time, as still as a little brown mouse.
They won't let me tease my small brother at all, or play with my small sister's things,
And mamma's not pleased if I stop in her room and set up a store with rings.

And papa gets mad as a crazy March hare when I cut pictures out of his books.
I cannot go down to the kitchen to stay, because we've the crossest of cooks.
The waitress don't like it if by some mischance I upset the cranberry pie.
On blizzardy days there isn't a boy so unhappy and tired as I.

The dog snaps at me if I pull his tail, and pussy she scratches my hand,
If I put her aboard the piano and play she's the head of a musical band.
The baby he cries if I poke at his eyes, and his nurse drives me out of the place,
And tells me that all through the rest of the day she don't want a sight of my face.

I wish it would clear off, for I want to go out; I can't stay quiet and still.
I'm so full of moviness all of the time that sitting down makes me feel ill.
I cannot do anything—no, not a thing—I can't say I will or I won't;
I cannot go out and I cannot stay in, when there's nothing to do but to don't.

Words to Be Avoided.

A teacher in a well known college for women in the United States has prepared for the benefit of her students the following list of words, phrases and expressions to be avoided. Set a watch on your lips, and if you are accustomed to making these "slips" try to substitute the correct expression. But don't be content with that alone. Learn why the preferred expression is correct, and this of itself will so fix it in your mind that you will soon use it unconsciously: "Guess" for "suppose" or "think." "Fix" for "arrange" or "prepare." "Ride" for "drive" interchangeably. "Real" as an adverb, in expressions such as "real" good for "really" good. "Some" or "any" in an adverbal sense; for example. "I have studied some" for "somewhat;" "I have not studied any" for "at all." "Some" ten days for "about" ten days. Not "as" I know for "that" I know. "Try" an experiment for "make" an experiment. Singular subjects with contracted plural verb; for example: "She don't skate well" for "she doesn't skate well." "Expect" for "suspect." "First rate" as an adverb. "Right away" for "immediately." "Party" for "person." "Promise" for "assure." "Posted" for "informed." "Depot" for "station." Try "and" for try "to" go. "Funny" for for "odd" or "unusual." "Above" for "foregoing;" "more than" for "beyond." Does it look "good" enough for "well" enough. "Feel "badly" for feel "bad." Feel "good" for feel "well." "Between" seven for "among" seven. Seldom "or" ever, for seldom "if" ever or "seldom or never." Taste and smell "of" when used transitively. More than you think "for" for "more than you think." "These" kind for "this" kind. "Nicely" in response to an inquiry. "Healthy" for "wholesome." Just "as soon" for just as lief."

Boys and Clean Cities.

New York city always will revere the memory of Colonel George E. Waring as the first and only street cleaning commissioner who thoroughly cleaned that great metropolis. About the time he assumed the duties of that office a club of children was formed in connection with one of the college settlements in the worst part of the city, the object of this club being to interest children in clean streets. Colonel Waring always welcomed aid offered his department, and he saw in this club the nucleus of a movement among the children that would greatly benefit the city. He thought the experiment worth trying and detailed an employe of the department to form and supervise clubs of this kind. For a considerable period two men were thus detailed. These clubs, which were called Juvenile Street Cleaning leagues, differed widly in character. The members of one club were older than those of another in the same district, and their meetings therefore could be conducted in a more business like and dignified manner. Some of the clubs were composed of young children. In other clubs we had to deal with boys and girls of inferior intellectual grade, or with children who, although naturally bright, were living in the most degenerating surroundings and were veritable "Chimmie Faddens." But in all cases the meetings were conducted in as formal a manner as conditions would allow, and each club had its constitution and its regularly elected officers. The average East Side New York boy, and especially the Jewish boy, is well up on parliamentary rules, and I remember well one club of Jewish girls connected with the Jewish institute who could put to shame many a pompous gentleman who fancies himself fully capable of presiding at a meeting. A majority of both boys and girls belong to two or more clubs of various kinds, and take as naturally to them as a duck to water. Each club chose a name, generally connected with the name of its school or settlement, though some of the names were original, as, for example, "Waring's Willing Workers." The department supplied the members with badges, which were highly prized, but which at times proved somewhat of a nuisance, owing to the urchins' propensity for trading them away and then reporting them as lost. Meetings were held weekly. After the routine of necessary business came reports of members as to what they had done since the last meeting. As an example, a little girl reports that she had picked up several banana skins and fed them to horses, which, by the way, are fond of them. Another had spoken to a careless grocer or landlady about littering the sidewalk. There were several cases in which men were arrested and find for disobeying the city ordinances, the arrests being due solely to the children.

A Visit to Grandma's.

Nellie, Roy and Arthur had come to their grandma's big house in the country. These children lived in the city of London, and did not have any pets. In this house of grandma's there was always room for one more. So the children came there every summer. One morning while they were feeding the chickens, they saw a dog in the barn. They went toward him, and he ran up to them. He was dirty, hungry and tired. The children washed him and combed his hair. They gave him some milk and chicken bones. Then they were going to decide on a name for him; they said it should be Carlo. They tied a blue ribbon with a bell on it around his neck. He used to carry the basket when they hunted eggs in the bay.

At last the time came for them to go home, and the children begged so hard to take him home, that their mamma allowed them to do so. They were delighted, and had their playmates to share their joy, as they had not any pets, and they came often to see Carlo. The children taught him a few tricks. Their father built him a kennel and he lived content and happy.

Timid Among the Ladies.

In spite of his thirty-one years, the Prince of Naples is rather timid in the presence of ladies, quite the reverse on this point from his cousins the Duke d'Aosta, Royal Artillery, and the Comte de Torino, of the First Dragoons, who are the greatest favorites in aristocratic circles, and who seem to bring life and entrain wherever they appear.

There is a third cousin, that is to say a third son of the late Duke of Aosta, who is more like the Prince of Naples in timidity of maners, modesty of life and devotion to his career. To this enthusiastic sailor the steel deck of a cruiser is far preferable to the waxed floor of a dancing hall. Following in the footsteps of Queen Margherita, he has taken up mountaineering when on leave of absence.

Introduced.

A boy's code of etiquette does not conform with the manual most approved and adopted in so-called polite society, but it serves his purpose all right. Two chubby little fellows were strolling along the sidewalk the other afternoon, when they were joined by a third, who was a stranger to one of the two chums, so the other proceeded to introduce them. "'Ned' Bright, do you know 'Tom' Brown?" "Nope," replied Ned. "Well, Tom Brown, do you know Ned Bright?" "Nope," returned Tom. "Well, now you know each other." So Ned and Tom proceeded to "throw" each other in the most approved manner and roll over in the dust in the friendly way boys have.—Memphis Scimitar.

The Oldest Table.

A wealthy man was once exhibiting proudly to a younger acquaintance a table which he had bought. He said it was 500 years old. "That is nothing," remarked his young visitor. "I have in my possession a table which is more than 3,000 years old." "Three thousand years old!" said the host. "That is impossible. Where was it made?" "Probably in India." "In India! What kind of a table is it?" "The multiplication table."

Father's Evasive Answer.

Children's questions are not always answered. One little boy said to his father: "There is a lot in this book about Othello. Who was Othello, papa?" "Why, bless me, my boy. Do you mean to say that you go to Sunday school and don't know who Othello was?"

A Boy's Recitation.

A teacher in civil government had told his pupils that once in ten years the state of Massachusetts takes a census. Little James, who is an attentive scholar, upon being called up to recite said: "Once in every ten years Massachusetts comes to its senses."

Johnny's Soliloquy.

"I shall be so glad when I get big enough to wash my own face," muttered little Johnny, after his mamma got through with him, "then I won't wash it."

Grow Handsome While Asleep.

A physical culturist of authority claims that not even worry will make a woman grow wrinkled and old so rapidly as sleeping with her head on a high pillow. To grow young, healthy and beautiful while you sleep, lie on your back with your head on a level with your body. Her theory is that during the day, when the head is held in its normal position, the muscles of the face drop, and when the tissues are lacking in strength and the skin flabby, wrinkles come, says the Montreal Herald. At night the dropping of the muscles should be counteracted. They should be lifted up. By sleeping with the head on a level with the body, the drooping lines, which give an expression of care and age to the face, will in time gradually disappear.

Diamond Insured for $2,000,000.

An enormous diamond from Kimberley will be shown in the jewelry section of the Paris exposition. It was found shortly before the war began and is said to be finer than the Regent, the Shah, the Grand Mogul or the Koh-i-noor. It has been insured for $2,000,000.

DR. HARTMAN'S ADVICE

Is Sought by Female Sufferers from Ocean to Ocean.

Mrs. F. W. Goulder, 1306 4th ave., Rock Island, Ill., writes:

"I was afflicted for five or six years with catarrhal difficulties and was growing worse all the time. I began taking your Peruna with a marked improvement from the first. Independent of curing that, the Peruna has greatly improved my general health."

"Every bottle of Peruna is worth its weight in gold; especially to me, for I owe my present good health to Peruna."

All over the country there are women who have been invalids for many years, suffering with female derangements which the family doctor cannot cure.

What a boon to such women is Dr. Hartman's free advice! So famous has his skill made him that hardly a hamlet or town in the country but knows his name. He cures tens of thousands, and he offers to every woman who will write to him her symptoms and a history of her trouble free advice and treatment.

The medicines he prescribes can be obtained at any drug store, and the cost is within the reach of any woman. He describes minutely and carefully just what she shall do and get to make a healthy, robust woman of herself.

The Doctor has written a book especially for this class of women, entitled "Health and Beauty." This book contains many facts of interest to women, and will be sent free to any address by Dr. Hartman, Columbus, O.

Making Barrels.

"Cooperage is one of the trades that no one thought of improving until within recent years," said a manufacturer, "but then the inventors and expert machinists started in with such a rush that it takes a good deal of our time keeping abreast of the improvements that are coming into the market every day.

"The work used to be done entirely by hand, and the coopers often had to buy their hoops from a firm that made nothing else. The coopers were not well enough equipped to make all the different parts of a barrel themselves, and often they bought everything outside and merely put the barrels together. It used to take five or six men to do the work properly, and an hour's time would perhaps turn out ten barrels.

"As the system is now, all the different parts are made by one machine, and only one man is needed to attend it. After the wood is fashioned into staves and hoops and braces by it the pieces are run through another section of it and come out almost immediately a finished barrel, ready to be loaded and shipped to our customers.

"On a regular average about 30 barrels can be turned out in an hour. You can see what the saving is over the old way. Employing six men for one hour, as they used to do, we can get 160 barrels, where by the old system they were only able to get ten."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

Nod and Drop Asleep.

Dr. Pardini of Turin claims that he has discovered that the best method of treating obstinate insomnia is to make his patients imitate the drowsy noddings of a tired man while sitting in a chair.

Every one who has ever watched a sleepy man in a train has probably been amused by the neck distorting nods which herald the approach of sleep. If the observer has given any thought to the subject at all, he has probably decided that the contortions are due to the sleeper's unconscious efforts to preserve his balance. Dr. Pardini says that the balance has nothing to do with it. He declares that nodding is pathologic; that it is nature's own method of inducing sleep.

This, if properly carried out, brings the head of the patient almost upon his right shoulder. The body is then to be inclined to the left and the head allowed to roll in that direction, still uncontrolled by the muscles. As soon as the head has reached the left shoulder muscular control is to be resumed and the head raised slowly until it is in the same position as at the beginning of the exercise. Then the whole method is to be repeated as long as needful.

Chinese Arithmetic.

The Chinese rejoice in a wonderful talent for inaccuracy in every detail. For instance, a pound or a pint varies as it suits the merchant's fancy. In some part you get half or a quarter as much as you do in others for the same price and measure.

Then, again, their way of calculating distance does not at all tally with Euclid. For instance, you are told from A to B is four miles, but from B to A is eight miles. If you ask how this is possible, you are told it depends from which end you start; if you start from A, it is down hill, so much easier to walk; whereas, starting from B, you have to walk up hill, which is much more exerting and fatiguing—in fact, it is the same as walking a longer distance on even ground.

This form of argument always amused me nearly as much as the way the Chinese have of counting a person's age by tens. "My mother," they will tell you, "is 30" (or 40). When she leaves 30, she is getting near 40. Should we all like to be told that, I wonder?—Leslie's Weekly.

Literary Consuls.

It is one of the curiosities of literature, says George F. Parker in The Atlantic, that, although the consular service has not produced reports of either economic or informing value, many writers have done conspicuous work before and during service and after retirement. W. D. Howells wrote some delightful books on Italy. Besides his "Life of Peter the Great," Eugene Schuyler wrote an acceptable short history of American diplomacy and translated some of Turgeneff's novels. Hawthorne, Elihu Burritt, Underwood, Bret Harte, Penfield, Richman—to mention only a few—have done notable work in literature, but not an official report of value. In the one case there was something to say, united with freedom of view and opinion; in the other there was nothing to say, and red tape was too strong for them. The fault is in the system, not in the men.

Cooking and Eating.

If we ate properly, the physician would lose his occupation. And we can eat for whatever we want—to get fat, to get lean, to be nervous or phlegmatic or to stop or encourage the ravages of disease. An "open door" awaits them all. Is it too much to hope that the twentieth century will see a law compelling cooks to take a medical course?

Almost There Already.

THE MOUNTAIN LION.

Over bare ridges, through dense thickets gliding,
Stealthy and sure do I follow my prey!
Along the dark canyons, in tangled ferns hiding,
Relentless I trail, and remorseless I slay!
Strong are my sinews and trackless my winding;
Noiseless as dew is the fall of my paws;
Sheathed in the folds of their velvety binding
Tougher and sharper than steel are my claws.
Swift as a sword are my eyes in their seeking;
Piercing the day or the blackest of nights;
Sleek is my muzzle, with blood often reeking;
Ready my teeth for the foeman who fights.
I am a king; dost thou ask me to battle?
Gather thy strength, for I give not a sign!
What! Art thou sounding so soon the death rattle!
I drink to thy health in the blood that was thine!
—Alfred I. Townsend in Overland Monthly.

A LONG SIEGE.

That of Gibraltar Breaks the Record of Modern Times.

Although by no means the most terrible, the last siege of Gibraltar, when the Rock was held by a British garrison under General Elliot against the combined efforts of the Spaniards, and French from July 5, 1779, to Nov. 26, 1781, holds the record as the longest important siege of modern times. The fact that every now and again the garrison were able to add to their provisions by successful sorties kept them from succumbing to hunger, but scurvy claimed nearly 1,000 victims.

For weeks together over 6,000 shells were thrown into the town daily. A curious point about this siege is that the governor of Gibraltar, after having done everything he could think of to strengthen the fortifications, issued a proclamation calling on any of the garrison who had any schemes to propose to call on him with them, as he did not wish the Rock to fall when by listening but a few minutes to a private individual it might be saved.

By holding the fortress of Plevna during the Russo-Turkish war from Sept. 7, 1877, to Dec. 10 against the pick of the Russian army the Turkish garrison, under Osman Pasha, accomplished the impossible, according to both military and medical experts; for not only did they defy the besieging force when it numbered nearly 50 to 1 against them, but they lived for 12 weeks practically without food. Yet on Dec. 10, after having eaten their last grain of rye, they sallied out and pluckily tried to cut their way through the Russians.—London Mail.

The Mystery of Lady Byron.

W. E. Henley writes vigorously of Lady Byron in The Pall Mall Magazine. In the end they were married by special license; a year and a fortnight after the wedding Lady Byron left her husband never to return to him, and the great heart of the public rose to the occasion. A bride repudiating her groom! A young mother fleeing the embrace of her firstborn's father! Obviously she—young, innocent, high principled, above all, virtuous—was the victim. By specifying nothing and so suggesting the unspeakable, she captured the general imagination and set it working to her sole advantage.

"He is completely lost in the opinion of the world," and "I look upon him as given up to every worthless excess for the rest of his life:" thus Miss Godfrey to her friend, Thomas Moore, and, condemning on hearsay and in advance, the poor soul did but follow her ladyship's suggested lead.

She had but to refrain from speaking indeed, and one of the strongest, bravest spirits of our century was expelled his country. And none knew why she did it, nor how. And why she did it remains a mystery even till this day.

A Desirable Death.

Children get queer associations of ideas in their heads at times. A little lad on Capitol hill has a playmate of his own age in the son of a poor neighbor. The son of toil visited his richer friend the other day wearing a gorgeous red tie. The son of wealth eyed the tie enviously for awhile and then asked Benny where he got it.

"My mamma dyed it for me for a birthday present," lisped Benny.

After Benny went home Rex played listlessly about for a time and then leaned on his mother's knee, thoughtfully studying the pictures in the fire. "Mamma," he said finally, "Benny's tie was awful pretty, wasn't it?"

"Yes, dear."

"Mamma, won't you kill me a tie like Benny's when I get a birthday?"—Washington Star.

Different Ways.

In these days of religious controversy, conscientious objections to vaccination and reluctance to kissing the Book it is refreshing to recall the broad minded views of John Chinaman on the last named subject as expressed in the court at Singapore. In that colony natives of southern India generally take an oath by killing a fowl, Chinamen by breaking a saucer, Englishmen on the Testament as at home. Our friend John, however, on being asked how he would be sworn replied, "Kill 'im cock, break im saucer, smell im book—all the same!"—Chambers' Journal.

Why He Doubted Her.

"Belinda says her photograph was taken when she wasn't looking, but I don't believe it."

"Why don't you?"

"She has her head on one side and her eyes rolled up."—Indianapolis Journal.

Ma's Sarcasm.

Mr. Snarley—I never was one that wanted to get something for nothing.

Mrs. Snarley—Well, that is about what happened when you married me.—Puck.

Never bear more than one kind of trouble at a time. Some people bear three kinds—all they have had; all they have now and all they expect to have.

[SEAL] ADAM ZEH,
County Auditor, Red Lake County, Minn.

To L. B. King:—

You are hereby notified that on the 12th day of May A. D. 1890, in proceedings to enforce the payment of delinquent taxes pursuant to that certain real estate judgment, which was entered in the District Court in and for the County of Polk, in the Fourteenth Judicial District, in the State of Minnesota, on the 21st day of March A. D. 1890, the following described piece or parcel of land is situated in Polk county, State of Minnesota, to-wit:

Lot 20, block 33, Village of St. Hilaire was bid in to the state to satisfy the amount for which it was judged liable in said judgment, interests and costs, for the sum of one dollar and eighty cents; that the above described real estate has become and now is the Absolute property of the state: That on the 15th day of March A. D. 1900 the above described real estate was sold by the undersigned county auditor of Polk county, as directed by the state auditor, in accordance with section 101 of Chapter 11 of the general statutes of 1878, and the several acts amendatory thereto, for the sum of eight dollars and eighty-nine cents: that the amount required to redeem said piece or parcel of land from such sale (exclusive of the costs to accrue on this notice) is eight dollars and eighty-nine cents with interest at the rate of 12 per cent per annum from said 15th day of March A. D. 1900, until such redemption is made and that the time for redemption of said piece or parcel of land from such sale will expire sixty days after the service of this notice, and proof thereof has been filed in the office of the county auditor of said county.

Witness my hand and official seal this 24th day of April A. D. 1900

England's Boy Choirs.

Julian Ralph, writing of "The Choir Boys of England," in The Ladies' Home Journal, says: "Small boys are much preferred, for the reason that they develop into manhood later than big, stalwart children, for it is at the coming of manhood that their voices break and they are obliged to stop singing until their adult tones are reached—a matter of years. A boyish treble is as delicate as the bloom on a peach, and its possessor must lead an orderly and innocent life, which is why so many choirs are made up of boys taken from their homes and boarded and taught in church institutions. These, sometimes, are able to sing until they are 17 or 18 years of age, though between 14 and 15 is the usual period when their voices break."

To cure a cough in one day take the Imperial cough syrup. Guaranteed to cure. For sale at the new Drug Store.

Resolved that George A. Ralph be and is hereby appointed civil engineer on the Sanders-Black River ditch.

Which resolution was seconded by Commissioner Sutor and on motion carried unanimously the same was adopted.

On motion carried unanimously the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved that the members of the board of county commissioners be and are hereby appointed and designated as a committee of the whole to examine the steel cells in the old Polk county jail and to purchase said cells if found satisfactory to all members of said board and that the county auditor be and if hereby instructed to issue his warrant on county revenue fund in payment of such cells when so directed by the chairman of said board. Said amount not to exceed $1000.00.

Bids for painting iron bridges were laid over until next meeting.

Whereas, at a session of this board duly called and held pursuant to law on the 21st day of February, 1900, this board adopted a resolution which in part read as follows:

"Now, therefore, it is hereby resolved by the board of county commissioners in and for the county of Red Lake, Minnesota, that bonds of said county in the aggregate sum of $9,000 be negotiated for the purpose of raising necessary funds for defraying the expense of the construction of said ditch, said bonds to be issued and dated the first day of May, 1900, to bear interest at the rate of five per cent per annum, payable annually, to be 18 in number, and to be in the denomination of $500 each, to mature the first day of May, 1910, principal and interest payable at the office of the county treasurer of Red Lake county, Minnesota, each of said bonds to contain a recital to the effect that they are issued in accordance with the provisions and pursuant to the authority of Ch. 97 of the Laws of Minnesota for the year 1887 and acts amendatory thereto."

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that so much of said resolution adopted on the 21st day of February, 1900, as is above quoted be and the same is hereby amended to read as follows:

Now, therefore, it is hereby resolved by the board of County Commissioners in and for the county of Red Lake, Minnesota, that the bonds of said county in the aggregate sum of $9,000 be issued, negotiated and sold for the purpose of defraying the expenses incurred, or to be incurred, in locating, constructing, and establishing the ditch duly located and established by this board at its session of January 5, 1900, and which ditch has been called and is hereby designated as "The Sanders and Black River Ditch No. 1 of Red Lake county, Minnesota," said sum being necessary to cover the expense of said ditch from its inception to its completion, said bonds to be dated the first day of May, 1900, to mature on the first day of May, 1910; to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable annually, to be nine in number, in denominations of $1000 each, principal and interest to be payable at the National Bank of Commerce in Minneapolis, Minnesota; each of said bonds to contain a recital to the effect that it is issued in accordance with the provisions and pursuant to the authority of Ch. 97 of the Laws of Minnesota for the year 1887 and acts amendatory thereto.

The question being upon the adoption of the foregoing resolution, the following was the vote:

Ayes,

Commissioners Demann, Johnson, Hebert, Sutor and Hansen.

Noes,

None.

So the same was declared adopted.

Whereas, The bid of Stoddard, Nye & Co. for the bonds of this county in the sum of $9,000, dated May 1, 1900, to mature May 1, 1910, to draw interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum, payable annually, to be nine in number, and in the denomination of $1000 each, principal and interest payable at the National Bank of Commerce in Minneapolis, Minnesota, the proceeds from the sale of said bonds to be used in defraying the expense of locating, constructing and establishing the Sanders and Black River Ditch No. 1 of this county, being the best bid obtained by this board for said bonds, and being better than par;

It is hereby resolved, that the same be and is hereby accepted, and the proper officers of this board and county are hereby directed to execute the said bonds in the manner provided by law, and upon the receipt of the amount of their bid therefor, to issue and deliver the same to said Stoddard, Nye & Co.

The question being upon the adoption of the foregoing resolution, the following was the vote:

Ayes.

Commissioners Demann, Johnson, Hebert, Sutor and Hansen.

Noes,

None.

So the same was declared adopted.

Petition of L. C. Erickson and others for alteration of boundaries school district No. 10 was read and on motion carried unanimously the 11th day of June was set for a day of hearing on the same.

Order Forming New School District.

Whereas, a petition signed and duly acknowledged by a majority of the freeholders who are entitled to vote at school meetings in their respective districts, residing within the territory of the proposed new school district, with the approval and recommendation of the county superintendent indorsed thereon, asking for the formation of a new school district, which shall embrace the territory hereinafter described, was presented to the board of county commissioners of this county at a session of said board, held on the 6th day of January, A D 1900, for the action of said board thereon;

And whereas, it was then ordered by said board that a hearing should be had on said petition at a session of said board on the 19th day of March A D 1900, at the Auditor's office in said county,

And whereas, due notice of the time and place of such hearing has been given by posting a notice setting forth the substance of said order in one public place in each of the school districts to be affected by said petition, and by handing to and leaving with the clerk of each of said school districts so affected thereby a notice of such order, at least ten days before the time appointed for such hearing and by the publication of said notice one time in the legal newspaper printed and published in Polk county, to-wit: The McIntosh Times, which said newspaper last mentioned is published and printed in Polk county, and was duly designated by said county commissioners of Polk county for the publishing of the same; and due proofs of the posting and service and publication of said notice of hearing having been made and filed by the affidavit of August Peterson who posted said notice and by the certificate of the county auditor of Polk county, who caused the said notice to be served upon each of the clerks of said districts affected thereby, and by the affidavits of the publishers of said newspapers in which the same was so published, respectively;

And whereas, at the session of said board of county commissioners of Red Lake county on the 19th day of March, A D 1900, said petition was publicly read and considered, and arguments of all persons interested therein for and against the organization of said proposed new district duly heard and considered,

It is hereby ordered and determined that said petition be granted, and the following described territory, to-wit:

Sections 1, 2, 11, 12, 13, the E ½ of sections 3, 10, 14, and north ½ of sec. 24, town 150, range 46; the south ½ of section 7 lying west of Red Lake river, and all of sections 2, 17, 18 and 19, lying west or Red Lake river, town 150, range 46.

Be and the same is hereby organized and constituted a school district, and shall be hereafter designated and known as common school district No. [to be numbered by the county auditor of Polk county] of the county of Polk, state of Minnesota.

By order of the board of county commissioners of Red Lake county, Minnesota.

Wm. C. L. Demann,
Chairman of said Board.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

GOT CATS INSTEAD OF BLANKET

Penalty Paid by a Southern Planter for His Illegible Chirography.

"If you ever get down to old Colonel ——'s," said an enthusiastic New Orleans sportsman, naming a veteran planter of the lower coast, "you will find the grounds overrun with big coal-black cats, now partly wild. How they came there is quite a curious story. You see, there is some tip-top hunting in that neighborhood, and some years ago, at just about this season, the old man invited down a party of northern gentlemen to take a crack at the ducks. They were heavy swells he had met in New York, who were here for the carnival, and he was anxious that they should have a royal time. The best place for ducks was some distance from the house, so it was arranged that the whole crowd should camp out for a few days near the shooting grounds, and in getting things together for the trip the colonel discovered he was short on bed clothing. Accordingly he rushed a darky over to the station with a letter to his merchant in New Orleans asking him to buy twelve large blankets, and send them out by first express. Now, the colonel's handwriting resembles the tracks of an inebriated turkey and his orthography is equally eccentric. He spelled the word blankets 'blancats,' and after puzzling over the hieroglyph for an hour, the merchant concluded it stood for black cats. He was astonished, of course, but knowing that there was a jovial gang at the plantation he decided some practical joke must be afoot and hurried out the clerk to buy all the large black cats he could find in the neighborhood. They had some trouble getting the dozen together, and the black cat market rose about 500 points before they succeeded, but eventually the consignment was safely boxed and sent away. Next morning the colonel and his guests eagerly awaited the arrival of the wagon from the station, before starting out and when it appeared in the distance were surprised to hear a faint sound of yowling, rapidly growing larger as it approached. A huge slatted crate filled one end of the bed and inside were twelve large black cats engaged in a free fight. When the top was pried off the ebony monsters leaped out in all directions, and they say the colonel's remarks ran up to the temperature of the lower coast 15 degrees Fahrenheit. That's where the stock came from that is now on the plantation. There must be two or three hundred of the beasts by this time."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

BLONDES AND BRUNETTES.

In Germany the Former Number Nearly One-Third of All Women.

The German Anthropological society has been collecting statistics relative to the comparative frequency of the blonde and brunette types and their distribution through the German empire. The observations were confined to school children, 6,000,000 of whom have been examined. For purposes of classification only those that had blue eyes and fair hair and skin were counted as blondes, and those whose eyes hair and skin were all dark, as brunettes. All others (for example, children with dark eyes and light hair or with blue eyes and dark hair and skin) were put in a third, or "mixed" class. In the empire as a whole, the blondes were found to number 31.8 per cent., the brunettes fourteen per cent., and the mixed types 54.2 per cent. In some districts the preponderance of the blonde element was much more marked —especially in a part of the Grand Duchy of Oldenburg, where there were only four per cent. of pure brunettes. The effect of the brunette Roman element was marked distinctly in the southern and southwestern parts of the empire. Near Worms and Speyer one often sees faces which strongly suggest those of central Italy or Roman statues and paintings.

Hiccough.

Hiccough is a spasmodic affection of the diaphragm. Generally a trivial and transient inconvenience, its occurrence in the last stages of acute disease is a grave, often a fatal, symptom, indicative of giving way of the nervous system generally. Continued and obstinate hiccough sometimes occurs in persons, more especially in young females of a hysterical tendency, and may continue for weeks without cessation, except during the hours of sleep, in spite of all kinds of treatment. The causes of ordinary hiccough are generally fasting, or some sudden stimulant taken into the stomach, such as highly seasoned soup; and the affection generally subsides of its own accord. When inconvenient nothing is so likely to remove it as some active emotion of the mind suddenly excited. The continued sipping and swallowing of cold water, or sucking of ice, are frequent domestic remedies; or anti-spasmodics, such as sal volatile, may be useful.

The Girl with the Hammer.

The advantages of a substantial education for women are demonstrated with peculiar force by an item which we take from the Bangor News. A barn in Aroostook went unshingled because the farmer who owned it was too infirm to climb to the roof, while one of his sons had gone to the war in the Philippines, and the other to the Klondike. The other day, however, the farmer's only daughter came home from the normal school, and shingled the barn as well as any man in town could have done it, and she didn't once pound her fingers, either.

LADY OF THE STONE AGE.

What One Looked Like After Her Countenance Was Reconstructed.

From Germany comes the statement that two remarkable attempts have been made to reconstruct the countenance of persons who lived in prehistoric times. Prof. Kollmann, a distinguished surgeon and anthropologist of Basle, was the last who attempted this feat. Being a gallant man, he selected a lady for the purpose of the experiment. She lived during the stone age, at a place near where Auvernier, near Neufchatel, now is. Either by accident or design her skull was broken before she had reached her thirtieth year, and her body was laid to rest at the bottom of a lake, near her home. This curious human fossil was discovered a short time ago and Prof. Kollmann at once determined to reproduce, as far as possible, the features of this mysterious lady of the lake. Her skull was in an excellent state of preservation. The first act necessary was to reconstruct the head, and this he did by placing thin layers of clay or other soft material around the skull until the proper size and shape was reached. The next step was to gain an idea of how much flesh there was originally on the head and face, and to this end he experimented on the skulls of several women who had just died. He inserted a needle here and there in the faces, in order to ascertain the thickness of the flesh in each place. He thus obtained some idea of the manner in which the flesh may have clothed the head and face of the lady of the lake. Among the corpses on which Prof. Kollmann experimented was that of a young woman whose skull was exactly like the stone one. The professor did his work with extreme precision, making exact measurements of the flesh on the face of various corpses and only reproducing in plaster on the stone face the exact amount and thickness of flesh which were necessary. He portrays the lady of the lake as a rather modern looking young woman, with a small face, a broad forehead, a nose somewhat turned up, and lips thick and ruddy. Soon after Prof. Kollmann had completed his work, Prof. Merkel made a similar experiment on the skull of a man which he found in the graveyard at Rosdorf, near Goettingen. This skull is not as old by several thousand years as the one reconstructed by Prof. Kollmann. The face as reproduced by him is that of a sturdy peasant about 50 years old. The remarkable fact about it, however, is the wonderful resemblance which it bears to the very faces of the peasants living in that district today. Those who have seen it say that it is exactly the same type of face, and that it is a proof of the permanence and purity of race.—New York Herald.

DELICATE FABRICS FROM ILOILO

Exquisite Nun's Veiling Which Was Made by the Natives.

Perhaps the most attractive package received from the Philippines in this city was that which went to Mrs. Margaret Sullivan, the mother of Lieut. William Sullivan of the Twenty-sixth regiment, says the Manchester (N. H.) Union. The package contained a roll of exquisite nun's veiling, which was made by the natives. Rolled up with the cloth were two shuttles, with the bobbins in place, and which the natives operate by hand in making this nun's veiling. Accompanying the package was a letter which was dated at Iloilo, Dec. 15, and contained a few facts about the manufacture of the cloth. Lieut. Sullivan wrote that the cloth is made by the natives of Iloilo in the cottages and the quantity sent in the package (a number of yards) cost only $2. "The natives weave some of the finest patterns and colorings you can imagine," wrote the lieutenant, "and the cloth is made from the banana fiber. They also make a cloth from the pineapple fiber, which is as delicate as silk." The shuttles accompanying the cloth were of a dark wood, and were well polished, as if they had been used to a great extent. Whoever made them was well versed in the use of wood-working tools. Glass beads had been placed in the bottom of the shuttles to make them run easily, these beads running on an axis of wire.

Why We Forget Names.

Many persons are especially forgetful with regard to names—as of acquaintances or some familiar object. Dr. Bastian, in discussing effects recently, quoted with approval this explanation: "The more concrete the idea the more readily is the word used to designate it forgotten when the memory fails. We easily represent persons and things to ourselves without their names. More abstract conceptions, on the contrary, are attained only with the aid of words, which alone give them their exact shape in our minds." Hence verbs, adjectives, pronouns, adverbs, prepositions and conjunctions are more intimately related to thought than nouns are, and can be remembered when nouns, or names, slip from the mind.

How It Happened.

"How did you come to sever your engagement with Miss Dashleigh, the heiress?" the poet's friend asked. "I will tell you," the bard sadly replied. "I wrote a sonnet to her and had it published. In one of the lines I made use of the words 'her plaint.' The printer made it 'her paint.' So you see how little things continue to upset our fondest calculations."—Chicago Times-Herald.

FIGHTING FOR A "ZOO."

Prof. Langley's Persistent Efforts for Preservation of Wild Animals.

In an illustrated article on "The National 'Zoo' at Washington," Ernest Seton-Thompson, the author-artist, tells what hard work Prof. Langley had to do before congress would pass a bill to establish such an institution: In 1887, when the newly appointed Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, Mrs. S. P. Langley, who, though an astronomer and a physicist, had been very strongly impressed by the fact that all our largest and most interesting native animals were rapidly approaching extinction, conceived the idea of securing a tract of country, as primitive as possible, that might be made a lasting city of refuge for the vanishing races. This was the main idea when first Mr. Langley went before congress to urge the establishment of a National Zoological Park. In all ages it has been the custom of potentates to keep a collection of wild animals for their amusement, and the American people, being their own ruler, had numberless precedents before them when urged to make this much-needed collection of animals. In such a case the advantage of a monarchy is that only one man must be convinced, whereas in the republic the consent of a majority of seventy millions had to be obtained. This took time. Fierce battles had to be fought with ignorant and captious politicians. One objected that he did not see why people should pay "to have the Nebraska elk and Florida alligators cooped up." If they had to spend money for it they would want things they could not see at home—dog-faced baboons, kangaroos, man-eating tigers, etc. Another, a fervent patriot, objected to any money being spent on exotic species, as it was contrary to the spirit of the constitution to encourage or import foreigners! Altogether the secretary of the Smithsonian found it no easy bill to carry, though it was indorsed by nearly every scientist and educator in the country. After three years of persistent effort, involving vastly more worry than the management of the whole Smithsonian Institution for three times that period, Mr. Langley succeeded in carrying both houses of congress over the successive stages of ridicule, toleration, and favorable consideration, to the point of accepting and providing for the scheme. An appropriation was made for a National Zoological Park to be established in the District of Columbia for the "Advancement of Science and the Instruction and Amusement of the People," as well as a city of refuge where those "native animals that were threatened with extinction might live and perpetuate their species in peace."

Maternal Blunders.

Women there are who are like the old Bourbons, of whom it was aptly said they never learned anything, and never forgot anything. The mother who has not advanced an inch beyond the level reached in nursery management by her mother and her grandmother is a distinctly and hopelessly conservative person, and books will do her little good. She will go on dressing her wee baby in closely fitting bands, and in garments which are too long and too heavy; she will nurse him when she pleases, and not according to the clock, and far too soon she will burden his immature stomach with food difficult of digestion and impossible of assimilation. It is pitiful to reflect on the sum of infantile pain and suffering which has been needlessly borne by the small morsel of humanity whom ignorant and untrained though loving mothers have nursed in unhygienic ways, and one's heart aches at the thought of the small graves which have scarred the turf and been watered by mothers' tears without necessity. Divine Providence has been arraigned often unfairly, when the real fault was due to maternal blundering.

Dog Rescued Her.

While going to her home on the Poulson farm, in Lower Chichester township, Miss Elsie Lewis stepped in a ditch and disappeared in the deep snow. She made desperate efforts to get out but was fast becoming benumbed when a large Newfoundland dog belonging to the Maltatesta farm and usually quite savage, came to her rescue. Plunging into the deep snow the animal forced his way to her side. She flung her arms about his shaggy neck and the dog broke a passage out of the ditch, dragging Miss Lewis along. He remained by her side while she rested and when she started to cross the field, the dog barking joyfully, trotted ahead, breaking a path for her to her home, a half mile away. —Chester (Pa.) Cor. Philadelphia Record.

One Ahead.

Mrs. A. was having one of her houses cleaned, preparatory to letting it to a new tenant. Assisting her was a "cleaner," who proved to be very inefficient. Finding a room which was supposed to be in order still very dirty, Mrs. A. swept it herself. Then she said to Bridget, whom she met in the hall "Why, Mrs. Ryan, I thought you said you had swept the front room, and here I have got a whole dustpan full of dirt out of it." Nothing disconcerted, Bridget responded with a beaming smile: "Did ye, now, ma'am? I got two."

"You hear the click, click of the car wheels going over the rail joints?" remarked a railroad man while enroute. "Count these for 20 seconds and the number of clicks you hear in that time will be exact number of miles the train is going in an hour. For instance, if you hear fifty ticks in twenty seconds you will know that the train is going at the rate of fifty miles an hour. The standard rail is thirty feet in length. If you have a pencil and paper you can readily figure it out."

We have heard about men "talking through their hats," but it remained for Mayor McDonald, who owns the Drayton Telephone Exchange, to demonstrate a few days ago that a woman can talk through a man even if he is not very thin in stature. While making some repairs to the telephone system recently, the mayor cut one of the wires and held the two ends of the severed line one in either hand. While thus holding the same the lady above referred to ring up the meat shop and sent in her order for the dinner roast. Both the going and coming current on the wire passed through the mayor, and the conversation was carried on and understood by both the lady and the meat man just the same as if there had been no brake in the wire. Wonderful is the telephone.—Drayton Echo.

A good story on the Modern Woodmen comes from Ipswich. Their hall at that place is situated over the opera house which was wrecked by a gas explosion last week. On the eventful night a candidate was being initiated. The goat had just done its worst when all of a sudden there was a fearful noise, and at the same instance the floor was raised up six feet while the ceiling came half way down to meet it. The members fled panic stricken from the hall, forgetting the candidate for the time being. One member, braver than the rest, returned to find his remains, but on entering found him standing among the debris, "waiting for the rest of it," he said. It was long before they could convince him that the explosion was not a part of the ceremony of adoption, "because however," he said, "it wasn't any worse than the rest."—Ashton Chronicle.

Climate and Crop Bulletin.

For the week ending May 14, 1900.

Generally light and probably local rains on the 7th and 8th in southern counties and parts of the Red River valley, and also in the South and across the northern center of the state on the 13th, gave temporary relief to small areas from the very dry conditions prevailing during May. Early in the week the weather was cool, and on the mornings of the 9th and 10th light frosts occurred in different parts of the state. In the latter part of the week it was very warm, the maximum temperatures being above 90 on the 11th, 12th and 13th except in the eastern parts of the state. At Minneapolis, the maximun temperature of 90 on the 12th has been exceeded only once during May since 1891. The early sown grains are stooling, and they are generally looking well though not growing rapidly, but in a few places it is said that spring wheat is looking yellow for want of rain, and that some fields of oats and barley are brown, the effect of the severe frosts of the 2nd, 3rd and 4th; the oats are said to be recovering. Later sown grains need rain for even germination. Some of the early sown flax was cut off by the frost, but most of the crop was not sufficiently grown to be in danger. The sowing of flax continues, but the largest part of the flax acreage is sown except in the northern counties. Corn planting is going on, and by the 19th it is likely that most of it will be finished. The planting of the early potato crop is well advanced. The drouth is delaying the growth of grass in the pastures. Winter rye will soon be heading in southeastern counties. Winter wheat does not improve, and it is being replaced by other crops. The fruits do not seem to have been injured by frost, and they are promising well.

In driving through the country when a tidy looking farm is passed, with fences in good order, buildings looking neat and trim, trees trimmed and clean we know the resident is a person who takes pride and interest in his farming and that it pays him to do so. It takes but a few days each year to keep the brush cut away from the fences; to nail up a board here and there that may have become loosened; to keep the fences up straight with no weak places to tempt the cattle to jump into the owners or neighbors grass or grain; to put the implements under shelter when not in use; to pick up boards lying around the house or barn; to trim the trees and cut out old dead and dying branches; to mow the lawn at least once a year; to arrange all gates so they will freely swing on their hinges; to have a well kept garden; good supply of small fruit; the pump in good working order; a good supply of dry wood under shelter; to clean out all open ditches, and to look after the stock frequently and carefully, all these things take but a little time at the proper time and they increase the cash value of a farm. If we have in the past neglected these, let us resolve to do differently. Possibly we have not had so many leisure hours, but we will be adding to the looks and worth of our earthly possessions and to our standing as men and farmers.—Ex.

The Richest Woman's Story.

How Hetty Green, the famous financier, who enjoys the distinction of being the richest woman in America, has made and kept her millions will be told for the first time in the June Ladies' Home Journal. In view of Mrs. Greens vast wealth, so great that she herself cannot exactly compute it, the story of her home life will also be especially interesting, by reason of its extreme simplicity. In the article Mrs. Green tells how she has bought and sold railroads and towns, and how she has compelled political managers to do her bidding—showing the enormous power of money in these golden days. Her daily life, too, is interesting, for early and late she is at her task of watching her wealth and eagerly adding to it, being a stranger to almost any other recreation. Several pictures of the woman with millions, made expressly for the article, will give it additional interest.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent.

Gov. Teddy Roosevelt is in his own estimation,—the biggest thing in Washington and the most showy flower in the republican bouquet. He has been strutting around the Capitol and the White House as though he owned the whole shooting match, and patronizingly giving advice to Mr. McKinley, Boss Hanna and others who thought they knew a little something about the party machine. For some reason the republican leaders are all adding to the size of Gov. Teddy's head by the deferential manner in which they are treating him. Mr. McKinley gave a dinner in his honor, and he was invited to a dinner given to the republican leaders in Congress by Boss Hanna, at which the platform to be adopted by the Philadelphia convention was read by Hanna and Roosevelt's advice asked as to its planks. If you ask what all this means, you ask the question which has been asked thousands of times in Washington, this week, and not yet satisfactorily answered. One very reasonable answer is that the republican managers have become alarmed about New York, and are seeking to add to the prestige of Gov. Teddy in order to help him towards reelection, which they regard as helping McKinley in the State. Whatever their object, they are making Gov. Teddy believe that he is the whole thing, which, by the way, is not difficult to do.

Mistakes in the Porto Rican act continue to crop up. The latest is that the law, as construed by the Treasury Department, puts an additional penalty on Europeans who desire to trade with the island via United States ports. If an European sends goods direct to Porto Rico from the old world, he pays the Dingley rates; if he sends them to New York for shipment to Porto Rico, he must pay the Dingley rates and 15 per cent additional. That is to say, the Republican party in its wisdom has directly discriminated against this country as a port of call between Europe and Porto Rico, and has done its best to discourage steamship lines from the United States to Porto Rico and to encourage direct lines from Europe to Porto Rico. Of course, this is all very well for the trusts that wish to control the Porto Rican market, for their protection is increased 15 per cent over the already monumental Dingley rates. Whether they had part in drawing the verbiage of the bill with the idea of getting this additional duty or whether it was an unexpected stroke of fortune for them, cannot be said. In either case, it is hard on the Porto Ricans.

I consider it not only a pleasure but a duty I owe to my neighbors to tell about the wonderful cure effected in my case by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I was taken very badly with flux and procured a bottle of this remedy. A few doses of it effected a permanent cure. I take a pleasure in recommending it to others suffering from that dreadful disease.—J. W. Lynch, Dorr, W. Va. This remedy is sold at The Imperial Drug Store.

A new coin three-cent piece has been authorized by act of congress to take the place of the old coin which was so much like a dime that the coinage was stopped. The new three-cent piece is ordered to be made of nickel the size of the old bronze cent, although thicker. In the center is to be made a hole one-fourth of an inch in diameter. This will make the coin easily destinguishable by sight or touch. It will be some time, however, before this new coin will be circulated.

Langdon Courier-Democrat: Flax is not much harder on the land than wheat but neither should be continually grown on the same land, nor should the two in alternation be continually grown. In rare instances in this portion of America, a flax disease, apparently in the roots, has made its appearance Prof. Sheppard, of the Fargo Agricultural college, who took part in the Farmers Institute here a couple of months ago, says he has grown flax continuously on a plot of land for several years, with no disease appearing, and still gets fairly good crops, though he does not recommend such a course. In Holland where the disease prevails, flax is not put on a field oftener than once in five years. The disease is not well understood, but some Belgian scientist has recently stated that it is a disease of the roots, probably not bacterial but possibly due to a chemical irritant.

The ancients believed that rheumatism was the work of a demon within a man. Any one who has had an attack of sciatic or inflammatory rheumatism will agree that the infliction is demoniac enough to warrant the belief. It has never been claimed that Chamberlain's Pain Balm would cast out demons, but it will cure rheumatism, and hundreds bear testimony to the truth of this statement. One application relieves the pain and this quick relief which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. For sale by The Imperial Drug Store.

Her Heart's Secret

Or Under a Spell.

By Jean Warner.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Missing.

Ere Fannie had recovered from her fright Herbert burst through the undergrowth. His face was death-like, and great beads of moisture stood out upon his brow.

He strove to speak, but utterance seemed to fail him. He could only make a wild gesture toward the village, as he sank exhausted upon the rock behind him.

"Great Heaven, Clive, what is it?" asked Fenton, his own ruddy cheek blanching. "Are you hurt? That shot—where did it come from? Where is Miss Wraye?"

"Quick—the doctor!" gasped Herbert, who seemed to rouse his sinking energy at the name—"the doctor! She is wounded—dead for aught I know! The shot struck her!"

"Sybil!" shrieked Fannie. "Oh, heaven! Sybil wounded—dying? Oh, where is she?"

"Hush!" said her brother, grasping her arm; don't shriek so. You will warn him—the fiend who did the deed—that we are near. Quick—the doctor, Fenton! Ride for life or death! I—I" the young man's voice broke hoarsely—"I cannot leave her for a moment. I dare not move her; she is lying still where—where she fell."

"Let me go with you, brother!" said Fannie, sobbing hysterically. "I—I will be quiet. Oh, Sybil, Sybil—darling! who could wish to harm her?"

"Hush!" said Herbert turning on her fiercely. "Girl, girl, you will madden—Nay, I am mad already! The shot that pierced her gentle heart was aimed at me. She saved me by giving her own life for mine! She—Hush, hush! We are near the spot. Hush! The villain may be lurking around, even now, and we must not warn him. He shall not escape me, if there is justice in heaven and earth! With my own hands I will avenge her innocent blood—with my own hand I will take a life for a life!"

"Herbert—brother!" exclaimed Fannie, sick with a new terror, as she saw the terrible change that had come over him.

For Herbert Clive's countenance was transformed by the storm of passions swelling in his breast. His dilated eyes seemed to flash with lurid fire, his nostrils quivered—every feature was set in the stern rigidity of carven stone.

It was one of those fearful moments of "white heat" that mould the man forever and forever.

They reached the spot, the grassy glade where Sybil had spoken her last words to Herbert—those words that would remain stamped on his memory while life should last.

The two horses were grazing quietly near by; the shrubbery was trampled and broken. The grassy bank where Herbert had left Sybil still bore the impress of her fragile form; but—the young man sprang forward, with an exclamation of dismay—Sybil was not there!

Not there! though he had left her, less than five minutes ago, with the closed eyes and the helpless limbs, the well-nigh pulseless heart, of one already in the grasp of death. Not there! Aye, escaped, even in death, from his care and his love!

"My God! where is she?" exclaimed the young man. "I left her here, on this very bank. Her wound was bleeding, so I dared not move her further. Has she dragged herself into some neighboring thicket, to die unseen?"

"Oh, Sybil! Sybil!" cried poor Fannie, as she flung herself from her horse. "Sybil, darling, where are you?"

"Stay here!" said Herbert, in a hoarse whisper, laying his hand heavily upon her arm. "I must go search for her! But, no, no—I forgot, you, too, are helpless. I cannot leave you until they come from the village."

"Don't think of it!" sobbed generous Fannie. "Go—go and find Sybil; poor, Sybil! Oh, brother, I loved her so—I loved her so!"

"What was your love to mine?" was his anguished reply. "She had just spoken words—aye, just as she fell—words that opened heaven to me! Oh, the villain, the accursed villain, who could blight a flower like her—a blossom too pure and lovely for mortal bloom! Oh, heaven, to think that she died warning, saving me! Aye, aye"—the young man clenched his teeth together, as if to repress the convulsions into which his wrath would have betrayed him—"they have carried her off to die! The fiends, the villains, have carried her off to die, where there will be none to witness her death—none to say she was foully, cruelly, basely murdered. But I will find her, dead or alive—I will find her, my darling, my Sybil, my martyred love!"

"Where are they? Clive! Clive! where are you?"

It was Dr. Bond's voice that echoed through the woods; and in a moment Fenton Forest, Laurence Grey and the old doctor had joined the brother and sister.

"What the deuce is to pay?" exclaimed the doctor, excitedly. "Where's the girl? Who's been shot? What the mischief is the matter, anyhow?"

"She is gone; they have carried her off!" said Herbert. "They must be hiding near. Stay with my sister, doctor, and we will find her. Come, boys, quick—quick!"

"Find who? The girl has been carried off? You talk like a fool, sir!" said the doctor, irately. "What cock-and-bull story is this? And what have I been dragged away from my dinner for? I will teach you young scapegraces to play your practical jokes on me! Who was it told me Sybil Wraye was shot?"

"Hush! hush!" said Fannie, laying her hand gently on the irate old gentleman's sleeve, as Herbert, followed by his bewildered friends, dashed desperately into the forest. "Don't you see the poor boy is nearly mad with grief? He don't know what he is saying or what he is doing. Sybil was riding with him, and some awful man, in ambush, shot at him, shot her."

"Shot her? Shot Sybil Wraye?" said the old doctor in a broken voice. "Aimed at him and shot her?"

"Yes, sir; she tried to save him, and—and—"

"Of course—of course; fool to the last, like every woman!" growled the doctor. "And they carried her off, he says. Who has carried her off? Why the deuce wasn't she left here so that I could attend to her? Where are those young madmen rushing off to now?"

And the old doctor, who was in that excitable state of mind peculiar to plethoric old gentlemen who find themselves suddenly run out of their groove, and left at the mercies of rash, unreflecting youth, seated himself on the moss-grown log beside him and began to mop his brow savagely.

But Fannie's composure had given way. She could explain no further.

"O, Sybil! Sybil!" she cried, flinging herself upon the grass and sobbing piteously. "I can't believe it—I can't believe that she is dead! Oh, doctor, save her—save her! You are so good and skillful. Save her—for I loved her so; I loved her so!"

And to all the old doctor's questions expostulations Fannie only sobbed out the same pitiful answer:

"I loved her so—I loved her so!"

For more than an hour the young men continued their search, and the impatient old doctor was left to chafe in helpless ignorance beside his sobbing charge. Then, at last, Laurence Grey made his appearance, and in a few brief words related to the old gentleman all that he had gleaned from Herbert of the strange and terrible circumstances attendant on Sybil's disappearance.

"Very remarkable, indeed!" said the doctor, incredulously. "She couldn't have been spirited into air, or swallowed up in the earth in less than five minutes. She could not have walked and she could not have flown. She was carried off, sir—carried off by the miscreant who didn't want her death laid at his door, and if there's law in the land, the law shall find her! Take this child home, sir," continued the doctor, rising. "She's half-cracked, like all the rest of the young women nowadays. They're all one-sided—they have all heart and no heads, or all head and no heart. Take her home, sir! I'll look for Miss Sybil Wraye. I've got rheumatism in my joints, and my limbs are not as nimble as they were forty years ago; but I know every rood of the ground here better than those who own it. Go home, my dear; take a dose of valerian and go to bed"—the old doctor patted Fannie affectionately on the cheek—"go to bed, my dear! Old Harry Bond is starting out to find your friend, and he will find her if she is above the earth!"

And, cutting a thick cane from a young hickory tree that grew near him, the doctor carefully deposited his surgical instruments in a hollow tree close by, glanced at a little Derringer he always carried in his pocket, to see that it was safe, and with all the energy, if not the agility of five-and-twenty, commenced the search for the missing girl.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Search.

All through that summer day the search went on. It seemed utterly impossible that Sybil could have been carried off without leaving some clue that might lead to her discovery; yet such was the case.

The thickly-wooded acres that surrounded Clive Towers, though cleared and cultivated artistically in the immediate vicinity of the house, had been left, in the more distant portions of the estate, covered with primeval forest.

Many had wondered at the lack of interest Robert Clive had shown of late in improving his noble inheritance. Speculators had offered him tempting prices for the ground, that was now only a beautiful wild wood, yet he refused them all, giving no other reason than his preference to retain his uncle's estate intact. For old Basil Clive had seemed possessed of a mania for land-holding, and during his life had grasped at every acre in his vicinity, whether worthless or valuable.

Hence it was that such wild spots as the "Haunted Hollow" and the "Witches' Cave" had come into Robert Clive's possession. One might roam for days through the great stretch of forest that formed the northern portion of Clive land. The woodman's ax rarely echoed in these sylvan solitudes; the grand old oaks raised their stately heads into the winter snows and summer sunshine as royally as if the destroying hand of man had no power over their domain, and the huge grape vines that twined like giant serpents among their branches, lifted their tempting clusters far beyond the most adventurous reach.

No road traversed this shadowy wilderness; it was only threaded by little footpaths that led, beneath sweeping boughs and interlacing limbs, to the river.

Even Dr. Bond, with the memories of bygone hunts still fresh in his mind, when he had scoured Clive Forest for days together in search of game, was forced to confess that five-and-twenty years make great changes, even in the unspoiled face of nature.

He turned and returned; went forward, as he thought, for hundreds of yards, only to find that the labyrinthine paths had led him back to the spot whence he had started.

The landmarks of old were gone; the scarred oak had fallen; the Beacon Rock was overgrown by vines; the beaten path that had once served as a sort of highway through which the weekly coach made its lumbering progress, was choked by a young plantation of oaks.

After hours of hopeless wandering, the old doctor was forced to sink down upon a moss-grown rock that guarded a crystal spring, and as he refreshed himself by a draught of the ice-cold water, acknowledged that Nature and Time together were too much for him.

He didn't know where he was, nor how far he had been; he only felt that his limbs were sore and his strength gone, and that he had proved himself an old fool for nothing.

"I don't see why I should concern myself about the girl, anyhow," muttered the doctor, as a sharp twinge of rheumatism struck his knee. "There's plenty of policemen in the neighborhood, whose business it is to look after robbers and murderers, without my taking the work in hand. Confound it, there must be some witchcraft about that girl! Her eyes have been haunting me ever since the first time I saw her—those eyes that are so like—so like Sybil Lee's!"

"Who is it that speaks of Sybil Lee?" said a voice that made the doctor spring to his feet, regardless of his fatigue and rheumatism. "Who is it that can look over a gulf of five-and-forty years, and still speak of Sybil Lee? Ah, Master Harry—Master Harry! if she had been [illegible] walk her way with you, things would [illegible]"

"What the— Who are you?" gasped the doctor, almost startled into profanity by the witch-like figure that met his gaze; for it was Rizpah who, leaning on her long stick, looked out upon him from the undergrowth.

"Who am I? Ha, ha! You knew me well enough five-and-forty years ago, Master Harry, though I was younger and comelier than I am now. Do you remember the old African's hut where you came with her to have your fortune read? Do you remember the old African's daughter, to whom you threw a dollar for a wedding gift? Do you remember Rizpah?"

"Rizpah? Rizpah? Good heavens!" exclaimed the doctor, in wonder; "the beautiful young mulatto whom she—my Sybil—used to teach?"

"Aye, aye!" answered the old woman, bitterly; "the beautiful young mulatto of five-and-forty years ago is the withered old witch of to-day! It is the way the world goes—the way the world goes! And if your Sybil had lived she would have, mayhap, been as ugly, and withered, and weazened as old Rizpah is now. The dead only are ever young."

"Impossible!" answered the doctor, with a shudder. "But, alas! I forget the changes that time can make in five-and-forty-years—I forget what I am myself."

"You haven't changed so much that these old eyes could not see Harry Bond in you still," answered Rizpah, fixing her fierce gaze upon his face. "You haven't changed so much, Master Harry. Unless your looks belie your heart, I can trust you still. If the thought of Sybil Lee is still fresh in your mind, if her memory is still green in you heart, follow me."

"Not unless I am a madman," was the doctor's mental rejoinder, for the gleaming eyes and fierce words of the old creature warned him she was crazed. "I've got myself deep enough in the mud now without wading further into the mire. At sixty-five we never lose our wits for more than a couple of hours at a time, and my sober senses have come back to me with this twinge of rheumatism."

"No, my good Rizpah," added the doctor, aloud. "I've gone far enough on a fool's errand this evening. I'm too old nowadays to travel on any romantic missions. If you've ever had the rheumatism, you'll help me, in pure pity, out of this confounded wilderness; for, unless I'm in bed within an hour, with a good drink of herb tea in my stomach, I'll be crippled for a week."

"Bah! Are you coward enough to fear pain?" she asked, scornfully. "Look there"—she held out her long, thin hand, that was bent and drawn into a frightful claw. "Pain has griped my every sinew into shapes like that, and yet I scorn to let it conquer me. I can defy pain—I can defy weakness—I can defy death, when they would bid me shrink from serving those dearer to me than wretched life. But, I am a woman! You—ha, ha! I forgot—you are only a man! There is no well-spring that can keep the heart of man fresh and green for five-and-forty years. It is only woman—weak woman—that can love and suffer—love and suffer while a shred of the thing she worships remains to her—love and suffer still!"

"The old hag talks like a book," muttered the doctor to himself. "I wonder what the deuce she is driving at? These half-stricken creatures go always round and round the point. I've half a mind to follow her, and see where she will lead me. I'm in for the rheumatics anyhow, and a little extra folly can't make me more of a fool. She can't take me into much trouble, at any rate, while I have this."

And the doctor felt again for his pocket pistol, then added, aloud:

"Go on, mother. I'll follow you, since you put the old man on his mettle. Lead me anywhere, so it's outside of this confounded Cretan twist, where every path seems knotted up to bewilder wandering Christians. Go on! I'll come as fast as these stiffening limbs will allow. Harry Bond's heart may be as fresh as it was five-and-forty years ago, but there's no mental elixir that will keep one's legs nimble. Go on! I'm coming, though—confound that toe!—it's hard work!"

And, hobbling along, in no very good humor with himself or the world in general, the doctor followed the witch-like form of Rizpah, as it seemed to glide, with supernatural activity, through the trees.

CHAPTER XX.

Haunted Hollow.

Rizpah went on for some time in silence, putting aside the sweeping branches and trailing vines that barred the path as though they were but cobwebs in her way.

So swift and noiseless was her step that she seemed to flit, rather than walk, through the shadowy-green vistas, that appeared to the doctor to stretch before and around her in endless labyrinths.

Indeed, more than once, it occurred to him that this strange old creature was conducting him personally by an intricate way, so that it would be impossible for him to retrace his steps.

The shadows were lengthening perceptibly, and the sun was already far down in the west, when she paused, and, turning around, waited for him to reach her side.

They were on the brink of the precipitous ravine known as the Haunted Hollow, and, parting the undergrowth, that grew here rank and thick, Rizpah displayed a steep, narrow path, that led down into the darkly-shadowed depths below.

"Swear," she said, holding her hand up toward the setting sun—"swear you will not betray the secret I am going to reveal to you. Swear it by the memory of Sybil Lee!"

"My good woman, I never swear," answered the doctor, calmly.

He was beginning to suspect there might, after all, be method in Rizpah's madness, and he put himself mentally on guard.

"If I can help you, or any one one that is in pain or peril, I am ready to do it. My business is with suffering, not with crime. The worst villain in the world would be safe in my hands, as long as he needed my services as a [illegible]"

"Are you a friend of Robert Clive?" she asked him abruptly.

"I am neither friend nor foe to any one," said the old doctor, [illegible] "I am bound by no ties of kinship or friendship. [illegible]"

"Enough," said Rizpah, with her ghastly smile. "If you are not his friend, I can trust you. [illegible]"

She turned again, and proceeded swiftly, though more [illegible]

The doctor followed her as well as his stiffer limbs would permit, though the way was steep and difficult enough to have made him at any other time heartily anathematize his folly. But his interest now was thoroughly aroused, and he determined to follow this weird old creature, let her lead him where she might.

At last they reached the bottom of the Hollow, through whose gloomy shadows a little stream brawled noisily over its stony bed.

The path was easier here, and Rizpah seemed to glide through the long grass and rank weeds without bending a blade or twig.

She still had the quick, elastic tread of the daughters of the forest; and the old doctor looked after her and wondered, in spite of all his practical philosophy, if she was indeed a creature of earth, or some of those eerie beings with whom German legends people the shadowy solitude of forests like these.

Now the little stream widened, and in the deepest shadow was spanned by a rude bridge, consisting of one moss-grown log.

With the caution of three-score, the doctor hesitated before trusting his feeble limbs to so frail a support; but Rizpah, turning around, held out her long, talon-like fingers to him.

"Do not fear," she said; "the log is strong, and my arm can balance both of us."

And, walking sideways over the rough bridge, she guided the doctor safely and surely over; then, stooping down, before he was aware of her purpose, she slipped the log from its resting place, and it fell heavily into the water.

"Why have you done that?" asked the doctor, quickly. "Do you mean to keep me a prisoner here?"

"There are two roads to every door," answered Rizpah, composedly; "but they are fools who leave the ways open and the gates unbarred, when a treasure lies within. Come, Harry Bond," she added, in a gentler tone, "you are as safe here—aye, safer than you would be in the robber's castle that crowns yon hill. You are huntsman enough to know that you have naught to fear from a wounded foe."

They had reached the entrance of the of the Witches' Cave as she spoke, and pushing aside the deerskin mat that served to screen the rude doorway, the old woman led her companion into the hut where she had, some ten days before, met Sybil.

A few embers smouldered on the flat stone that served for a hearth; the huge stalactite flung its lurid gleam upon the strange abode.

There was no one visible, but a hoarse sound came from some hidden recess, as of a strong man struggling with grief, that he could not entirely control.

The expression of Rizpah's face changed utterly as the sound reached her ear. A strange softness crept over her withered features, and her harsh voice turned itself almost into tenderness as she whispered:

"My boy—my poor, poor boy! This day has made him again a child!"

And motioning the doctor to follow her, quietly, Rizpah lifted another curtain that hung at the further extremity of the hut, and they entered a close, narrow, dark passage, that seemed to lead into the very bowels of the earth, and which was terminated by an iron door.

This the old woman touched in a very peculiar way, and it flew open noiselessly, revealing to her amazed companion a wide, vaulted apartment, furnished with a rude attempt at comfort.

A silver lamp swung from the ceiling, and its mellow luster revealed the bright Persian rug that concealed the unsightly earthen floor, the old-fashioned chairs and tables scattered around, a rack, with its choice array of fowling pieces, and last, though not least important of all—for it was the first sight that riveted the doctor's gaze—the low iron couch in the corner, on whose snowy pillows reclined a golden-haired head that he recognized at once.

The lost one he had so vainly searched for was found at last. Hopelessly, indeed, might Herbert Clive and his companions scour every nook and glen of Clive Forest, while the gem for which they sought was buried here.

For a moment the cool, philosophical doctor was literally speechless with amazement.

Aye, it was Sybil, white and still as a broken lily—so white and still that the old man thought, at first, it was the pallor and stillness of death. And, close beside her, with his face buried in the silken coverlet, and his mighty form convulsed in agonies of stormy grief, knelt a dark-haired, dark-browed man, who, absorbed in his own anguish, seemed neither to hear nor heed the newcomer's approach, until Rizpah, laying her hand gently on his shoulder, whispered:

"Did I not tell you I would bring him? The doctor is here."

"Here—the doctor here?"—and the wretched man sprang wildly to his feet. "Oh, then, there is hope, hope, hope! Tell me there is hope? She will—she must—she shall live! My darling one, my flower, my lily-bud! Great God! is your curse on me forever and forever, that my hand, my mad, murderous hand—should lay her low? Look at her!" He caught the doctor's arm, and drew him close to the couch. "Tell me, quick, quick! Is there hope? Quick—for longer suspense will madden me, indeed! Tell me quickly; but yet, weigh your words wisely, for she is my all—my all!"

The doctor laid his hand upon the delicate wrist, bent his head to the gentle heart, listened gravely, thought fully ere he said:

"She lives yet—she lives; and while there is life it is not for man to say there is no hope."

"Bless you for these words!" said this impetuous being, wringing the doctor's hand in his vice-like grip. "Bless you—bless you, a thousand times! Save her—only save her—and you shall call every dollar I have in the world your own! Nay, nay, though how can I weigh paltry gold with her sweet life? Save her, and I will be your serf, your bondsman, your slave, forever!"

"How—where was she wounded?" asked the doctor, moved by this impetuous appeal to unusual gentleness. "It was, of course, accidental."

"Accident? No, no! Curses on this murderous hand!" exclaimed the man, as he bared Sybil's bosom, where the cruel blood-stains seemed to madden him beyond self-restraint. "The bullet was aimed at him—at the man I hated—at the man whose life stood between me and the [illegible] inheritance—the heir of the spoiler, the traitor, Robert Clive. When I saw them together—he with all the world could give [illegible] my darling, my bud, my blossom [illegible] my stormy heart rose in all its fierce power. [illegible]"

NOTES ON SCIENCE

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

A Spigot That Discharges a Quart or Pint as Desired—Balanced Fishing Rod With Reel on End—Decline of the Yellowstone Geysers.

Decline of Yellowstone Geysers.

Prof. E. H. Barbour of the University of Nebraska, after comparing his own observations in 1895 with those in 1899, and collecting the opinions of other visitors to the National Park, expresses the fear that within a decade many of the scenes now most attractive in the wonderful Yellowstone valley will have disappeared. He gives details showing that nearly all the hot springs and geysers have declined in activity. "Old Faithful" geyser still does honor to its name, but the interval between its eruptions, formerly an hour, has increased to 75 or 80 minutes. Meanwhile there seems to be an increase of ebullition in the water of the greatest of all the geysers, the Excelsior, whose outbursts have always been separated by irregular periods, covering years at a stretch, and there is hope that it may be preparing another exhibition of its power.

Shields for Modern Warriors.

Recent experiments at Sheffield, England, suggest the possibility that in the twentieth century shields may once more form an important part of the equipment of an army. Steel shields, three millimeters in thickness and about 150 square inches in area, have been devised, which afford complete protection against bullets fired from the service rifle of 400 yards. The small size of the shield, which weighs only seven pounds, requires that the soldier shall lie prone on the ground in order to be sheltered. Each shield has a loophole for the rifle, and studs at the sides so that a series of them can be linked into a continuous screen. The idea is that by the use of such shields the necessity of digging trenches may often be avoided.

Much-Shaken Japan.

In 1893 the Japanese government appointed an investigating committee on earthquakes. This committee, which has now nearly completed its labors, reports, among other things, that it seems likely that one part or another of Japan will be visited by a destructive earthquake once in every two and a half years. That portion of the land bordering the Japan Sea is seldom disturbed by other than local earthquakes, while the Pacific coast of the country frequently suffers from great shocks originating under the ocean. When a region is shaken by constantly recurring small earthquakes, it appears to be rendered safe against the occurrence of destructive shocks, because the accumulation of stress, in the earth's crust at that point is prevented.

Is There a Planet "Vulcan?"

Among the special observations to be undertaken during the total eclipse of the sun visible in our southern states on May 28th, will be a systematic search, with the aid of photography, for the supposititious planet "Vulcan," revolving around the sun within the orbit of Mercury. It was thought that this planet had been seen during the eclipse of 1878, but later observations failed to confirm the discovery. Under the direction of Professor Pickering of Harvard, and of Professor Langley, independent efforts will be made to catch "Vulcan," if it exists, on photographic plates.

Reel on End of Rod.

By a novel arrangement of parts Taylor Roos of Sodom, N. Y., has produced a fishing rod which is not only better balanced than the ordinary rod, but which permits of a very convenient and ingenious method of reel manipulation. The hand-grip, at the end of which the reel is located, is divided, and within it are arranged the gear wheels and springs for the reel-actuating mechanism. The line extends through the hand-grip to the rod, which is adjustable in it. The reel is spring-actuated, and is provided with brakes for checking its speed, and with means, extending through the handle, for winding up the spring. Pawls prevent the reel from being unwound, unless it is desired to play the fish, when these may be released. The mechanism for automatically winding the reel is all contained in the hand-grip, the divided character of which permits of its being readily applicable [illegible]

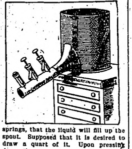
During the arctic summer musk-oxen become very fat from feeding upon the pasturage which grows in every sheltered spot, but in winter their long fasts make them gaunt and thin.

Measuring Spigot.

A measuring draw-off, or spigot, that can be applied to all kinds of liquid receptacles, the invention of William M. Ried, of Bishopsville, S. C., is shown here. It will be seen that the discharge spout is made of goodly proportions, and that it is provided with a number of stops or valves. Well, the spout is made of such dimensions and the stops so located that the liquid contained between the outer stop, or discharge valve, and the next stop exactly equals some predetermined unit, as, for instance, one pint, and that between it and the next stop, a quart. It is evident, then, that as the discharge valve is closed, and the other two valves or plungers are naturally held in an open position by means of springs, that the liquid will fill up the spout. Supposed that it is desired to draw a quart of it. Upon pressing down the quart plunger, just a quart of liquid is held between it and the discharge valve at the end of the spout, so that when the valve is opened that quantity will flow out. This spout could very conveniently be made of glass, so as to assure the customer that he was receiving full measure. The advantage of some such arrangement as this, in saving time, cleanliness and prevention of excess deliveries, will readily be appreciated by all dispensers of fluids.



Modern Bullets.

Sir William McCormac writes in the Lancet that in most cases the damage done by modern bullets, and especially the Mauser, cannot be compared with that inflicted by the projectiles of the needle-guns or the Chassepot rifle, weapons employed in the Franco-German war. A similar result is obtained when comparison is made with the work of the bullets used in our civil war.

The hardened end of a steel bit or chisel broke off in a bore hole at a depth of 990 feet in a place in Germany and this obstruction prevented further boring of the hole because all the diamonds wore away. The following plan was hit upon to remove it: A soft steel bar, five feet in length and two and seven-tenths inches in diameter, was covered by a single winding of India rubber tape and magnetized by a current of a small dynamo driven by a portable engine employed for the work of boring. The steel bar was let down magnetized into the hole and when it reached the bottom the current was switched through the conductor inclosed in the rope for letting down and drawing up. On the first day that this method was employed the piece of steel was drawn up to the surface, so that the boring could be resumed.

Great Fame of a Great Medicine Won by Actual Merit.

The fame of Hood's Sarsaparilla has been won by the good it has done to those who were suffering from disease. Its cures have excited wonder and admiration. It has caused thousands to rejoice in the enjoyment of good health, and it will do you the same good it has done others. It will expel from your blood all impurities; will give you a good appetite and make you strong and vigorous. It is just the medicine to help you now, when your system is in need of a tonic and invigorator.

ALABASTINE

ALABASTINE is the original and only durable wall coating, entirely different from all kalsomines. Ready for use in white or fourteen beautiful tints by adding cold water.

LADIES naturally prefer ALABASTINE for walls and ceilings, because it is pure, clean, durable. Put up in dry powdered form, in five-pound packages, with full directions.

ALL kalsomines are cheap, temporary preparations made from whiting, chalks, clays, etc., and stuck on walls with decaying animal glue. ALABASTINE is not a kalsomine.

BEWARE of the dealer who says he can sell you the "same thing" as ALABASTINE or "something just as good." He is either not posted or is trying to deceive you.

AND IN OFFERING something he has bought cheap and tries to sell on ALABASTINE'S demands, he may not realize the damage you will suffer by a kalsomine on your walls.

SENSIBLE dealers will not buy a lawsuit. Dealers risk one by selling and consumers by using infringement. Alabastine Co. own right to make wall coating to mix with cold water.

THE INTERIOR WALLS of every church and school should be coated only with pure, durable ALABASTINE. It safeguards health. Hundreds of tons used yearly for this work.

IN BUYING ALABASTINE, customers should avoid getting cheap kalsomines under different names. Insist on having our goods in packages and properly labeled.

NUISANCE of wall paper is obviated by ALABASTINE. It can be used on plastered walls, wood ceilings, brick or canvas. A child can brush it on. It does not rub or scale off.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Conserving Manure.

In common with other things that are under control of trusts there has been a sharp advance in the price of chemicals that the farmers use for the manufacture of commercial fertilizers or that the manufacturers use in the making up of commercial grades. This is said to be especially true of the materials that contain nitrogen. It therefore behooves the farmer to look after the fertilizers he has on the farm. By the ordinary manner of handling manure at least half of the nitrogen is lost. One-half of the value of the excrement from our cattle and other stock is in the liquids, which on many farms are not saved at all. Nitrogen especially abounds in the liquids, as is evidenced by the ammonia they throw off. We want again to urge that every farmer take measures to save these valuable products. The farmers that have manure piles that are exposed to all weathers and that have no arrangement to save the liquids should at once stop the waste. It means hundreds of dollars to the pocket of every farmer. Remember that the manure pile is not only assailed by the rain but by the air, and the latter helps to deprive it of its ammonia—a form of nitrogen. It is not enough to prevent manure from leaching and washing, it must be kept from drying out and thus losing its ammonia, or a large part of it.

Horticultural Observations.

A well cultivated orchard on deep rich soil should send down its roots much deeper than an orchard not cultivated. Consequently it should be able to stand cold better than trees in uncultivated orchards. It is true the frost may go deeper, but the root should outstrip the frost.

* * *

Mr. John McDonald of Michigan says: "I learned last year that fruit trees standing in grass winter better than those well cultivated. A great many apple and pear trees died last summer owing to the hard preceding winter." The general conclusion that Mr. McDonald draws from that experience is not well founded. If all our winters were like the one of 1898-9 we would have to stop cultivating our orchards, and we could then state as a general proposition that cultivated trees are liable to be frozen out because the frost can strike in deeper and stay longer. But that winter was one of exceptional severity, and it is doubtful if we will have another like it for 50 years to come. The ground was bare and froze deeply. Probably in some sections the roots of the trees did not thaw out till after the buds and leaves had appeared. But we must figure on ordinary and not on extraordinary years. An orchard planted now may grow to maturity and fail with old age and be succeeded by another orchard that will likewise disappear from old age before we have another winter with conditions identical with the one named. Cultivation is desirable, and we will have to take our chances on the unusual winter.

* * *

S. T. Wilkinson of Branch county, Michigan, sends the following to the State Board of Agriculture: All apple orchards in this vicinity that had been both cultivated and sprayed bore a full crop of fine apples. Most orchards sprayed and not cultivated had a partial crop of fairly good fruit, while but few orchards not sprayed had more than 10 per cent of a crop. With peaches I have experimented some for three years with some varieties in same plot and set at the same time. The first crop in 1898 from the cultivated portion bore 50 per cent of a full crop of fine, large, well formed fruit, while the uncultivated trees bore 20 per cent full crop of second class fruit. Cultivated trees killed by last winter's freezing, 60 per cent; uncultivated killed, 2 per cent. Have reset cultivated portion and cultivated whole plat. All have made good growth and look fine. I think that it pays to cultivate judiciously all peach orchards and sow rye or some other cover crop about August 1. Heel in with dirt all trees under bearing age at least one foot high, as our winters are very likely to be bare of snow, and would both cultivate and spray all apple orchards.

Potash and Starch Potatoes.

The Connecticut Experiment Station made experiments to compare the effect of muriate with that of sulphate of potash on the starch content and yield of tubers. The potatoes were grown on very poor soil which was dressed with 400 pounds nitrate soda, 615 pounds acid phosphate, and 120 pounds of muriate or sulphate of potash. The yield was increased from 43 to 228 bushels of salable tubers per acre. Doubling the potash, applying 240 pounds per acre, increased the yield only twelve bushels per acre over what was produced when 120 pounds were applied. Muriate produced a somewhat greater yield than sulphate, but the tubers contained slightly more water and less starch than when sulphate was used. The evidence in regard to the relative effect of sulphate and muriate of potash on potatoes is somewhat conflicting. Most of the experiments made in this country and Europe show that sulphate produces better tubers with less water and a slightly higher starch content, but the difference is slight. Some German experimenters, Pfeiffer and others, have recently published results of experiments showing that pure muriate has no injurious effect on the tubers, but impurities, noticeably chloride of magnesia, are influential in depressing the proportion of starch.

Treat Oats for Smut.

The sowing of oats without first treating the seed for smut is a cause of great loss to farmers. This loss is far greater than one would suppose without investigation. Investigations in Illinois show that the annual loss to the oat crop in that state is from 5 to 47 per cent, with an average of about ten per cent. This means about 1,500,0000 bushels per year. One reason why the loss to the oat crop from smut is underestimated is that many of the smut heads are whipped off by the wind and so are unnoticed, but at harvest time the stalk that is cut is bare. Then again the stalks affected by smut are frequently dwarfed and do not show among the other heads, even in the sheaf. Then, too, smut sometimes exists without being recognized, it being set down as blight. This loss can be entirely prevented by treating the oats with hot water, dipping the seed oats in water for five minutes at a temperature of 130 to 137 degrees. For this work a kettle is needed as well as two barrels and a thermometer. One barrel should contain warm water and another cold water. The oats should be sacked in quantities of one to one and a half bushels. The kettle should be large enough to hold one bag at a time. After the bag of oats has remained for the specified time in the kettle of hot water it should be lifted out and dipped at once into the barrel of cool water. The barrel of warm water is used to take off the chill from the oats before dipping in the water at 133 degrees. If the day be warm this precaution will not be necessary. The oats can be sown at once by hand without drying.

Branch Ivy.

This is called also hemlock, calf kill, leucothoe, dog laurel. It is a poisonous shrub, evergreen, two to four feet high, with thick, tapering, sharply saw-edged leaves and numerous clusters of small, white, tubular, ill-smelling flowers, which appear in April or May. It grows abundantly, often forming dense thickets along the stream banks in the Alleghany mountains from West Virginia to northern Georgia.

FIG. 21.—Branch ivy (Leucothoe catesbaei): a, flowering branch; b, fruiting capsules—both one-third natural size.

Utilizing Windmills.

In parts of Kansas and Nebraska the farmers are utilizing their windmills to irrigate small patches of ground near their homes for garden purposes. In some cases indeed these patches include not less than ten or twelve acres of ground. There are numerous windmills scattered through the middle west that should be more fully utilized than at present. At some of our experiment stations irrigation has been tried on strawberries and vegetables with very good effect. Even a quarter of acre brought under irrigation should give good results. This will be found to be easily accomplished where the soil is sufficiently clayey to puddle well. The cost should be small, as the water used is surplus water that would otherwise remain unused. In the states near the Great Lakes the effort should prove effective for the reason that the rainfall is usually quite good and the supply of moisture in the ground practically inexhaustible. The soil water is within a few feet of the surface, while in the regions west of the Missouri the soil water is frequently 25 or more feet below the surface, and the problem of lifting becomes great.

Forestry Exhibit in Paris.

The exhibit of the division of forestry for the Paris Exposition is now complete and on the way to Paris. It will be one of the most novel of the government exhibits and will be wholly distinct from the commercial features of lumbering to be shown in another department. The display will be in the form of a hall or pagoda, the walls of which consist of large transparencies illustrating American forest conditions. These walls will be double and illuminated by interior electric lights. The pictures range in size from 3 by 5 feet to 4 by 6 feet. There will be two transparencies 6 by 10 feet, portraying groves of red fir and California big trees, two of the most impressive American trees. A point will be made of the relation of forestry to agriculture, and such subjects as protective forests, the use of trees in preserving water supply, the management of woodlands, etc., are fully illustrated. The extent of the timber resources of the United States will be shown by pictures from all important lumber regions. The distribution of forests will be shown by maps. Twenty of the most important American woods will be represented by sections of trees.

Old-fashioned Molasses Candy.—Pour into a kettle holding a gallon, one quart of molasses. Boil for half an hour over a slow fire, stirring constantly and do not let it burn. Test by dropping a little in cold water. When it hardens quickly and is brittle add half a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda or baking soda free from lumps. Mix quickly and pour when cool enough to handle, rub the hands lightly with butter or dust them with flour to prevent sticking and pull over hook till the desired shade is reached.

Vegetable Coloring.—The green coloring used for ice cream, frosting candies, etc., is called pistachio, but is made from spinach and is perfectly harmless. A red coloring matter is made from beets, and a yellow one from carrots. A few drops of the red will give a delicate shade of pink.

THE BOER SOLDIER.

A HIGH TRIBUTE TO THEIR HUMANITY.

English Correspondent's Graceful Appreciation of Their Kindness—Taken Prisoner and Treated in a Christian Manner While in Their Hands.

H. Hales, a correspondent of the London Daily News, who was wounded and taken prisoner by the Boers, pays a high tribute to the humanity and kindness of the latter. Hales and an Australian named Lambie were endeavoring to escape from a Boer patrol when they were fired upon and both were hit. In describing the affair Hales said:

"Suddenly something touched me on the right temple; it was not like a blow; it was not a shock; for half a second I was conscious. I knew I was hit; knew that the reins had fallen from my nerveless hands; knew that I was lying down upon the horse's back and my head hanging below his throat. Then all the world went out in one mad whirl. Earth and heaven seemed to meet as if by magic. My horse seemed to rise with me, not to fall and then—chaos.

"When next I knew I was still on this planet I found myself in the saddle again, riding between two Boers, who were supporting me in the saddle as I swayed from side to side. There was a halt; a man with a kindly face took my head in the hollow of his arm while another poured water down my throat. Then they carried me to a shady spot beneath some shrubbery and laid me gently down. One man bent over me and washed the blood that had dried on my face and then carefully bound up my wounded temple. I began to see things more plainly—a blue sky above me; a group of rough, hardy men, all armed with rifles, around me. I saw that I was a prisoner, and when I tried to move I soon knew I was damaged.

"The same good looking young fellow with the curly beard bent over me again. 'Feel any better now, old fellow?' I stared hard at the speaker, for he spoke like an Englishman and a well-educated fellow. 'Yes, I'm better. I am a prisoner, ain't I?' 'Yes.' 'Are you an Englishman?' I asked. He laughed. 'Not I,' he said. 'I'm a Boer born and bred, and I am the man who bowled you over. What on earth made you do such a fool's trick as to try and ride from our rifles at that distance?' 'Didn't think I was welcome in these parts.' 'Don't make a jest of it, man,' the Boer said, gravely; 'rather thank God you are a living man this moment. It was His hand that saved you; nothing else could have done so.' He spoke reverently; there was no cant in the sentiment he uttered—his face was too open, too manly, too fearless, for hypocrisy. 'How long is it since I was knocked over?' 'About three hours.' 'Is my comrade dead?' 'Quite dead,' the Boer replied; 'death came instantly to him; he was shot through the brain.' 'Poor beggar,' I muttered; 'and he'll have to rot on the open veldt, I suppose?'

"The Boer leader's face flushed angrily. 'Do you take us for savages?' he asked. 'Rest easy; your friend will get decent burial. What was his rank?' 'War correspondent.' 'And your own?' 'War correspondent, also. My papers are in my pocket, somewhere.' 'Sir,' said the Boer leader, 'you dress exactly like two British officers; you ride out with a fighting party; you try to ride off at a gallop under the very muzzles of our rifles when we tell you to surrender. You can blame no one but yourselves for this day's work.' 'I blame no man; I played the game and am paying the penalty.'"

Mr. Hales adds: "I have made it my business to get about among the private soldiers to question them concerning the treatment they have received since the moment the Mauser rifles tumbled them over, and I say emphatically that in every instance our countrymen declare they have been grandly treated. Not by the hospital nurses only; not by the officials alone, but by the very men whom they were fighting."

Beats the Yerkes Telescope.

Up to the present time Chicago has been able to boast the largest telescope in the world—that at the Yerkes observatory at Lake Geneva. But the monster telescope at the Paris exposition, which will bring the moon within thirty-six miles, is three times the length of the Yerkes telescope. It is 197 feet long, 5 feet in diameter and weighs twenty-one tons. The lenses, the largest in existence, measure over forty-nine inches in diameter and weigh 1,320 pounds. It is because of the difficulty in the way of making these monster lenses that the world has waited until the close of the nineteenth century for such an instrument. The process of making big lenses has for nearly two centuries been a most jealously guarded monopoly of Paris. There is only one manufacturer of them in the world, M. Mantois, the direct successor of Guinaux, who, it is claimed, invented the process at the beginning of the present century.

Shrewd Strategy of an Eagle.

A strange story comes from Susquehanna county, Pa. According to a veracious correspondent three wildcats at Fiddle Lake attacked a big eagle, which is wintering among the trees in a hemlock grove near the lake. Although attacked from three points, the bird gallantly held its own and slew two of the wildcats. This is the way he did it: Singling out one of the cats the eagle grasped it tightly by the neck, burying his talons deep in the flesh; then, rising almost perpendicularly for about 100 feet, allowed his prisoner to drop on a ledge of rocks. Two falls killed the first victim, but three were required to get away with the second. The survivor, seeing the fate of his companions, flew down the mountain side.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

THE WORM TURNED.

Story of a Man Who Cultivated a Nice Disposition.

"Do you see that woman going out?" said the man in the dry goods house whose business it is to make things "all right" with dissatisfied customers. "She's only one of 'em. I have a score or more every day. She's kicking about a dress. We've altered it twice, and she still thinks it doesn't quite fit her in the back. It's a hard job to look pleasant and be perennially agreeable, and I never knew but one man who could do it. He was the 'complaint man' in a big store—a friend of mine—and he held the place for twenty years. He never failed to say the right thing and was the most perfect 'jolly' that ever was. He knew how to compliment a woman as to form and complexion in a way that never was equaled. His smile was the envy of all the salesmen in the place. It had a winning sweetness about it that was simply irresistible and never failed to vanquish the most desperate kicker. One day an uncle of my friend died and left him $40,000. A few moments after the news reached my friend an old patron of the store came in—a woman who for years had been noted as a kicker, but whom it had been my friend's duty and pleasure to make satisfied with her purchases. She had a bonnet in her hand and was kicking about the shape, the trimmings and everything in a way that was calculated to carry terror to the stoutest heart. 'So,' said my friend, 'you don't like this bonnet. You don't like anything about it. Well, I don't blame you. It don't suit you in any way, and it can't be made to suit you. Of course it can't. And there's no bonnet on earth that can be made to suit such a pig-faced, disagreeable woman as you are, anyway.' He had repressed his natural feeling for twenty years, but the worm that had been trodden upon through two decades turned at last. He then put on his hat, and the place that had known him so long knew him no more forever."—Ex.

PICTURESQUE CORFU.

Quaint Legends in the Pretty Ionian Isle.

Corfu is one of the most charming of the Ionian isles. Notwithstanding its surroundings the inhabitants are neither good sailors nor fishermen, but given to athletic sports and target shooting, says the New York Tribune. Superstitions and legends abound and a long rock is always shown to strangers with the explanation that it is the ship of Ulysses turned to stone by Neptune as it was returning from Ithaca. With a climate equal to that of Sicily and much like that of Malta, the town of Corfu is popular as a winter resort. Careless as the natives are about gathering the olives, these still yield a goodly quantity of oil, which, beside salt, is their only export. A traveler marvels to find the most primitive appliances still in use. The ovens are mere domes of brick or clay and on their doors, which are only rough stones, a red cross is painted. This same sign is found on many of the doors of the houses. Oil lamps of brass and silver, or of bronze with open reservoir and in the most fantastic and graceful shapes, are still in common use. Bread is baked and clothes are washed in the fashion of a hundred years ago, yet the former is palatable and the latter are redolent with lemon peel and laurel leaves. A pretty sight is a Corfu fete beneath the pale green olive trees. Men and women in picturesque costumes, with graceful movements, wind in and out of the mazes of their national dances, to the music of violins, tambourines and guitars. A Greek funeral is a grewsome sight. The body is carried to the grave in an open coffin, the face being visible to every passer-by. At the house wailers, some of them gifted at improvising, recite in prose or verse the virtues of the dead and the sorrow of the friends.

Trials of Realism.

"Sc—prl—zwm—zlkyqg—hbdhbjmrk-qzzxmx—pst——." The author sat at his desk with the perspiration pouring from his brow like the far-famed falls of Lodore. His matted hair slapped round his head at each movement like a hastily wrung dishcloth. He was writing a realistic novel. The day was warm. It was a dreadful and exhaustive job, but being realistic it had to be done to the life. He started again. "Ggggc—vvwg@c)tNJ!px$vgb—unfortunate wretch that I am!" The author could be distinctly seen melting away under the hot fire of the terrific undertaking. He made another supreme effort. "Kt—kt—kt—kik—kik—tk—tk—tk!!!" "It'll have to do," he soliloquized under his breath. "It's the best I can do unless I compromise with 'Get up!'—but no, never!" He was endeavoring to write on paper the sound made to a horse to accelerate its speed. Such—such are the trials of realism!—Stray Stories.

Smallest Revolver Ever Made.

Stephen M. Van Allen of Jamaica, an expert shot with rifle or revolver, has received as a gift the smallest revolver ever made. It is only an inch long and is perfect in every detail. It is self-acting and the chambers hold six cartridges. The bullets are about the size of the head of a large pin. The cartridges possess sufficient power to send the bullets through a half-inch pine board. Mr. Van Allen has tested the little weapon and found it accurate. It was given to him by a friend who obtained it abroad.—New York Sun.

Texas Street Car Decision.

An ordinance requiring any person "riding or driving" on a street "to check up, or even halt, if necessary," on approaching a crossing, so as not to obstruct, hinder or endanger pedestrians, is held, in Citizens' R. Co. vs. Ford (Tex.), 46 L. R. A. 457, to have no application to a street car operated by electricity.

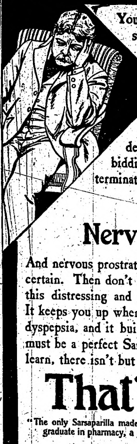
The only way to meet the influence of Satan is by prayer to God.—Rev. D. A. Blose, Congregationalist, Akron, Ohio.



OVERWORK

You know all about it. You are a perfect slave to your work. It's rush through the day and worry through the night. There's no time to eat and no time to sleep. Already you have nervous dyspepsia, nervous sick headache, and neuralgia. Your food distresses you. You suffer from terrible depression. The outlook is dark and forbidding. You feel sure there is but one termination to this—

That s Nervous Prostration

And nervous prostration is something you don't want, that's certain. Then don't have it. A perfect Sarsaparilla prevents this distressing and dangerous disease, and it cures it, also. It keeps you up when especially pressed with work. It cures dyspepsia, and it builds up exhausted nerve tissue. But it must be a perfect Sarsaparilla to do this. So far as we can learn, there isn't but one in the world, and

That's AYER'S

"The only Sarsaparilla made under the personal supervision of three graduates: a graduate in pharmacy, a graduate in chemistry, and a graduate in medicine."

"I first used Ayer's Sarsaparilla in the fall of 1848. I came out of the Mexican War run down in health and badly used up. It did me so much good then that I have always taken it every spring as a blood-purifying medicine. I attribute my robust health at 78 to the use of your Sarsaparilla every spring."—S. T. Jones, Wichita, Kans., March 29, 1900.

BILE IN THE BLOOD

No matter how pleasant your surroundings, health, good health, is the foundation for enjoyment. Bowel trouble causes more aches and pains than all other diseases together, and when you get a good dose of bilious bile coursing through the blood life's a hell on earth. Millions of people are doctoring for chronic ailments that started with bad bowels, and they will never get better till the bowels are right. You know how it is—you neglect—get irregular—first suffer with a slight headache—bad taste in the mouth mornings, and general "all gone" feeling during the day—keep on going from bad to worse untill the suffering becomes awful, life loses its charms, and there is many a one that has been driven to suicidal relief. Educate your bowels with CASCARETS. Don't neglect the slightest irregularity. See that you have one natural, easy movement each day. CASCARETS tone the bowels—make them strong—and after you have used them once you will wonder why it is that you have ever been without them. You will find all your other disorders commence to get better at once, and soon you will be well by taking

THE END OF THE WAR

WAR CORRESPONDENTS SAY IT IS IN SIGHT.

They Picture the Boers as Mostly Demoralized by Lord Roberts' Unexpected Advance—Kroonstad Occupied by Lord Roberts and His Forces—Steyn and His Government Move to Lindley—Practically No Fighting at Kroonstad—Boer Army Again Successfully Eludes the British.

London, May 15.—"The war is practically over," says the Daily Chronicle's Kroonstad correspondent, and, in less definite terms, this is the view to be gathered from all the correspondents. They picture the Boers as mostly demoralized and disheartened by Lord Roberts' unexpected rapid advance and by his facile turning of the carefully prepared positions of the Boers. Lord Roberts has entered Kroonstad, President Steyn and the Orange Free State government having fled to Lindsey, some sixty or seventy miles to the east, and the Boer army retiring to the Vaal river. The news of the capture of Kroonstad was received at the war office Saturday in a dispatch from Lord Roberts. There was practically no fighting, and there are few details to give respecting the Occupation of Kroonstad.

The correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: "The union jack was hoisted in the market place by Mrs. Lockhead, the American wife of a Scotchman. Most of the horses of the Boers are in a wretched condition, but President Kruger declares he will continue the war."

It appears that the Boers at Kroonstad had been reinforced by 3,000 men from Natal last Friday, and that altogether 10,000 men, with twenty guns, trekked from Kroonstad on the approach of Lord Roberts. The Boers made an ineffectual stand at Boschrand and had elaborate intrenchments in front of Kroonstad, which offered great facilities for a rear guard action. Their only anxiety, however, appears to have been to get away safely with all their guns and convoys, which again they have successfully accomplished. The few stores they were unable to carry they burned. President Steyn is represented as having been frantic with rage and as having kicked and cuffed the burghers after vainly imploring them to continue the fight. Lord Roberts, after a march, which is regarded as worthy of being ranked with to Khandhar, has thus covered another stage of his campaign, a stage which, although successful and without the mistakes and misfortunes which characterized the earlier stages, leaves the Boer forces quite intact, not having lost a gun and having lost very few men. Experiences have taught the correspondents to be chary of reports of Boer demoralization. The Times correspondent says "signs point to a Boer military breakdown, but after experience we cannot accept the reports of demoralization without reserve. The game of war must be played out to the end."

Lindley, the new Free State capital, is forty-five miles southeast of Kroonstad, half-way to Bethlehem, and was probably selected as a convenient rendezvous of the commandoes now retiring before Gen. Brabant and Gen. Rundle in the Thaba N'Chu district. Brabant has occupied Hoepelook, halfway on the road from Thaba N'Chu to Ladybrand. There is not a word of news regarding Gen. Buller's movements or from the far western side. Nothing is known of the progress of the Mafeking relief column.

All Must Assist in the Defense.

London, May 15. — The Lourenzo Marques correspondent of the Times, telegraphing Sunday, says: "It is rumored that the Transvaal raad in secret session has resolved to order all residents, irrespective of nationality, to assist in the defense of the republic, in accordance with the terms of the amended military laws. The Boers recognize that they are now in the last extremity and all sorts and conditions of men are being commandered. The merchants here have protested against the stoppage of a consignment of clothing and corned beef, of which the latter was purchased in America. United States Consul Stanley Hollis, whose sympathies are notorious, is said to have remonstrated against what he called "interference with American trade."

Heavy Fighting in Natal.

London, May 15.—The Standard publishes the following from Durban, dated Sunday: "There are persistent rumors here of heavy fighting in Natal. A Red Cross train left last night for the north.

DECLARED A CLEAN PORT.

Vessels From Honolulu Will Not Be Quarantined Hereafter.

San Francisco, May 15—The steamer American Maru, from Hongkong, via Honolulu, brings advices that Honolulu was officially declared a clean port, April 30. The transport Hancock, with the Philippine commission on board, sailed for Manila April 28.

FREIGHT TRAINS COLLIDE.

Fireman Killed in an Accident in State of Pennsylvania.

Scranton, Pa., May 15. — By a collision of freight trains on the Lackawanna railroad near this city William Eschenback, a fireman of one of the trains, was killed. The two engineers and other fireman escaped unhurt.

WILL FILL OUT HIS TERM.

Gov. Roosevelt Will Not Retire to Hold Office in the Philippines.

New York, May 15. — Senator Platt, upon his arrival in this city from Washington, was asked:

"Do the Washington rumors about Gov. Roosevelt mean that he is willing to retire from the governorship of New York in order to become governor General of the Philippines?"

"Not at all," replied Senator Platt. "Gov. Roosevelt is going to fill out this term and another one."

REBEL LOSS HEAVY.

Towns Are Occupied by American Troops.

Manila, May 15. — The towns of Hilongos and Maasin, island of Leyte, have been occupied by troops of the Forty-third volunteer infantry. The insurgents opposed the landing of the Americans and sustained heavy losses. The Americans had three casualties.

The latest rumor of an outbreak in Manila among the natives, which was in circulation last week, was seriously discussed by some of the local papers and attracted more general attention than has been usual with this sort of thing. As a matter of fact many Filipinos did leave their American employers with the apparent intention of joining some such movement. Their action, taken in connection with the arrest of certain natives charged with carrying concealed weapons and the dispersal of several suspicious gatherings, gave color to the reports. The officials have been reticent in the matter, but are not inclined to believe a rising imminent. They believe the Filipinos are lacking in courage and say they feared to attempt a demonstration at Gen. Lawton's funeral, although they had made careful preparations and many insurgents had come to Manila for this express purpose. A paper found among the correspondence of Gen. Pantaleon Garcia asserts that the United States for the Filipinos and that, therefore, all Filipinos who are working for Americans must leave their employ immediately or suffer the penalty of treason. One report is that the Filipino junta is endeavoring to initiate an outbreak in order to show the civil commission that the insurrection is still alive. It does not seem probable that the peace proposals which Senor Buencamino, at one time a member of the so-called Filipino government, has drawn up for submission to Aguinaldo and the other insurgent leaders, will have much weight with the Filipinos. Buencamino's reputation, gained in former wars, is that of a man who hurries to get on the winning side. He was in disfavor with the Filipinos, even before the collapse of their governmen owing to a widespread suspicion of his loyalty to his colleagues.

Last week Gen. MacArthur received a large number of officials, consular officers and representatives of commercial bodies. To Lieut. Col. Crowder, his military secretary, he will assign many duties heretofore devolving upon the governor general. MacArthur's policy seems to be to avoid decentralization. He will give to his staff matters of detail and will devote himself largely to questions of policy.

MAN HUNT IN KANSAS.

Hundreds of Men in Pursuit of Alleged Robbers.

Emporia, Kan., May 15.—Hundreds of men on foot, on horseback and in all kinds of vehicles are scouring Neosho valley for two alleged bank robbers, James Murphy and E. F. Estell, who, Saturday night, added murder to their crime by killing Deputy Marshal Edward Roberts of Dunlap, a member of a party that had been pursuing the robbers for several days. On May 9 Murphy and Estell, it is alleged, robbed a bank at Marysville, Kan., and since then a posse of deputies have pursued the robbers, traveling a distance of 150 miles. About midnight Saturday night the robbers were run onto accidentally in the dark by Roberts and a companion who had become separated from the pursuing party. Before they recognized the robbers one of the latter had emptied both barrels of his shotgun into Roberts, killing him instantly. Roberts was within about six feet of the robbers and the shot tore a big hole in his chest. The robbers again fled. Later they stole ex-Mayor Sargent's horse and buggy and started south. Roberts was well known in Emporia and the news of his tragic death caused great excitement. Numerous posses were soon formed and began scouring the country. About 6 o'clock last night the robbers had been traced to within three miles of Emporia. Lynching will surely follow their capture.

TOWN IN MOB'S HANDS.

Sheriff Called Upon to Suppress a Riot.

Pittsburg, May 15.—A mob of men and boys numbering about 2,000, has had possession of Turtle Creek, a small town about eight miles east of here all evening and at midnight last night the sheriff was called upon to suppress the riot. The trouble was precipitated by the board of health trying to take possession of an abandoned school building of the town for a pest house. The citizens objected to this and when the board made preparations for the removal of the six cases of smallpox in the town to the school house last evening they were met by the mob, who refused to allow them to proceed. Twenty-five special officers were sworn in, but could do nothing, and the volunteer fire department was called out. The firemen found a full-fledged riot in progress, but succeeded in dispersing the rioters by turning the hose on them. The crowd rallied, however, cut the hose, pelted the firemen and beat them with sticks until they retreated. A number of the firemen were badly cut and bruised, but none seriously hurt.

Killed His Friend.

Chicago, May 15.—Charles E. Gilbert, night manager at De Jonghes' restaurant, 45 Monroe street, shot and fatally wounded Romain A. Kelly, his friend and roommate, at their room, 1843 Wabash avenue, yesterday. Kelly died a few hours later. Gilbert had promised Kelly a position in the restaurant as soon as there was a vacancy. Kelly, however, was unwilling to wait, and a quarrel ensued.

News of the Northwest

FIGHTING FOREST FIRES.

Light Rain Fails to Extinguish the Flames—Trying to Save Property.

Marinette, Wis., May 10.—The rain was not heavy enough to extinguish the forest fires, and they are still raging all over this part of the country. Supt. Stephenson, of the boom company returned yesterday from Norway, Mich. He says that everybody in the woods there is fighting fires and the big farm of the Menominee River Lumber company was in great danger. On account of the dense clouds of smoke hanging over Green bay navigation is dangerous and fog whistles are all blowing. This city is enveloped in smoke and the fires seem to be even worse than they were a few days ago. The Ludington company has had considerable standing timber burned.

RAIN IN JIM RIVER VALLEY.

Portion of South Dakota Blessed With Moisture.

Huron, S. D., May 10.—More than an inch of rain fell throughout the Jim river Valley Sunday night and Monday; the ground is thoroughly soaked and crops are making rapid progress. Plowing and corn planting is the order everywhere, and the acreage to corn this season is likely to be largely in excess of former years. There is also a large acreage sown to spelts, the new food grain; the wheat acreage is smaller than last year, while the flax acreage gives promise of being the greatest for a number of years. Pastures are green and the grass is thick and abundant. Altogether the outlook is decidely brilliant.

CYCLONE IN MICHIGAN.

Considerable Damage Done at Wellsville.

Blissfield, Mich., May 10.—Wellsville, four miles north of here, was visited by a cyclone yesterday afternoon. The storm split two miles west of here and the part going north struck Burton Rauch's general store, leaving it a heap of ruins. Mrs. Rauch was seriously injured. Burton Rauch's leg was broken and their five-year-old child was severely injured. Outbuildings were reduced to kindling wood. Dr. Dumbold was summoned. The storm approached too suddenly for preparations.

Four Persons Killed.

Cheyenne, Wyo., May 10. — One of the worst wrecks which has occurred in Wyoming in recent years took place on O'Neill side track, sixteen miles west of Rawlins on the Union Pacific yesterday when an east-bound fast freight drawn by two locomotives dashed through an open switch and down a high embankment. Four persons were killed.

One Cup of Water.

Victoria, B. C., May 10.—The schooner Triumph, just arrived, told of a narrow escape from death by starvation of the crew of the sealer Arietis. She had lost all her provisions and the men had only a cupful of water left when another schooner, seeing her signal of distress, came to her rescue.

New Scale Granted.

La Crosse, Wis., May 10.—The new scale of wages, at 35 cents per hour, presented to the master plumbers by the journeymen, was agreed to, but their demand for an eight-hour work day with nine hours' pay was not allowed. The new deal seems to give satisfaction to all concerned.

THE GOAT WAS LOADED.

Secret Society Sued for Damages Resulting From Horse Play.

Clinton, Iowa, May 13.—Dr. W. C. Sensibaugh of Port Byron, Ill., has brought suit against the Fraternal Tribunes, a fraternal insurance society with a large membership in Illinois and Iowa, for $50,000 damages. While being initiated into the mysteries of the Fraternal Tribunes at Port Byron the doctor came in contact with live wires from a battery operated by some of the members and received such a shock that for a number of days his life was despaired of. He rallied and was able to be out, although his right side was practically useless. He suffered a relapse and it was again thought that he could not recover. But he got better and has been able to practice his profession, but the right side has never recovered and the doctor thinks the injury permanent.

BUTLER AGAIN CHAIRMAN.

Populist National Committee Completes Organization.

Sioux Falls, S. D., May 13. — The Populist national committee met yesterday and organized by the election of the following officers: Chairman, Senator Marion Butler, North Carolina; vice chairman, J. H. Edmiston, Nebraska; treasurer, W. D. Washburn, Massachusetts; secretary, J. A. Edgerton, Colorado. The new executive committee is as follows: Gen. J. B. Weaver, Iowa; Senator William V. Allen, Nebraska; J. W. Breidenthal, Nebraska; Eugene Smith, Chicago; E. V. Way, Arizona; T. Tracy, Texas; Robert Schilling, Wisconsin; Maj. Bowler, Minnesota; Dr. C. T. Taylor, Pennsylvania.

FOUND VALUABLE PEARL.

Wisconsin Man, While "Clamming," Digs Up a $3,000 Jewel.

Clinton, Iowa, May 13.—The largest and most valuable pearl known to be in existence was found recently by John Haymon at Lynxville, Wis. It weighs 120 grains, and Haymond has been offered $3,000 for it, but refuses to part with the jewel which, he says, is worth more money. Haymond was an engineer on the Milwaukee road for a number of years, but for the past twelve months has been digging clams along the Mississippi river. He says he will take the pearl, with several others of value which he has found while "clamming" to the Paris exposition.

HOTEL IN RUINS.

Personal Effects of the Boarders Are Destroyed.

Grand Forks, N. D., May 13.—I. J. Chevallier's hotel and sample room at Bathgate burned last evening, together with some outbuildings. No one knows how the fire started, and it burst out so suddenly and spread so rapidly that nothing could be saved. All the contents of the building were burned, including the personal effects of the boarders. Loss, $15,000; insurance about $6,000.

SALOONS MUST CLOSE.

Duluth People Must Go to Superior for Drinks on Sunday.

Duluth, Minn., May 13.—As a result of the grand jury report Mayor Hugo announces that the law must hereafter be observed to the letter, and that the saloons must be closed tight on Sunday. This is something that Duluth has not known since 1890 and 1891. The result will probably be now as it was then, that the saloons of Superior will do an enormous business on Sunday.

Montevideo's Rural Free Delivery.

Montevideo, Minn., May 13. — The first rural free mail delivery in this part of the state will go into effect from here next week. The route runs east to the Black Oak creamery three and one-half miles and then runs north to the Central creamery, a distance of ten miles, thence west one mile, returning home via the Benson road. A population of about 500 will be reached. Walter Cosgriff is to be carrier.

Scofield Not a Candidate.

Madison, Wis., May 13.—Gov. Scofield, who has been talked of considerably as a possible candidate for the vice-presidency, in an interview yesterday not only sates that he is not a candidate, but strongly favors Henry C. Payne of Milwaukee, Wisconsin's representative on the Republican national committee, as the right man for McKinley's running mate.

J. Leslie Arrested.

Flandreau, S. D., May 13.—J. Leslie Thompson of Madison, a gentleman of more or less prominence in the state, was arrested here on the charge of disposing of chattel mortgaged property. Mr. Thompson came to this place yesterday morning with several head of horses on his way to Minnesota. An attempt is being made to settle the matter amicably.

Beet Sugar Factories.

Clear Lake, Iowa, May 13. — At a meeting of the Cerro Gordo County Beet Sugar company held last night in the Cerro Gordo State bank C. H. McNider of Mason City was elected president. The object of the company is to erect and operate beet sugar factories in this county. It was decided to raise twelve acres of beets this years as an experiment.

Street Fair for Winona.

Winona, Minn., May 13. — The directors of the Street Fair association have met with such financial encouragement that they have decided to go ahead with the enterprise, and have appointed committees to take the matter in charge. The fair will be held on Sept. 11, 12, 13 and 14.

Body of Unknown Man Found.

Clinton, Iowa, May 15. — The body of an unknown man aged about thirty-five years, was found on a log raft in the river here. The remains had been in the river several days. An investigation revealed nothing by which the man could be identified. In his pockets was a silver watch, a dollar in silver and some keys. He was fairly well dressed.

Chicago, May 15.—Work of the Chicago directory enumerators for 1900 almost completed shows that the population of Chicago is not less than 2,001,000.

STORM CAUSES THREE DEATHS.

Severe Electrical Storm Strikes St. Paul.

St. Paul, May 15.—This city was last evening visited by a severe wind and thunder storm. Three persons were killed, two of the deaths being caused by lightning. Patrick Sexton, head of the wholesale cigar firm of Sexton & O'Connor, while driving in from Lake Como with his children was struck by a portion of the sidewalk which was caught by the wind and hurled against his buggy. He was instantly killed. His children received very severe injuries. Lightning struck St. Luke's Catholic church during services. The chimney crashed through the roof and struck Fanny Muller, a servant girl who was kneeling in prayer. She was injured so badly that she died an hour afterward. A farmer residing on the Stillwater road was struck by lightning and instantly killed while sitting on his front porch watching the storm. Much minor damage was done to property.

HURLED TO HIS DEATH.

A Frightful Accident Occurs on the Como-Interurban Line.

St. Paul, May 15.—Michael Klinghamer better known as "Mick," living on Rice street, near McCann's lake, St. Paul, was instantly killed by a Como interurban car at Burgess and Rice streets at 6:25 o'clock Saturday evening. The car was bound for St. Paul. Klinghamer was riding in a buggy and was on his way to a St. Paul foundry to get his son, as was his custom. He did not notice the approach of the car, and before the motorman could bring it to a stop there was a collision. The buggy was smashed to a thousand pieces. Klinghamer's body was picked up a short distance away. A portion of the forehead was torn off, and his brains were scattered along the track.

BIG FIRE AT VERNDALE.

Several Buildings Are Destroyed and a Number of Others Are Damaged.

Verndale, Minn., May 15.—Fire was discovered early yesterday morning in the rear of Gaslin's saloon. The following buildings with their contents were burned: G. W. Gaslin & Co., saloon; Smith Bros., warehouse; Dickinson Bros., general merchandise; the Masons, Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen lost all paraphernalia. Dr. Rounds lost his library and medical instruments. Buildings damaged: Wadena County bank; Dr. Reid, front; Henry Calvert, flour and feed; R. J. Lenerville, barber shop; Smith Bros., general merchandise; Ben Lalone, saloon; Dr. Morrell, drug store. Total loss, $30,000.

TRAGEDY IN BUTTE.

A Well Known Athlete Shoots Two People and Commits Suicide.

Butte, Mont., May 15. — Charles Paustein, a well known athlete, shot and killed Alexander Tate, manager of a butchering concern; shot and seriously wounded Mrs. Tate and then committed suicide. Paustein's wife had just secured a divorce on account of cruelty. Paustein charged Tate with being responsible for the separation of himself and wife.

Mennonite Colony.

Sioux Falls, S. D., May 15.—A new Mennonite colony to be established near Scotland will consist of fourteen families. They will not do much building this season, but next season will put up new buildings and probably increase the size of the colony. They have ordered some new machinery of the latest improved pattern for a flouring mill they have purchased, and expect to have it repaired and running in about five weeks.

Rescued Two Boys From Lake.

Kenosha, Wis., May 15.—The Kenosha life saving crew rescued from the lake two boys giving their names as Arnold Welsung and Frank Mischo. They had been sailing in the little yacht Pastime and had been driven three miles out into the lake by adverse winds. When the crew reached them the boys were exhausted and the little vessel was rapidly filling with water.

A Fatal Leap.

Fergus Falls, Minn., May 15.—Victor, the four-year-old son of Hon. O. N. Haugad, was drowned in a mill pond at Pelican Rapids. He was going fishing with some boys and climbed into a boat supposed to have been tied to the shore, but it floated out into the stream. He became frightened and jumped out and was drowned.

For Minnesota Firemen.

Winona, Minn., May 15.—President W. C. Norton, of the State Fireman's association, which will meet in convention here on June 12, 13 and 14, announces the programme. There will be present between 300 and 500 delegates, and excursions will be run into the city from surrounding towns on all the roads each day of the convention.

Reward Divided.

Moorhead, Minn., May 15.—The long contest over the reward for the arrest of the Great Northern train robbers has been settled. The several claimants received the following amounts: E. C. Tupper, $1,500; "Red" McCarthy, $1,500; Thomas L. Murphy, $1,400, and Ben Eisland, $400.

Shot During a Quarrel.

Marinette, Wis., May 15. — William Maher, woodsman, was mysteriously shot near Pembine and will die. He refuses to say how he was wounded, but it is supposed he was shot during a quarrel.

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate.

Washington, May 8.—At yesterday's session of the senate Mr. Teller delivered a speech in which he strongly urged the senate to extend their sympathy to the Boers in their struggle with Great Britain. The adoption of his resolution of sympathy, he maintained, could not be considered as an unfriendly act by the British government. During the remainder of the session the senate had under consideration the naval appropriation bill. Mr. Chandler's amendment to curtail the increase in the marine corps created some debate and was finally laid on the table, 30 to 14. The bill was not completed. Notice was given that the armor plate provision would be considered in secret session on account of certain facts that were to be called to the senate's attention.

The House.

Yesterday was suspension day in the house and quite a number of bills were passed. The most important were the senate bill to amend the general pension laws, so as to provide for aggregating disabilities under the act of 1890 without regard to service origin and increase the net income a widow may have without destroying her right to a pension from $96 to $250. The purpose of the bill is to modify rulings of the pension office in accordance with the recommendations of the G. A. R. It was passed without a dissenting voice. The bill to increase the appropriation for the national guard from $400,000 to $1,000,000 also was among those passed. Mr. Sulzer of New York attempted to secure action upon his resolution expressing sympathy with the Boers, but was cut off by the speaker.

The House.

Washington, May 9. — Some facts, almost startling in their importance, were laid before the senate yesterday in secret executive session at the conclusion of the regular open session. They related, it is understood, to the invention of a shell by a prominent officer of the United States navy, a shell superior in every essential quality to any now in use either by this or by any other government. The quality of penetration possessed by the shell is said to be so great that no armor now manufactured in the United States or abroad has sufficient resistance to withstand it. The facts, which were in possession of only a few senators were deemed so important that the senate decided to consider them in secret session. Yesterday after the naval bill had been laid aside for the day Mr. Tillman asked for a secret session in that he might explain to the senate why he desired the armor plate matter to be discussed in secret. When the doors were closed he explained that he had been informed that Admiral O'Neill, chief of the bureau of ordnance, had been conducting a series of tests with armor plate at Indian Head, the results of which were very remarkable. He said tests of all sorts of armor, including the Krupp armor, had been made with a view of discovering their effectiveness against a new shell which had been invented by an officer of the navy. No piece of armor submitted to the test, it is understood, was able to withstand the test. The shell which was so effective was not described, indeed the navy department is guarding jealously all details concerning its construction. The argument of Mr. Tillman is that with such a projectile, the details of which would sooner or later will become known to the outside world, it would not be the part of wisdom for congress to enter into contracts to purchase the high-priced armor unless it could be so improved as to resist projectiles of the kind used at Indian Head.

The Senate.

Washington, May 9—The senate yesterday completed consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with the exception of that section relating to armor and armament. This went over for a day, when it will be considered in secret session. During the morning hour a number of minor bills were passed, among them one to reimburse various collectors of internal revenue for internal revenue stamps charged against them but not accounted for. The debate on the naval bill was practically confined to the paragraph providing for the commission of naval cadets. The committee's amendment striking out the provision in the house bill which provides for commissioning cadets after four-year terms in the naval academy, abolishing the two-year preliminary at sea, was carried after some debate.

The House.

The house devoted most of the day to the consideration of private bills recommended from the committee on claims, and ten bills were passed. The most important was one to remit the penalties imposed by the government on the Union Iron Works of San Francisco, the builders of the monitor Monterey, for her failure to make contract speed. Before the consideration of these bills was entered upon the house overruled the action of the ways and means committee in reporting against a resolution calling upon the secretary of the treasury for information regarding the materials used in the manufacture of oleomargarine, which is on file in the internal revenue office. The majority of the committee contended that this information could not be furnished under the revised statutes and that it would betray trade secrets, but the resolution was adopted. This is preliminary to the opening of the fight for the Grout bill in the committee on agriculture.

The Senate.

Washington, May 10. — Practically the entire session of the senate yesterday was devoted to the consideration of that section of the naval appropriation bill relating to armor and armaments. The debate largely hinged upon the proposition that the government should erect an armor plant of its own. Senator Tillman submitted an amendment limiting the price to be paid for armor to $300 per ton and providing also that the government should erect a plant of its own. Senators Tillman, Money and Chandler advocated the erection of a plant, while Mr. Hale supported the committee amendment, providing for a plant in the contingency that armor could not be produced for $445 per ton. No action was taken on the proposition, the bill going over until to-day.

The House.

The house yesterday considered the contested election case of Pearson vs. Crawford, from the Ninth North Carolina district. The report of a majority of the committee was against the sitting member, a Democrat, on the general grounds that Mr. Pearson's election was prevented by fraud, intimidation, bribery and bloodshed. The minority denied all the allegations of the majority. The debate was on party lines. Mr. Miers of Indiana spoke for the minority.

The Senate.

Washington, May 11.—In the senate yesterday the case of Senator Clark of Montana was postponed until next Monday. Mr. Chandler gave notice that at that time he would insist that the case be continuously considered to the exclusion of all other business. Mr. Sewell of New Jersey announced that he should object to that. Mr. Gallinger of New Hampshire addressed the senate at length on his resolution declaring that "the present phenomenal prosperity of the country is due to the policy of protection as embodied in the Dingley tariff law." The session was concluded with eulogies on the late Representative Samuel Baird of Louisiana.

The House.

The house yesterday by a very narrow margin of two votes unseated Mr. Crawford of North Carolina, a Democrat, and seated in his place Mr. Pearson. He is the third Republican to be seated at the present session. The minority resolution declaring the sitting member entitled to his seat was defeated by one vote. Mr. Jack, a Republican of Pennsylvania, voted with the Democrats on both votes. On the first roll call fifteen Republicans were absent and unpaired and on the second twelve were absent and unpaired.

The Senate.

Washington, May 12. — No disposition has made as yet of the naval appropriation bill by the senate, but after an all-day discussion an agreement was reached to vote on the armor plate section at 3 o'clock this afternoon. During yesterday's discussion a notable speech was delivered by Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts upon the necessity of building up the United States navy without delay. The speech was delivered with the vigor and earnestness characteristic of Mr. Lodge's discussion of public questions and attracted much attention. Mr. Daniel of Virginia presented an extended argument in support of the immediate construction by the government, of an armor factory, while Mr. Allison of Iowa opposed the project of a government armor factory on the score of economy.

The House.

The house yesterday broke all records, passing 180 private pension bills. The house adjourned over until Monday.

The Senate.

Washington, May 14. — By a close vote the senate rejected the proposition to erect, without reference to the price at which the government could secure armor plate for its warships, an armor plate factory. The vote upon the direct proposition was 22 to 24, and subsidiary amendments were rejected by about the same vote. When the committee's proposition was about to be voted upon a filibuster was organized, the quorum of the senate was broken and the question is still in the air. During the debate Mr. Chandler of New Hampshire delivered a sensational speech in which he charged that the government had been defrauded in the adoption of the Harveyized armor. He declared a similar fraud was proposed by the attempt to force the government to adopt the Krupp armor. Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin and Mr. Hale of Maine made notable speeches, deprecating the war talk the previous day by Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts. Neither the senator from Wisconsin nor the senator from Maine was fearful that we might become involved in difficulty with Germany on account of the Monroe doctrine. Mr. Hoar of Massachusetts protested against the "wretched imperialistic business," and the talk that this nation had only recently become a "world power," asserting that it had been a world power since the war of 1812.

QUIET IN ST. LOUIS.

St. Louis, May 15.—The sixth day of the street railway strike was especially quiet and devoid of interest. Not a wheel on any of the lines except that of mail cars were turned in the city yesterday in consequence of the decision of Chief of Police Campbell to give the men of the force who had had but little time for rest during the past five days a chance to recuperate for the coming week. The management of the two street railway companies, who feared to run cars without police protection, decided to make no attempt to keep their lines open yesterday. As a result the turbulent scenes that last week marked the reopening of the different lines were not expected and the day passed off without any serious trouble. The only police on duty were stationed at the different power houses and car sheds.

All Cars Running at Kansas City.

Kansas City, May 15.—Every street car line in this city and Kansas City, Kan., was in full operation yesterday, and no show of violence was offered by the strikers. The injunction of the federal court enjoining the union men from interfering with the running of the cars and the added fact that it was Sunday, combined to have a salutary effect upon the strikers.

Mysterious Death.

Chicago, May 15. — Robert Kilgour, Chicago representative of the Sheffield flour mills, Faribault, Minn., and a brother of Joseph Kilgour, leading man in "Sporting Life," was found dead on the elevated track of the union loop. A fracture of the left leg was the only apparent injury.

Wheeler's Check as a Relic.

Washington—The treasurer of the Cosmos club in Washington received Gen. Wheeler's check for $2 dues, and now the club is debating the advisability of keeping the check as an autograph instead of depositing it.

Lord Wolseley Injured.

London—While riding in front of the horse guards Lord Wolseley's horse fell, throwing the rider to the pavement and severely injuring his left arm.

It is almost imposible to "eat slow" on a dining car.

MARKS A WIDE DIFFERENCE

Between Republican and Reform Administration — Untaxed Foreign Corporations.

Governor Lind's Efforts to Have Them Pay Meets the Usual Republican Rebuff.

In Hanna Parlance, "We Know Our Business"—Something About "Prosperity."

The difference between Republican and state reform administration has had no more forceful illustration since the election and inauguration of Governor Lind, than in the governor's attempt to have the foreign corporations doing business in the State, brought to time as to payment of taxes and penalties, under the much-talked of Somerville act of the last legislature. The correspondence in the case may well be allowed to speak for itself, and for the record that will go to the people on the subject of law enforcement, and of equalization of the burdens of government, as between the people and the corporations that have been given certain rights and privileges by the people.

The Somerville law went into effect over six months ago and it has been notorious that the corporations taxed under the law have in large numbers utterly ignored the act and become liable to the penalties prescribed for failure to comply with the law. Having seen no sign of action by the secretary of state's office, Governor Lind having ascertained the names of some hundreds of such delinquents and law violators addressed the secretary of state in the following communication:

"Hon. Albert Berg, Secretary of State:

"Sir—Permit me to call your attention to the provisions of Chapter 69 of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota for the year 1899, and Chapter 70, amendatory thereof; this being the act usually known as the Somerville law. Under its provisions the secretary of state was required immediately after Oct. 1, 1899, and as often thereafter as he might be advised that corporations were doing business in this state in contravention of the act, to report such fact to the county attorney of the county in which the business of any such corporation is located, it being also made the duty of the county attorney to institute proceedings to recover the penalties prescribed by the act. I cannot learn that any report of that character has been made from your office! I find upon investigation that there are several hundred foreign corporations doing business in this State, who are subject to the provisions of the act referred to and who have not complied with its requirements. I enclose herewith a partial list of the foreign corporations doing business in the cities of St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth, who have not paid the license fee or obtained the certificate required to entitle them to transact business in this State. There are undoubtedly others that are also subject to the provisions of the law, both in the counties referred to and in other parts of the State, and there may be some in the list submitted which are not, but I think it sufficiently accurate to serve you as a guide.

"I deem it exceedingly important that the provisions of this act should be enforced by the officers charged with its execution, not only on account of the protection that it is designed to afford our citizens who do business with foreign corporations by enabling them to serve process in our own courts, but also because of the revenue accruing to the State. The collection of merely the minimum fee of $50 from each of the corporations named in the schedule transmitted would mean upwards of $10,000 to the State, and many of them are liable in a much greater sum, to say nothing about the penalties which they have incurred for refusal or failure to comply with the law.

"For these reasons and because it devolves upon you to take the initial step in the matter, I earnestly hope that you will take the action directed by the statute. If this office can be of further service to you, cheerful co-operation will be given at all times. Yours very respectfully,

"JOHN LIND, Governor."

The list submitted with the governor's letter, located the companies as follows: In Ramsey county 52 companies; in Hennepin county nearly 100; fast freight lines numbered 50, steamship lines a dozen, while some sixty were located in St. Louis county. In the list are every variety of corporation, the trusts being well represented.

Now what was the response of the Republican secretary of state to this act of the governor? Was it a cordial co-operation, with expressed or implied obligations for his interest in the matter? Hardly. But it was such a reply as was given by the G. O. P. mouthpiece, the Dispatch, as a studied insult to the governor. The Dispatch said it was a "slap in the face," and boasted that the governor was not even replied to as such official, but merely as "Citizen" Lind. But the secretary of state's reply can speak for itself, for here it is:

"Hon. John Lind, Executive Department, St. Paul, Minn.:

"Dear Sir—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a communication from you bearing date May 18, 1900, relative to the operation of Chapter 69, General Laws of Minnesota for the year 1899.

"I take pleasure in informing you that this department has taken all steps authorized by the act in question to enforce the law, and has at all times notified the county attorney of every county wherein the secretary of state has been advised of violations of the law. Respectfully,

"A. BERG, Secretary of State."

And here the matter rests. Of course by the statement that the secretary of state has notified the county attorneys in all cases "wherein the secretary of state has been advised of violations of the law," is intended to give the impression that the law is being executed and the duties of officials being discharged. As a matter of fact no steps are being taken toward enforcement of this act and the public is very well aware of the fact.

That these corporations should escape is in entire accord with Republican policy and administration, and is entirely in line politically, since the Republicans in convention have made it a point to head the big district delegations to Philadelphia with corporation and trust men.

"PROSPERITY" OINTMENT.

Not Soiling Garments nor Bedewing the Whiskers of Our Producers to Any Alarming Extent.

The country press are well aware how false and misleading is the talk of Republican "prosperity," and more and more are our papers talking about the real conditions that surround them. Continued low prices for nearly everything that the farmer sells, and double and treble for what he has to buy, is not a beautiful situation.

Says the Winona Herald, speaking for usually prosperous southern Minnesota:

"The notion has been going about that the farmers are afflicted with "astounding prosperity," simply because prices of farm produce have, in the last two or three years, partly recovered from the low level they reached in some previous years. Now the farmer ought to know, and the records of mortgages in the various county clerks' and recorders' offices demonstrate the fact, that all these increased receipts, if anybody can show a bank account demonstrating any increase, are more than absorbed by the increased price he must pay for everything for which the farmer exchanges his produce. He must pay tribute to the trust, and no better illustration of the truth of this can be made than in the case of the American Steel Company. Six thousand men were thrown out of employment because of the lack of demand for implements which the farmers could not purchase because of their high price. If there was so much prosperity, why could not the farmer afford to purchase the necessary implements? The fact is that a heavy impost is laid upon nearly everything the farmer needs in his household and in his business, while the prices of his own products are at the mercy of speculators, combines, corners, etc., etc. The farmer has to meet the world's price in disposing of his product, but he encounters a different state of things when he comes to purchase for himself. The range of price set up by the speculators is artificial, and what they gain in the speculative market they pocket—what they lose they mercilessly force the farmer to pay by an increase of prices in manufactures. This seeming prosperity will be discovered the more you look behind it to be a myth, and although the misfortunes of the rest of the earth have enabled the farmer to dispose of more of his products than formerly, still there are combinations to be broken down, trusts to be abolished and the financial system eliminated before the farmer can really say that a period of prosperity has been inaugurated."

Tracey Herald: The Traveling Men's Anti-Trust League now numbers over 46,000 members.

Building is at a standstill in Indianapolis, Ind., and 400 hod carriers went out on a strike lately.

Two thousand coal miners are on strike in western Kentucky fields with no prospects of settlement.

At Quincy, Mass., the granite cutters are still on strike and the bosses threaten to employ non-union men.

The 50,000 members of the Chicago Building Trades are still on strike and there is no prospect of an early settlement.

Fears are expressed that the miners' strike in Pittsburg, Pa., district may cause a coal famine and cause many factories to shut down.

OFF SAME PIECE

IS G. O. P. ADMINISTRATION IN WASHINGTON AND IN THE NORTH STAR STATE.

Army Frauds and Cuban Steals in the One, and Untaxed Corporations in the Other—Governor Lind's Efforts to Have the Somerville Law Enforced—Our Goppite Secretary of State—Forceful Lesson of the Need of Reform Officials in All Departments—Other State and National Points—State After State For Bryan—Reform Press Note and Comment of the Week.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, May 28, 1900.

While the trusts pull the strings at Washington and Cuban steals follow embalmed beef and other army scandals in the all-prevailing rottenness of money control of the G. O. P., we have the same kind of goppite cloth in Minnesota, lacking only the presence of imperial troops and colonial offices to give us the full fruition. Thus we see the state Republicans placing a lumber truster, department store king and the Twin City Street Railway magnate at the head of the delegation to the Hanna-McKinley convention, but of most forceful application we see the Republican department charged with the administration of the laws governing corporations utterly ignoring its duties and meeting Governor Lind's efforts to have foreign corporations taxed with ridicule and studied insult.

Lesson after lesson has appeared since Governor Lind was inaugurated of what the people lost by not making a clean sweep in 1898. None is perhaps as forcible as this case of the Somerville law and the Republican secretary of state. The secretary of state had knowledge of the law, for its original lies in the vaults of his office. How did he observe it? Very leniently. The act did not take effect until October, 1899, six months after passage. Now the law has been in non-effect for six months more, although all that was required of the secretary of state was that he file information for prosecutions for violation. Governor Lind found a list of some 300 such derelicts, each subject to penalty, of which the governor formally notified Secretary Berg, furnishing him such list, with the result now known all over the state. To date, the only action taken by this Republican official has been to weed from the list here and there a corporation likely to escape. The list remains sufficiently large to bring to the state thousands of dollars in just taxes and penalties.

Governor Lind's earnest desire to have this law enforced goes back to his inaugural message in which he recommended taxation of foreign corporations.

In what marked contrast stands the insurance department, in reform control, with the Republican secretary of state's administration, Insurance Commissioner O'Shaughnessy having turned into the state treasury some $12,000 in fees required of foreign insurance companies under the same act. Action by this derelict Republican official would have multiplied this sum at least several times, by this time.

It is directly in point, and something that the people should know, that Secretary Berg has for months been a mere figure head in his office, he being engaged in "citizenizing" himself in a far distant portion of the state, engaged in acquiring a "homestead," and in a new townsite operation at the Lake of the Woods, not neglecting, however, to draw his salary with proper regularity. During this period he has probably not spent 10 per cent of the time for which the people pay in discharge of his official duties. At least such is the declaration of a fellow Republican state official. The Globe, in extended comment, says on this point:

"Now if the honorable the secretary of state will arrange matters so that he can spare the time to act promptly upon the advice of Citizen John Lind—not that The Globe desires that he should neglect his valuable claim on the shores of Lake of the Woods, or absent himself from Roseau county so long as to impair his squatter's rights—if he will proceed as the law says he shall proceed and should have proceeded to compel foreign corporations to comply with this law, the state treasury will be the richer by perhaps $50,000 and Mr. Berg can then retire once more to the fertile plains of Roseau and allow the dust to once more accumulate upon his office chair."

This lack of co-operation in officials and boards left in Republican control has been the most severe thing that Governor Lind has had to contend with. The greater portion of his present term has been required to even get boards in control of men in sympathy with him, not as partisans but in his purposes of reform. In the discouragements encountered no wonder that at times it made his task seem greater than could be borne, and yet results that he has obtained with patience and long suffering have repaid the people. Many boards have been reorganized and the state's business improved. In the case of the railroad commission, within four months of having been brought into full reform control, the people of a single congressional district received back into their pockets more than one-third of a million of dollars a year in reduced grain rates.

This secretary of state incident has come in the very nick of time. It will sound a keynote for the state campaign, emphasizing to the people that if they want true and complete reform they must make a clean sweep of the departments and bring in a thoroughly reform legislature.

The humbug that Republican administration makes volume of business is [illegible] not better disposed of than by the figures of railway earnings in different administrations of party control. Take any reliable manual and see the figures of such business in the United States in the presidential terms since 1881. Thus, Republican, 1881-2-3-4; the Democratic, from 1885 to 1889; then of the Republican administration from 1889 to 1893, and that of the Democratic party from 1893 to 1897. The figures are:

1881 to 1885 (Republican), gross railroad earnings	$3,900,000,000
1885 to 1889 (Democratic), gross railroad earnings	3,075,000,000
1889 to 1893 (Republican), gross railroad earnings	3,145,000,000
1893 to 1897 (Democratic), gross railroad earnings	4,600,000,000

And speaking of comparisons, Democratic "soup houses," so called, do not compare with wholesale strikes and lockouts, as political reminders.

And as to such reminders, government by injunction, where, as in St. Louis, New York and other places, the courts have doubly increased their sweeping orders to include every possible demand of the corporation against labor, even to prohibiting contributions for feeding the strikers, exceeds them all. How many who condemned the Chicago platform for its declaration in 1896 against "government by injunction" are not since come to see the wisdom and justice of the declaration? There are thousands on thousands who have.

In an extended canvass for the favorite for the Democratic candidate for governor of New York by The Journal Hon. Bird S. Coler has by far the largest vote. Coler is said to be the coming New York man. He is a strong Bryan man and stood loyally for him in '96.

Memorial day this year, under increased patriotic impulses, will be more generally observed, if possible, than heretofore. Governor Lind's proclamation especially appeals to the people to make this occasion one marked for patriotic devotion.

Speaking of political devotion, a movement is on foot for making the coming Fourth one long to be remembered in political annals by celebrating on Natal day the people's nomination of W. J. Bryan for the presidency. The nomination may not be confirmed at Kansas City on that day, although the conventions will be called to order on that day. It is possible that the nomination will be unanimously proclaimed immediately upon assembling, in which case that there will be gunpowder and fireworks galore throughout the country goes without saying.

Speaking of the campaign, there are signs of such a campaign as that of 1840, or the log cabin and "hard cider," at least on the side of Bryan. If McKinley sits on the Canton porch this summer he will resemble the campaign of Van Buren, with "stuffed chairs" and trust "gold spoons" and other sobriquets that belong to the "Tarquins," while the Harrison parades, music, songs, log cabins, banners, miniature steamships, canoes, "raccoons," cider barrels, etc., are certain to have a duplication in some form or other in the Bryan enthusiasm. There will certainly be many a counterpart of "Tippecanoe and Tyler too."

That was a cracking good point made by Lentz of Ohio in daring the Republicans of the house to put trust-made goods on the list of interdicted goods in interstate traffic. "You will not do so," declared Mr. Lentz, "because the trusts, to whom you offer up your daily prayers for revenue in the coming campaign, will not allow you to."

During the past week several state and district conventions have been held, the list of instructed delegates for William J. Bryan standing as follows:

Massachusetts, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, Rhode Island, Oregon, District of Columbia, Utah, Michigan, Iowa and Kansas.

It is a safe prediction that convention after convention, as fast as held, will follow suit.

By the way where are those wiseacres who predicted defeat for Bryan before the convention?

The goppites in one of the Ohio districts (Norwalk) are so harmonious and patriotic that it took 2,001 ballots to nominate a congressman. The winner was a national banker and trust promoter.

For the cash jobs at the disposal of the Republican national convention there are more applications, 20 times over, than places. There are also more demands for tickets of admission many times over than tickets all told. Philadelphia will be a good place to stay away from.

The Alger scandals are not out of smelling distance until the Cuban postal steals arrive. And nearer and nearer to the Hanna-McKinley person, each new scandal approaches. Neely, the arrested, is connected in business with the Heaths, of whom one Perry is McKinley's "man" in the postoffice department. Also the duck Rathbone was Hanna's man in his bribery operations in Ohio, when he was elected to the senate, his name appearing in the sworn testimony in connection with delivery of a certain $10,000 of boodle. Rathbone years ago also figured in the Dudley "blocks of five" election frauds in Indiana. Precious scamps, these, connected with and underlying the administration.

National Chairman Jones believes we shall win this year, "because God is with us." If God be with us who shall prevail against us?

While Secretary Gouge was engaged in the search for the lost $400,000,000 in treasury gold, he discovered an error of $50,000,000 in the treasury surplus. But Gouge will not mind a little book keep[illegible]

CROSSED THE VAAL

ROBERTS' ARMY NOW IN TRANSVAAL TERRITORY.

Last Natural Obstacle Passed Without Opposition—Boers Retreated Almost Without a Show of Defense—Boer Force at Vereeniging Dislodged—Kruger Admits That Matters Are Grave — Boers Will Trust Everything to a Last Stand on the Gates Rand Mountains—Johannesburg Mines Will Be Destroyed.

London, May 28.—When Gen. Roberts wrote his first dispatch on Transvaal territory yesterday afternoon shortly before 2 o'clock he was fifty-one miles from Johannesburg and seventy-seven miles from Pretoria. His immensely superior force had safely passed the Vaal river, their last great natural obstacle, without opposition. The Boers retreated almost without a show of defense. Gen. French and Gen. Hamilton apparently did not fire a shot. Of Lord Roberts' immediate force eleven men belonging to the Eighth mounted infantry, were the first to ford the river. They came upon a Boer patrol looting at Villjoen's drift and a skirmish lasting ten minutes followed. Two hundred Boers tried feebly to hold the Vereeniging colliery but they were dislodged. The Boer rear guard is at Moyerten, ten miles south of Vereeniging. The toward Klip river hills that cover the south side of Johannesburg. While Lord Roberts' 30,000 infantry, 20,000 horse and 150 guns are moving on Johannesburg and Pretoria through a parched and deserted country, the situation at the Transvaal capital, as it was last Friday, is thus described by an observer who sent his message by private hand to Lourenzo Marques yesterday:

"The situation, both from a military and a political point of view has become very critical. President Kruger yesterday admitted for the first time that matters are very grave. The Boer determination is to trust everything to a last stand on the Gates Rand mountains, to the north of Potchefstein, where 300 Kaffirs are digging trenches. To that point every available man and gun has been sent. The whole of the western border of the Transvaal from end to end is defenceless and Gen. Baden-Powell can march in when he likes. Gen. Roberts, on the other hand, will encounter

The Greatest Opposition.

The Boers will lure the British into threatening Johannesburg as an excuse for them to destroy property. The Transvaal government intends to destroy the mines and property without an excuse. Much dynamite has been sent down the line and 10,000 cases lie ready at Zurchsfontein, sixteen miles from Johannesburg. Generals Botha and Meyer have protested against the destruction of property. Both are large proprietors of land and fear confiscation, but they have been unable to obtain satisfactory assurance from President Kruger. Meanwhile French and German adventurers have come forward with schemes for blowing up the British troops. Some of these have received tacit permission for experiment. One German plan is to mine the railway where it lies perfectly concealed until the weight of a passing train explodes the charge. Gen. Lucius Meyer says that surrender would be welcomed by the Boers but everybody fears the ignominy of making the proposal. He says he is assured his men will not stand. President Steyn and Mr. Reits, the Transvaal state secretary, are strongly

Opposed to Peace,

but Mr. Kruger is not so much against it."

President Kruger's proclamation to the burghers asking their votes for or against continuing the war is equivalent to saying that they can quit now with the prospect of returning to their farms or continuing to the bitter end. The indications are that the majority of the Boers will favor surrender. Some correspondents telegraph that there are 1000,000 foreigners in the Boer army, but this is hardly credible. Indications are that there will be a pitched battle at Laing's Nek, where Gen. Buller faces the Boers, reinforced to an estimated strength of from 8,000 to 10,000. The reinforcements include a large part of the Ladybrand and fresh commandoes from Pretoria. With the exception of a few shots exchanged with the retiring burghers at Vereeniging, the only fighting during the past three days with all the appear to have been two small engagements in the eastern part of the Free State. At Ficksburg on Saturday the Boers attacked the British holding the town but they were forced to retire toward Slabbeston Nek. At Ficksburg a correspondent reports that nothing is known as regards casualties. The same day Gen. Brabant's scouts encountered 200 Boers intrenched near Clocolan. The scouts advanced to within 200 yards, when the Boers fired heavily. The scouts retired and four are missing. Gen. Rundle is slowly sweeping the eastern portion of the Free States. Occasionally his squadrons come across parties of Boers, two or three in number, and usually on foot, who are wearily going to their farms. Some of them carry saddles on their backs. Wholesale surrenders are expected, but thus far they have not occurred. Small commandoes are described by correspondents as wandering round and finding every road blocked.

Roberts Refused to Retreat.

The Times has the following from a correspondent at the front, via Kroonstad, May 25: "When Broadwood occupied the hills overlooking Lindley the chief storekeeper came and stated that President Steyn and all the leading officials had left with £100,000 in specie. He offered to mediate between Gen. Dewet and Broadwood. The former offered to surrender with his commando [illegible] farms. The negotiations fell through, Lord Roberts refusing to treat on any terms."

Reoccupied by Boers.

Barkly West, May 28.—It is reported that the Boers have reoccupied Kurunaman and that large laagers are located at Reitfontein and Danielskul.

CONGRESS.

Senate Will Investigate Affairs in Cuba.

Washington, May 28. — The senate Saturday agreed to a resolution for an investigation by the committee on Cuban affairs of the Cuban postal and other irregularities, authorizing the committee to visit Cuba if necessary to carry on the investigation.

The House.

The house practically completed the consideration of the Alaska civil government bill.

BUY A PENNSYLVANIA TOWN.

Philadelphia Capitalists Acquire Possession of Coke and Coal Interests in Frugality.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 28—A million dollar deal has just been made in this city whereby the entire town of Frugality, Cambria county, Pa., with all its coal and coke interests, passes into the hands of a company of which State Senator J. Henry Cochran of Williamsport is President. P. A. B. Widener, W. L. Elkins and C. L. Magee are among those interested in the deal.

CIVIL WAR IN CHICAGO.

Nervy Squatter Intrenches Himself on the Lake Front.

Chicago, May 28.—Chicago was invaded at 1 o'clock Saturday morning by an army of a hostile state, numbering thirteen men—the "District of Lake Michigan." The invasion ended in a farce comedy, but came near being finished in deadly earnest. The casualties include one boy, shot in the leg, and one horse killed. Five of the invaders were arrested and the balance were allowed to escape. The trouble was precipitated by Capt. G. W. Streeter, a squatter, who has from time to time created much trouble and litigation by his efforts to seize land along the shore of Lake Michigan. The land which he has for some time claimed to be the "District of Lake Michigan" consists of made land on the shore of Lincoln Park, part of it including one of the main park boulevards. The courts have decided against the squatter again and again, but he persisted in his efforts to grab the property. He claims that made land along the shore does not belong to the State of Illinois, but is, indeed, public domain, free to whoever settles upon it.

END NOT IN SIGHT.

St. Louis' Big Car Strike Continues, Both Sides Standing Firm.

St. Louis, May 28.—Yesterday was the twentieth day of the street railway strike and the end seems as far away as ever, both the Transit company and its employes standing firm for their respective claims. Not a car on the company's lines has been run since the strike without police protection. In consequence of there not being enough policemen to guard the 800 or more cars usually operated, less than a quarter of that number has been run by the company, and that only over a part of its twenty-two divisions and lines. Since May 8, when the strike began, there have been numerous collisions between the police and strikers and the latters' sympathizers. Hardly a day during that time has passed without somebody being wounded by bullets or injured by flying missiles and police clubs. The list of casualties presents 4 persons shot and killed, 22 wounded by bullets and 50 or more injured in other ways.

FATALITIES IN CHICAGO.

Young Girl Killed by Lightning—Man Drowned in Lake.

Chicago, May 28.—While returning home from a candy store yesterday during a storm Lucy Holden, thirteen years of age, was instantly killed by lightning and her sister Irene, ten years old, burned about the right side and shoulder, fell by the side of the dead girl in an unconscious condition, but will recover. The clothes of both girls were almost burned from their bodies. Hail to the depth of three inches fell in the north suburbs. The storm was accompanied by a terrific electrical display. Many trees were splintered by the lightning. Out on Lake Michigan George Reesch, a saloonkeeper, drowned, and his companion, Paul Kutzner, after clinging to the upturned boat for nearly an hour, was rescued by men from the revenue cutter Michigan.

FOUR BISHOPS CONSECRATED.

Impressive Ceremony Takes Place in Chicago.

Chicago, May 28.—By the laying on of hands of twelve bishops and in the presence of 3,000 persons at the Auditorium four new bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church were consecrated. They are David Hastings Moore, assigned to the Shanghai district; John William Hamilton, assigned to the San Francisco district; Edwin Wallace Parker and Frank Wesley Warne, missionary bishops assigned to India and Malaysia. The ceremonies were brief and simple. The delegates to the conference and hundreds of their friends came forward when the services were at an end and crowded the stage to congratulate the four new bishops.

Some Thrilling Escapes.

Peoria, Ill., May 28.—A fire which originated from an unknown cause on the second floor caused the almost complete destruction of the Home of the Good Shepherd last evening. The fourteen Sisters in charge and the eighty inmates, young girls, succeeded in escaping without injury, though there were some thrilling escapes. Loss estimated at $50,000 with insurance of $12,000.

No Plague Cases.

San Francisco, May 28—Dr. O'Brien, secretary of the board of health, states that no new cases of plague had been reported to the board of health.

RAPIDLY ADVANCING

LATEST REPORT REGARDING ROBERTS' MOVEMENTS.

Country in Front of Him Clear of Boers to Viljoen's Drift — Boers Are Evacuating Their Positions South of the Vaal—Next Dispatch From Lord Roberts Will Probably Be Dated in Sight of the Transvaal Border—All News Suppressed at Pretoria—Boers Said to Be Quarreling Among Themselves.

London, May 27.—The latest intelligence from Lord Roberts' headquarters at Vredsfort Station, filed Thursday at 5:45 p. m., was that the British were rapidly advancing. Gen. Hamilton had effected a junction with Lord Roberts. The country in front of them was clear of Boers to Viljoens drift. The Boers were evacuating all their positions south of the Vaal river and 5,000 had already crossed to the north bank. Probably Gen. French's cavalry is already reconnoitering the fords of the Vaal.

War office observers expect that the next dispatch from the field marshal will be dated in sight of the Transvaal frontier. Mr. Bennett Burleigh, wiring to the Daily Telegraph from Vredsfort Thursday morning, said Lord Roberts would doubtless river by Saturday or Sunday. The British outposts were then at Erste Geluk, nine miles north of Vredsfort and twenty-six miles south of the Vaal river. The railway is much damaged. While the British in overwhelming force are thus rapidly approaching the Transvaal, the movements of the Boers are enveloped in mystery. The last Pretoria newspaper to reach Lourenzo Marques was a week old. Every one seeking to cross the Portuguese border from the Transvaal is searched for newspapers and letters. Dispatches and mail letters containing even harmless references to the war are suppressed; the only news that has emerged from the Transvaal during the last ten days has come by word of mouth. According to these oral reports yesterday the

Boers Were Quarreling

among themselves. Transvaal paper money was circulating at 80 per cent discount. Becket's firm was giving 1 pound in gold for five pounds in paper. Krouse and Klinke, the engineers who opposed the blowing up of the mines, have been dismissed. Commandant Schutte had been appointed to defend Johannesburg, and all the British subjects had been turned out.

Baden-Powell declines to act on the suggestions of his friends that he should return to England for a rest. He is determined to retain his active command at the front. Advices from Mafeking, dated May 20, say the Boers are intrenching at Polfontein, seventeen miles east of Mafeking. The Northern railway is now repaired to a point within four miles of the town. Ample supplies of food are coming in. Col. Baden-Powell voluntarily gave up fifty-three Boers and eleven wounded to the Boer commandant, who thanked him for his kindness.

Attacked Rebel Natives.

The Baratoons, stimulated by the British successes attacked the rebel natives at Reitfontein May 10 and took much loot. They released Sani, the old chief who had rendered good service to the British in keeping Mafeking supplied with news of the Boer operations. Two thousand Boers are near Ficksburg, besides small roving parties, that come into contact with the British while reconnoitering. President Steyn was with these Boers last Monday, organizing and inspecting them and drafting recalcitrants into this service. The British are sweeping the country far and wide, seizing horses, cattle and grain. Yesterday President Steyn was reported to be at Bethlehem with a small field force appealing to the Free Staters to defend their freedom and independence. Apparently he and all the Free staters he can assemble the transvaalers, but will remain in the northwestern section of the Free State. On Tuesday there was heavy canonading at Merchanz, near Bethlehem. The firing began at dusk. Why and with what result is not known at Mazer, Basutol, and where the news arrived yesterday. Gen. Rundle's division was still at Trommel Tuesday. There was a small Boer laager twelve miles to the north of him, and beyond this there was a larger one. The correspondent sending this news, which was wired from Winburg yesterday, said that these Boers were understood to be ready to surrender, and that, in his opinion, the war in the Free State was practically over. A dispatch to the Clocolan, dated May 25, says: The eighth division has in front of it commandoes, headed off from the Transvaal, which, while not willing to surrender, do not know where to go. Their joint strength is estimated at from 1,000 to 2,000 men."

Will Not Join

Boers Busy Fortifying.

The Times has the following from Newcastle, dated May 24: "The Boers are fortifying a very large semi-circular position extending from Majuba to Pongway. Large numbers are busy digging and several large guns are visible." Gen. Buller has communicated to the colonial government Col. Bethuen's report of the squadron of Bethuen's horse at Vryheid. He says: "This regrettable affair was due to the impetuousness of Capt. Gough, who was killed."

Occupied by British.

Pretoria, May 27.—An official bulletin issued here says it is reported the British have occupied Vredefort and are advancing on Schoenman's drift. Gen. De Wet announces that the federals have occupied Heilbron and Potchefstroom. He reports that the call to arms is meeting with a noble response.

A fool spends his money in dissipation and a wise man spends his for recreation.

A husband waiting for his wife at a bargain sale is about the cheapest thing in sight.

With the opening of the presidential campaign this country will probably experience another natural gas boom.

Three robbers who went into a Chicago house "in the guise of constables" seem to have had a very low taste and to be lacking in all professional ethics.

Chicago thugs who took $15 from a market gardener after he had lost $10 at a game of dice probably played a surer thing with the rest of the money.

Judging from the senate debates on armor plate, the new shell that will penetrate eighteen inches of Harveyized steel has had no effect on senatorial skulls.

Mount Lassen, near Red Bluff, Cal., is said to be rumbling ominously. The peak should be searched closely; some vice-presidential possibility may be up there, communing with himself.

Lord Roberts says he has received "a most cheery" telegram from Col. Baden-Powell, the defender of Mafeking. The mule ragout, with rashers of fried cat, must have been unusually good in the beleaguered town that morning.

During the past week strikes have multiplied. There are now nearly 100,000 men out, the most of them endeavoring to obtain fewer hours of labor. With but one or two exceptions, these men are pressing their cause in an entirely orderly manner, which is proof of the intelligence of the American workingmen. Where violence has occurred, it has been invoked by men who have not always enjoyed American citizenship.

The experience of the French troops in the Sahara has shown that dark-colored horses bear great atmospheric heat much better than do those of a light color. A writer in Nature remarks that the same fact has been demonstrated in India, and adds that tropical animals generally have darker coats than are found upon those living in cold climates. Similarly the darkest-hued races of mankind inhabit the warmer countries.

"That is the eighth boy," said the matron of a city employment bureau recently, "who has come today to engage a cook, laundress or parlor maid. Moreover, each one has made a good selection, stated his requirements clearly, and finished in half the time his mother or sister would have occupied." The new boy is as distinct a product of the age as the new woman. He can make his own bed, sew buttons on his own clothes, manage a bachelor establishment for his father and himself, make out the menus and do chafing-dish cookery, all without losing his rank in school or his prestige among his boy mates.

"Puerto Rico" or "Porto Rico?" Let us hope that uniformity will a last prevail. It is not the first case of a vexatious variation and puzzle to those who wish to spell it correctly. It took years to get rid of "Dacotah" and to establish the spelling "Dakota." The situation with respect to our new island possession is that the board of geographic names, which is supposed to determine such matters, has decided strongly for Puerto Rico. The President, it is understood, accepted the authority of the board and adopted its spelling. But congress has enacted a form of government for "Porto Rico," which thus becomes the legal name of the territory.

The mystery of the "wabbling" of the earth's axis may be explained in the opinion of Dr. J. Haim, a German astronomer, by assuming that the rotation of our planet is affected by changes in the magnetic influences of the sun. He publishes a comparison of observations on sun-spots and on the irregular motions of the north pole, which appears to show a coincidence between the two phenomena. During a maximum of sunspots the magnetic influence of the sun seems to be greatest, and after the passage of such a maximum the disturbance of the earth's axis diminishes. The fact that the earth's poles of magnetism do not correspond in location with its geographical poles may, Doctor Haim suggests, indicate how the sun's disturbing action is applied. When the magnetism of our globe is most powerfully excited then the strain along its magnetic axis may cause a distortion of the figure of the earth, which becomes less as the strain diminishes.

A good man is a useful man. He is not all ornament. He has his work to do, his place in society to fill, his influence to exert. He is truthful; others share in his goodness. He scatters blessings all along his pathway. He is no encumberer of the ground. There is neither a human nor a divine demand for his removal as useless. He is spared year after year on account of his productiveness. By his prayers, his instructions, his counsels, his example, his spirit and his deeds, he improves and benefits all who come within his reach.

The material sympathy expressed for the sufferers from the conflagration at Ottawa and Hull, shows that the whole world is a-kin. Generous contributions have been sent by nearly every considerable town in the Northern and Western States, and by many European cities.

The best offering you can make to God is to enjoy to the full what He sends of good; and bear what He allows of evil, like a child who believes in all his father's dealings with it, whether it understands them or not.

ON THE MIDWAY AT PARIS.

Curious Side Shows of the Great Exposition, with a Bar Every Time You Turn Around.

(Paris Letter.)

The Midway Plaisance is dead—long live the Midway Plaisance! When the original street of Cairo was in its heyday the Paris life of amusement still depended on the night. The Moulin Rouge and the Cafe American were the height of chic, and the gayety of the fair was of the old-style Frenchiness. The bicycle, the automobile and the new life of "sport" changed all that, and the Midway Plaisance of the exhibition is strikingly different from the old street where the weird cadences of the danse du ventre first burst upon the world. In the old Jardin de Paris the "fin de siecle dance," with Rayon d'Or, La Melenite, La Mome Fromage and La Goulue, waved its lace-edged petticoats as the last gesture of the dying century. Helas! the fin de siecle dance itself is dead, and its divinities have grown stout and heavy. The Midway Plaisance is as amusing as ever, only it has changed. It has grown soberer—outwardly.

We, who have just returned from the Swiss village, can bear witness that for innocent deviltry and the kind of gayety that is agreed to be "Parisian" neither the waving skirts of La Mome Fromage nor yet the gauze waistband of La Belle Fatima are essential. Beyond question the mark of the present exhibition is the pretty waiter girl in hitherto undreamed-of profusion. The pretty waiter girl in the Swiss village runs to blue eyes, blonde braids and a smart black corset put on outside. It is the Swiss peasant costume, and it goes well with yodling. We saw three young Americans drinking pink Swiss champagne under the arbor on the summit of Mount Pilatus to the sound of their own yodling, while the yellow braids were bobbing in the winds.

"How do you like the midway?" we asked.

"This is our mountain," was all that they yelled down to us. "Yah-hoodle-oy, yah-hoodle-oy." The Swiss village is the biggest sideshow, and Mount Pilatus is its biggest feature, yet its ascension is no more laborious than dragging up six flights of your Paris mansard at night, and its scattered arbors and bosky nooks, with their expectant nymphs, have all the coziness of home life. From many a six-storied wooden mountain, covered with scene-painted canvas, the gay youth of the various nations yodle to each other across verdant valleys, enlivened with lowing kine and red-lipped milkmaids, while from crag to crag the fleet chamois (read goat) skips after the biscuits of the charitable. Down in yonder village you are importuned by yellow braids with cuckoo clocks for sale. Up in the highlands they tempt you with pink champagne.

Now, speaking of champagne, this is another feature of the present exhibition—the riotous omnipresence of the wine list. Not to mention the opera comique scenic effects of the wines of France exhibit in the old Salle des Mechines, the son of temperance finds himself running up against fizz at every turn. After climbing laboriously, in a diagonal spiral, around the girdle of the universe on the immense celestial globe, one meets—beyond the furtherest star—an American bar!

This, by the way, strikes another keynote of the present exhibition and its Midway Plaisance—the instructive and practically useful character of its gayeties. It is a globe within a globe, the inner one and much the smaller being our earth. Many have asked why the heavens are represented by a globe. If you were inside it you would perceive, not a convex globe, but a concave heavenly vault lit up on every side, above, below, with stars. The central sphere (it will hold twenty people) is the earth, and it turns over as the earth does on its axis. Round goes the moon, with double motion; the planets circle around the sun, and the sun seems to be moved round, although it is the sun that moves; stars, nebula, the milky way and fiery comets keep up their apparent motion. When one, climbing around the sphere that is the earth, begins descending to the southern hemisphere, to look down on the southern cross, the effect is startling. For the first time in my life I got an idea of what eternal space is with no up nor down except in relation to our, own little sphere. The star-spangled, blue-black immensity extends all around, underneath as well as above. Then the great Saint-Saens organ booms the music of the spheres. It was well to have put that bar there.

The "zig-zag" and the "rollo" books are not in it with this exposition for mingled instruction and amusement. After the trip around the universe there is the trip around the world, and this in various forms. The Tour du Monde itself is a theater on which pass scenes from every country, acted by natives. No one has seen it yet, because half the native actors have been painting Paris a bright vermilion ever since their arrival. The Chinese got into trouble for maltreating a girl of the Quartier d'Europe. Some of the American Indians are at the depot, the result of too much fire-water. The troubles of the Anamites have become classical. It seems they imagined themselves cheated by the French manager, so one Sunday morning they tied this man hand and foot to a post. Then each Anamite stepped gravely past him, spit at him and calmly told him what he thought of him.

Of this Tour du Monde series of panoramas and dioramas the greatest is, perhaps, the mareorama, of which I have already written—a steamer trip round the Mediterranean, where the boat rolls and pitches; where it comes up night at sea, and where the sweet shores of the Riviera glide past the view from Marseilles all the way to Alexandria. The Panorama Transatlantique, a show of the same kind, takes one from Havre to the harbor of New York.

By far the most novel of these panorama effects, however, is the device of the cineorama—an application of the cinematograph, or biograph; to the panorama. Here, in a big building by itself, are four simultaneous biographs instead of one, and a whole panorama circle of moving pictures instead of a flat picture on a sheet. The result is an extraordinary ghost-like effect of real life. Imagine the panorama of the Crucifixion or the battle of Gettysburg with all the figures in motion!

Rich Widow Feels That It Is Unnecessary for Her to Marry Again.

"Don't know whether it's new or not. I heard it down in Bermuda," said the man who recently returned from that winter resort. "There's a rich widow living just outside of Pontiac," according to this story, "and after several elderly gentlemen had vainly endeavored to lure her into matrimony again, report gained circulation that she was a regular man hater. Finally a wealthy widower from the east, carrying with him the evidences of good living and the heartiness that seeks congenial companionship, visited the city and was soon a caller upon the intractable widow. After he thought sufficient advancement had been made to justify a proposal he proceeded to feel his way. 'Beautiful home you have here?' 'Yes, I enjoy it.' 'Fine outlook, fine trees, fine yard, very fine all around. But there is one thing lacking.' 'Yes?' 'It is an Adamless Eden, don't you know. You are so good in everything else that I should think you would be glad to share these blessings with a husband.' 'Are you proposing, sir?' 'In an argumentative way. If you can be convinced that you should have a husband, I should like to be the man.' 'Husband! I have a gardener that smokes and drinks! I have a parrot that swears like a pirate, and I have a cot that stays out all night. What in creation do I want with a husband?'"—Detroit Free Press.

WINNING AN OLYMPIAN RACE.

Thoughts That Flashed Through the Mind of the Galatian Boy.

Though Phaedo has flashed past the laboring leaders, right at his heels comes the rapid footfall of the Galatian boy. Clearer and clearer it sounds, run as he will. Every faculty and fiber in Ladas' mind and body is concentrated on keeping unbroken the long, swift stride that Phrannes has taught him, which eats up the ground like fire. With elbows held well in, and swinging arms that lengthen every stride, he wastes no breath shouting invocations, says St. Nicholas. A single slip or falter will be fatal now, with the goal distant but a few short lengths, and as his limbs weaken under the terrible strain, the strength of his will sustains his flagging muscles, and still the flying feet spurn the loose sand with never a break in their motion. Down deep within himself Ladas feels yet remaining an iota of reserve power. The temptation is almost irresistible to make his effort now, now to end the suspense and decide the race; but to his mind come the words of crafty old Phrannes: "With a stout heart and a cool head the race can be won in the very last stride," and the supreme moment is delayed. Just ahead a flying figure dances before his dimming sight, and he wonders how feels Phaedo, and whether aught of his strength has been saved. And now a mad shout from the crowded seats of the Athenians roars forth across the stadium as they see Phaedo in the lead at the very finish. "Athene! Athene!" they shout. "Pallas Athene gives us the race!" The cheers of the little group of Galatians are swallowed up in the great cry, but Ladas needs no applause to nerve him on. Now, at the very last, the wan, beautiful face of his mother is before him, and he remembers the two, lonely at home, waiting for the outcome of this day, for their glory or for their shame. Already the goal is scarce three strides away, and Phaedo laughs with triumph, when suddenly the face of Ladas shoots up even with his. For an instant, that seems hours of struggling, the two waver side by side, and then with a last desperate effort, the boy of Galatia draws away and touches the goal slab, even while the foot of the other hangs above it. With the mighty shout of an assembled world begins the Olympiad of Ladas.

CENTRAL AMERICAN INDIANS.

They Are Not Wholly Free from Guile Says a Traveler.

"It is a common impression that the Central American Indian is singularly honest and free from guile," said a traveler who came up on the last banana boat, "but don't you believe a word of that story. I recently made a muleback trip to the Olancha district, in northwest Honduras, my particular purpose being to take a look at the famous old placer diggings on the Guayape river. I spent a week or so in the region, and was especially interested in the native Indians who live along the banks of the stream and who regard the placers as a sort of family pocketbook, from which they help themselves as they please. When a household needs anything that cannot be hunted or fished—in other words, that has to be bought at the store—the women sally out with their 'bateas,' or wooden bowls, and proceed to wash as much gold as is required for the purchase. The metal they secure in that way is usually in the form of minute grains, hardly as large as the head of a pin, but occasionally they find little nuggets, and that brings me to my story. The day before I left I was at the principal store of the district talking to the proprietor, or 'tienderos,' when a typical Olancha Indian shambled in and sat down on the floor. I attempted to question him about the diggings, and presently he untied a corner of his neckcloth, and showed me three small fantastically shaped nuggets, which he said his wife had lately found. It ocurred to me they would make interesting souvenirs mounted as scarfpins or bangles, and after some haggling I bought the lot for $4—they weighed altogether something under a quarter of an ounce. I was so disarmed by the apparent simplicity of the Indian that I never thought to examine the nuggets closely until I reached Port Cortez, and then it hardly needed a second look to see that they were not gold at all, but evidently a sort of brass alloy. A few days later I learned from an engineer who came down from the Guayape district that my Indian friend was boasting that he had stolen some yellow 'composition metal' bearing from a stamp mill and melted up a fragment in a home-made clay crucible. In that way he produced his handsome nuggets. If he had put in the same amount of labor at the placers he could easily have washed out $20 worth of gold. That's what I call a natural appetite for crookedness."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Rural Free Delivery by Trolley.

New England will soon have rural free delivery of mail by electric cars. Some farmers and other residents in the northeastern part of Massachusetts and the adjoining New Hampshire territory have taken the initial steps in this matter, the idea having occurred to them a few weeks ago, when they first received an electric car service in place of the stage coach which formerly ran between Exeter and Amesbury. Should this experiment prove successful rural free delivery by electric cars would be introduced in other parts of New England.

Kitchener's Message to Roberts.

A story was told by a distinguished officer whose name, alas! was in the list of killed not long ago. Before Kitchener had made his fame he said to this officer, who was starting with some message for Roberts during one of the Indian campaigns: "Tell Roberts I want a billet under him, and if there is nothing else open, I'll black his boots." Long afterward, when the victor of Khartum was the idol of the British people, the officer met him again and reminded him of his message. "I remember it," said Lord Kitchener, "and it still stands. You can take it to him again."—Household Words.

Willing to Take Something.

A deaf woman figured as the plaintiff in a minor case recently tried at the Durham (England) assizes and after repeated failures to make her understand the proceedings the judge suggested that her counsel should get her to agree to a compromise.

"Ask her what she will take to settle it," said the court.

The lawyer thereupon shouted out very loudly to his client:

"His lordship wants to know what you will take."

She smilingly replied:

"I thank his lordship very kindly, and if it's no inconvenience to him I'll take a little warm ale."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

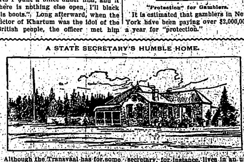
A STATE SECRETARY'S HUMBLE HOME.



Although the Transvaal has for some time been a very wealthy little republic, many of its leading officials are men who live in very humble circumstances. Mr. Reitz, the Transvaal state secretary, for instance, lives in an unpretentious cottage at Pretoria, the accompanying illustration showing the modest little home of this high official.

MINNESOTA JUDGE ARRESTED

Accused of Being a Spy in Japan and Haled Into Court.

In a conversation the other day with some friends in Minneapolis, Judge Canty, late associate chief justice of Minnesota, said he remembered with anything but pleasure an experience he had in the quaint little Japanese city of Modje, when he was on his way to China a few months ago. He was suspected by the military authorities of being a Russian spy and subjected to great annoyance and humiliation. His account of the affair was that he was a passenger from Modje bay. Having unlimited curiosity and considerable time, he went ashore and found much to interest him. He became enthusiastic, and determined to see all that could be seen. Finally he wandered into a parklike place and against the august personage of a representative of the mikado, a military officer of high degree. Without offering any explanation the officer unceremoniously hustled the judge off to the military court and charged him with being in the employ of the Russian government. The news spread and the court room soon filled with natives. Furthermore, a mob outside suggested in order to expedite matters that the prisoner be executed first and tried afterward. The judge was arraigned and pleaded not guilty. He asked for a change of venue to the captain of the steamer, where he could prove he was an American. The motion was denied, but after walking him over the territory he had traversed during the day at 11 o'clock at night they allowed him to depart, hungry, mad and cold.—Chicago Chronicle.

Bodily Distress Destroys Good Temper.

Physicians say that there is no person who can retain his or her mobility of character under long-continued bodily distress. The argument that some invalids and cripples have beautiful dispositions does not apply, for the reason that although such persons imagine themselves in constant pain, there are really long intervals of relief and quietude.

Persons who boast of their blue blood are often distinguished by red noses.

LOST MINES IN MEXICO

RICH DEPOSITS ONCE UNDER SPANISH CONTROL.

That Are Today Unknown to Civilized Man—A Secret That Is Carefully Guarded by the Pima Indians. A Mine Fabulously Rich.

Mexico has many lost mines and many have been the fruitless attempts to rediscover the ore beds that were worked during the period of the Spanish occupation. Among them is the Tarasca, in Sonora. This mine was worked long before the Spaniards arrived in Mexico and the gold and silver fashioned into ornaments by the aborigines. A family of Guaymas had a necklace of flying fish purchased from a Pima Indian chief, who stated that the metal was dug from Tarasca. The mine was worked by various Spaniards and later acquired by the crown of Spain. It was extensively worked, barring certain periods during Apache wars, until the epoch of the French intervention, when the shafts and tunnels are said to have been concealed by the "administrator," Don Juan Moreno, an imperialist, who was forced to seek safety in flight. The location of the mine is today uncertain, though some believe that the mine known as Ubarabo is identical with it. But the lost mine about which tradition gathers thickest is Talopa, the knowledge of which is possessed only by the Pima Indians. Quantities of ore are sold from time to time by the Indians, but all attempts to follow the Indians to the spot where it was found or bribe them to reveal it has failed. Wanting but little in addition to the corn they grow they are imbued with a superstition that if they reveal the locality of the mine they will instantly drop dead. To one unacquainted with the Indian character this statement may seem incredible, but any prospector or miner in the Sierra Madre will affirm its truth. Large sums of money have been offered the Pimas to tell where the mine is. They scorn money, and the only open sesame is mescal, by the liberal use of which the Indian may be made to disclose many things, but so far he has held inviolate his vow to reveal to no mortal man the famous Talopa. But the fascinating secret, in part, has been revealed to a woman. About a year and a half ago an old Pima Indian fell ill in one of the valley pueblos and was cured by a Mexican lady so well known and estimable that her statement is universally accepted. The old Indian returned to his tribe and from time to time sent her rich bits of ore, which assayed thousands of dollars to the ton. All her efforts to induce him to lead her to the mine were futile. He said the Great Spirit would strike him dead if he did. Last summer the plucky senora went to the mountains and lived among the Indians for three months, doctoring the sick, and giving presents of calico and gay ribbons to the women and small quantities of mescal to the men of the tribe. She became convinced beyond doubt that the spot from which the rich ore came was Talopa. The chief admitted that it was the "mina tapada" that was worked when he was a boy. After much persuasion and a gift of a goodly portion of the fiery product of the maguey he directed two women of the tribe to take her to within a few yards of the mine, that she might discover it unaided and save the Indians from the penalty of sudden death for revealing it. Overjoyed at gaining so much, the Mexican woman had two burros packed with provisions and, mounted on mules, the three women set out. They traveled mostly at night, traveling through deep canyons and over lofty mountain passes. The fourth night, some hours after dark, the women led her into a deep canyon, and paused a short distance from a large rock. In the dim moonlight an old arrastra was seen, and across the canyon was a large ore dump, from which opened a tunnel. The women gathered bits of ore from the dump and arrastra, but was hurried away by the Indians, who said they would be killed if they delayed beyond the time given them by the chief. They traveled until the moon went down, rested a few hours and went on before daylight, completely baffling the Mexican woman as to the route they had brought her. They arrived at the pueblo at nightfall, and having taken four days to reach the mine and but one to return the obvious conclusion was that she had been led about in a circle—a curious method of putting at rest the complex Indian conscience.

The Mexican lady made several attempts afterward to find the mine, but failed.

How Justice Field Apologized.

While in a peculiar mood one day the late Justice Stephen J. Field severely reprimanded Page Henry McCall for an offense of which the page was innocent. But the member of the highest court in the land could not be persuaded that his course was not the correct one. McCall left humiliated, but he was a little gentleman and held his peace. Later in the day Justice Field sent for McCall. "Come to my house at 7 o'clock this evening," was all he said. With mingled feelings of doubt and despair the page called at the Field residence at the time specified, was ushered into the jurist's library, and told to hold the books which Mr. Field began, without explanation or ceremony, to take from the shelves. When the veteran lawyer had piled about fifteen volumes into Page McCall's arms, he gruffly remarked: "Henry, I'm very sorry for the way I treated you to-day. I realize that my conduct was unwarranted, and I beg your pardon. Here are some choice books. Keep them as a nucleus for your library. Keep them, young man, and—keep your temper, too, whatever you do! Good night!"—Christian Endeavor World.

Real Friendship.

"How red your face is, Eliza!" "Yes; Mrs. Nibber called on Della while I was there, and I had to sit half an hour over a torn place in the matting right in front of the fire."

ORIGIN OF THE MANOR.

It Was Once Synonymous with Township or Villa.

The term "manor" runs all through the great survey of the eleventh century and was evidently the unit of society which the royal commissioners had in mind. Either as constituent elements of manors or as their feudal possessors, all the rural population of England were ranked. Even since this word has been rescued by the economic historians from the vague, intangible unreality of its use by lawyers and the early historians of law, it has been supposed that its significance in the eleventh century was the same as in later centuries, and that it therefore represented a territorial district as well as a legal conception, being synonymous to this extent with township or villa, saye the International Monthly. That is to say, a manor was a stretch of land with the people on it, over which the lord of the manor possessed judicial and semi-proprietary rights. England was considered to be made up of a multitude of such manors, each of which was, to a considerable extent, a microcosm of the whole nation. The meaning which Prof. Maitland extracts from Domesday Book is a far different one. "A manor is a house against which geld is charged." By a long and skillful analysis of the uses of the term he reaches the conclusion that it had in the eleventh century a distinct, technical signification, and that a manor was simply the place where the government land tax due from certain land and its occupants was paid in one lump sum. The man to whom the government looked for the tax was the holder of the manor. A manor was, therefore, sometimes a single tenement of a few acres; sometimes a whole vill, sometimes a number of holdings scattered in many vills, other manors being represented in the same agricultural groups. It was not, therefore, either an agricultural or a judicial whole, but merely a unit of taxation. If this is so, it has great significance for that most vital of all the questions in the early social history of England still in dispute, whether the mass of the people began in serfdom and only gradually emerged into freedom, as Mr. Seebohm, Prof. Ashley and others, with various reservations suppose; or whether they began in freedom and sunk later into serfdom, as is taken for granted by Freeman, Green and their school.

SCIENTIFIC RECREATION.

Making Milk and Water Change Glasses.

A pretty bit of scientific recreation which comes in handy after dinner is sometimes called by the high-sounding title of "The Revenge of the Daniades," in allusion to the daughters of Danaus, who, as a punishment for their crimes, were condemned to forever draw water with leaky vessels. Fill completely two glasses of exactly the same size and shape, one with water, the other with milk. Stretch over the mouth of the glass containing the water a circular covering of tulle or other thin goods somewhat larger than the glass and previously moistened. Now smooth the lapping over tulle as closely to the glass as possible, and holding the palm of the right hand squarely to the mouth of this glass, seize the stem with the left and turn it quickly upside down, avoiding the entrance of air. Next slide the right hand softly away from underneath, and much to your astonishment, the tulle will remain, sticking to the glass, while not a drop of water will fall out through that exceedingly leaky tissue. You will very soon succeed in this experiment. Hereon folllows the second part: Place your full, but not dripping glass of water, thus turned upside down, but not inside out, over the full glass of milk, and you will soon see little jets of white liquid penetrating the tulle in every direction. It is the milk, progressively mounting the superior glass, while in the same proportion yields water to the lower glass in the opposite direction. At the end of about a quarter of an hour the exchange will be complete, and you will see the lower glass filled with pure, transparent water, while the upper one will be full of white milk. —Exchange.

A Specialist.

The servant question, now that the Porto Rican tariff discussion is out of the way, may be taken up again with renewed interest. A few days ago a well-known Washington lady, being unexpectedly bereft of her kitchen assistance, advertised for a colored woman capable of performing general housework. The first caller in response to the advertisement was a mulatto damsel, bedecked with ribbon and finery. From her airs and graces she might have been a graduate of a seminary. She announced that she had noticed the advertisement, and was desirous of securing employment. "Are you a good cook?" inquired the lady of the house. "No, indeed, I don't cook," was the reply. "Are you a good washer and ironer?" was the next query. "I wouldn't do washing and ironing; it's too hard on the hands," declared the caller. "Can you sweep?" the housewife then wanted to know. "No," was the answer, and it was a positive one. "I'm not strong enough for that." "Well, in the name of goodness, what can you do?" said the lady of the house, exasperated. The placid reply was: "I dusts."—Washington Star.

As Ireland's Special Queen.

During the visit of the Queen to Ireland the prerogative of the Lord Lieutenant was abrogated temporarily. Under the usual official routine Lord Cadogan exercises—nominally at least—regal power. As Viceroy he can confer knighthood, control the action of the commander-in-chief, remove Justices from the Commission of Peace, pardon criminals and suspend various acts. Moreover, presentations at his court are as valid as those made at Buckingham Palace or St. James's. But when the sovereign landed on the other side of St. George's Channel the Vice King was deposed during her stay, and all edicts from the castle were issued in the name of the lady paramount.—New York Press.

NOTES ON SCIENCE

CURRENT NOTES OF DISCOVERY AND INVENTION.

Two New Aids to Comfort and Utility for Use in Business Offices—An Attachment for Chair That Fills Long-Felt Want.

A Petrified Forest.

Mr. Lacey of Iowa, the chairman of the house committee on public lands, is advocating the project of setting aside a certain tract of land in Arizona as a petrified forest, national park. This forest is one of the greatest natural curiosities on the American continent and if properly cared for it will almost rival in interest the wonders of the Yellowstone, the Yosemite and Mount Rainier reservations. The petrified park lies a short distance from the Grand canyon of the Colorado in Apache county. The trees probably grew beside some inland sea. After falling, the cell structure of the wood in the tree was entirely replaced by silica. One of the most remarkable features of the park is a natural bridge forty-five feet in width which spans the canyon. Fifty feet of the tree lies on one side so it is visible for nearly 100 feet. The wood is handsome when polished.

Volcano in Action.

Monte Baldo, between Lake Garda and the valley of the Adige, in Italy, was once the center of volcanic action, but in the early part of the present century this activity had apparently ceased. Last March, however, an indistinct rumbling was heard in the mountains, which seemed to come from the interior of the mountain. Deep fissures formed on the crest, whence hot steam is still ejected from time to time, which melts all the snow in the neighborhood. The indications are similar to the preliminary symptoms which preceded the terrible eruption of Mount Tarawera in New Zealand some thirteen years ago, says the Scientific American.

Underground to Breakfast.

The ingenuity of architects and builders is sometimes severely taxed to provide for the comfort of the dwellers in lofty apartment houses. In New York City plans have been filed for a gigantic building of this kind to stand on Fifth avenue, and to be connected with a well-known restaurant across the street by a tunnel, finely fitted up and lighted, whereby the occupants of the apartment house can go out to their meals in all kinds of weather without the necessity of putting on hats. The only drawback appears to be that they are limited in their choice of a restaurant.

How Birds Migrate.

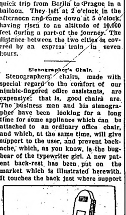
Mr. L. M. Loomis, the California ornithologist, who has been studying the question of bird migration on the Pacific coast, concludes that those which he has observed shape their course by landmarks, and possess no mysterious superhuman faculty for determining direction, such as some persons have imagined that birds are endowed with. When a fog prevails the birds are bewildered and lose their way. In brief Mr. Loomis thinks that bird migration is a habit evolved by education and inheritance and owing its origin to the failure of food in winter.

Quick Time in a Balloon.

Three Prussian officers have made a quick trip from Berlin to Prague in a balloon. They left at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and came down at 5 o'clock, having risen to an altitude of 10,000 feet during a part of the journey. The distance between the two cities is covered by an express train in seven hours.

Stenographer's Chair.

Stenographers' chairs, made with special regard to the comfort of our nimble-fingered office assistants, are expensive; that is, good chairs are. The business man and his stenographer have been looking for a long time for some appliance which can be attached to an ordinary office chair, and which, at the same time, will give support to the user, and prevent backache, which, as you know, is the bugbear of the typewriter girl. A new patent back-rest has been put on the market which is illustrated herewith. It touches the back just where support is most needed, and is supposed to give instant relief to that tired feeling. It can be attached to any chair, and it it costs but little, will doubtless prove very popular.



Renewing the Eiffel Tower.

The gigantic Eiffel Tower, which was the great novelty of the Paris exhibition of 1889, is to be a central figure during the exhibition this year. The company that owns the tower has expended about $200,000 in adorning it and fitting it up with new elevators, restaurants, outlooks, and so forth. The height of this tower, which has proved of some service to science, is 300 meters, or about 984 feet. With the new elevators about 2,000 persons can be carried to the top each hour.

Nature's Winter Storage.

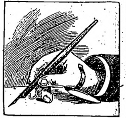
As the result of twenty-nine years of experiments at Rothamsted, England, it is shown that in the winter months more than half of the amount of rain that falls penetrates into the soil and becomes available for the supply of springs, while in the summer only one-quarter of the rainfall is absorbed by the soil. The maximum quantity of water in the soil is at a depth of about 40 inches.

Cape Hatteras' New Light-Ship.

A new lightship of novel design is soon to be moored in the stormy waters of the dreaded Diamond Shoals off Cape Hatteras. It has been found impossible to place a lighthouse there, and the lightships moored on the spot have, one after the other, been torn from their fastenings. The new ship is to be propelled by steam, and furnished with electric flash-lights to be displayed from her masts, 50 feet above water. She will be anchored on the shoals with strong mooring tackle, and in case she is torn loose by a gale can take care of herself with the aid of her powerful engine.

An Aid for Book-keepers.

Bookkeepers and office clerks who are obliged to use a blotter very often will welcome a clever little aluminum blotter holder that fits on the thumb and wrist and makes it practical and convenient to write and blot with the same hand, thus saving time and labor in posting, billing, etc. New blotter sheets can be readily attached when one is used.



Chronic Users of Quicksilver.

In the district of Mernel in Germany the natives are becoming renowned for their misuse of poisonous medical remedies. The ether drinkers are plentiful there, and the quicksilver habit is very common. Some of the men take doses of from five to thirty gramms of the slippery stuff, and boys are said to begin the habit with five gramm installments. Continued indulgence leads to serious chronic blood poisoning, and the result is fatal to the victims. The national health officers are investigating the matter, and will recommend that the sale of quicksilver in that district be prohibited adsolutely.

Recent Inventions.

Large nails can be rapidly pulled by a new implement, having a long lever fitted with a claw at one end, a yoke being mounted close to the claw to support a roughened disk, which is journaled eccentrically, forming a fulcrum for the lever.

An Oklahoma man has patented a pair of shears which are provided with double cutting edges, the blades being semi-circular in cross section and attached to the handles in such a manner that either pair of edges can be brought into position.

To protect thread from soiling a new spool is formed of two disks, having their central portions in contact, with the peripheral portion bulged outward to form a central reel on which the thread is wound through the slot between the outer edges of the disks.

By using a new coffee pot attachment the steam is made to pass through the grounds, a metal tube being secured to the end of the spout and extended through the lid to the interior, with a cloth sack containing the grounds fastened to the inner end of the tube.

An improved clothespin is formed of two equal sections joined at the head by a spring cap, with a steel spring located midway between the ends to allow the split portion to open a short distance when pressed over the line, which increases the grip and prevents the pin splitting.

Fishermen will appreciate a new reel which is attached to a ferrule fitting on the end of the pole, with a spring-controlled drum inside on which the line is wound, a lever being pivoted inside the grip to be pressed by the thumb and wind up the slack line automatically.

A new counting device for registering the score in domino and other games has an upright casing, in which two shafts are journaled with numerical disks on the shafts and a lever to rotate the disks, indicating the standing of each side and ringing a bell at the end of the game.

"The Sign of the Cross."

A novel addition is to be made to the structure of Grace church, San Francisco, in the shape of a cross of electric lights to shine nightly from the tower of the church. The eminence upon which the church stands, and the height of the tower will make the cross visible in every part of the city, and far across the bay. The wires will be so arranged that every side of the symbol will be perfect in form, so that there will be a cross shining to the four points of the compass. The novel display is the gift of Mrs. William H. Crocker, who has not only arranged for its construction at her expense, but has also contributed an endowment for the perpetual maintenance of the light.—Living Church.

Rudely Shattered.

Immense Rocking Stone.

On a piece of land in Old Lyme, Conn., is a rocking stone of the following dimensions: Around the stone north and south, 27 feet 7 inches; east and west, 24 feet 10 inches. This immense stone is so delicately poised that one man can rock it from four to six inches.

Just Like Her Father or the Story of a Burning Love Affair—Selling Stale News—Consolation in Grief—Something Wrong.

Just Like Her Father.

The wooing had progressed splendidly. It had even progressed to a point where she had been won—that is, ostensibly won. If she proved to be a truthful girl, she would in time be his wife. If she were not truthful—well, no man wants a wife who is not truthful. That's the way some men console themselves when they fail to marry.

But she seemed to be truthful, and as he drew her closer to him he whispered:

"And when we are married, dearest, we will have the happiest home in all the wide, wide world!"

"Yes, George," she replied.

"There can never be a harsh word in our home."

"No, George."

"And when I come home tired and worn out with work at the office and the worries of business you'll be kind to me?"

"Y-e-s, George."

"I knew you would. You'll soothe me and put me in better humor?"

"Y-e-e-s; but I say, George!"

"Yes, dearest."

"Why shouldn't you do a little of this yourself?"

"Why, darling—"

"Yes, that's all right. But to come right down to business, as papa says—why shouldn't you also be kind to me when things go wrong? I don't want to do it all, you know. You're not looking for a private nurse, are you?"

"Why, Mabel?"

"When the cook leaves unexpectedly to go to the bedside of her second cousin, you might be just a trifle considerate, you know."

"How strangely you talk, pet."

"Well, they say I'm papa's girl; you know, and I notice when any one tries to make a bargain with him he generally gets some stipulation to his own interest put in, just as a precaution."

* * * *

George and Mabel have now been married exactly five years and three months, and at the moment of going to press have never had a single quarrel!—Tit-Bits.

Those Artful Men!

Mrs. Naggerton—I cannot understand what the attraction of a public dinner is to you men. You can enjoy a good meal at home if you want to, or if not there are plenty of restaurants where you might go, but only the young men seem to take advantage of them.

Mr. Naggerton (absentmindedly)—At a public dinner, my dear, there are no women, don't you see—(he never finished).—Ally Sloper's.

Art Is Long.

Artman—Crayon portraits are abominable. I'd rather be done in oil.

Speckman—Well, I wouldn't. I was done in oil once.

Artman—Ah! but perhaps the one who did it was not a real artist.

Speckman—O! he was an artist in his line, all right. He was a crafty broker.

Content.

"Did you say they made fun of my speech?" said the statesman with the unwavering self-esteem.

"Yes, I'm sorry to annoy you, but ——"

"Oh, it doesn't annoy me. You know you can't be sure anything is a real work of art until somebody burlesques or satirizes it."

A Woman's Question.

"I see," he remarked, as he looked up from his paper, "that the British have recovered that battery of guns."

She had shown her friend over the bijou villa, which she had just taken, and which was very much like a somewhat enlarged doll's house.

"And now, dear, what do you think of it? Isn't it sweet?"

"Yes, indeed," replied the friend; "but what are you going to do with all those little rooms?"

"Oh! I shall let them out, dear."

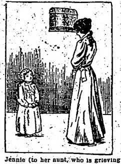
Consolation.



Jennie (to her aunt, who is grieving over the loss of her pet canary)—"Well, auntie, there's one comfort, anyhow, we know he's much better off where he is."

Something Wrong.

Mr. Benny Benedict had been reading his paper in quietude for almost five minutes. Presently he looked up at his wife with an agonized expression of fear and dread.

"What's the matter with the baby?" he cried.

Mrs. Benedict jumped up like a bucking mule. "Good gracious, nothing I hope!"

"There must be. I feel inwardly that there is something grievously wrong with the pet."

"Why, Benny—oh, why?"

"He isn't howling!"—Ally Sloper.

Willing to Show 'Em.

An honest young man who had escaped a great peril by an act of heroism, was much complimented for his bravery.

One lady said: "I wish I could have seen your feat."

Whereupon he blushed and stammered, and finally pointing to his pedal extremities, said: "Well, here they be, mum."

About the Size of It.

Johnny—She's out in the back yard whittling.

Father—Are you sure she is whittling?

Johnny—Yes, sir; she's trying to sharpen a lead pencil.—Chicago News.

Mere Matter of Figures.

He entered the cheap restaurant and took a seat at one of the tables. "Will you have a 25 cent dinner or a 50 cent one, sir?" inquired the waiter.

"Is there any real difference?"

"Certainly, sir."

"What is it?"

"Twenty-five cents, sir."

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

SOME GOOD STORIES FOR OUR JUNIOR READERS.

Trick on "Old" Jones—Where Is Morrell Island?—Jimmy Dooling, Aged 13, Saved Four Lives—Twelve Things for Girls to Remember.

Her Weary Wooden Soldier.

My wooden head is cracked across,
I've lost my youthful charms;
I've lost, alack, one wooden leg,
And both my wooden arms.

Full many a fight have I been in
'Twixt Fred and brother Hugh;
I've been officer and private
(I've been ammunition, too).

I've been used to poke the fire with;
I've been dipped into the ink;
And I've made a perilous journey
Adown the kitchen sink.

I've been drowned, and I've been married;
I've been buried and dug up;
I've been "worried" round the garden
By that seven months' old pup.

In short, this mortal life is such
That, though I'm truly brave,
I long with all my wooden heart,
For just a quiet grave.

Jimmy Dooling Saved Lives.

Jimmy Dooling, 13 years old, of 38 Front street, New York, is aggrieved and the whole of the First ward, including the police, sympathize with him, and it is something for the police to sympathize with a small boy in the First ward. Although so small in stature that he looks not more than 9 years old, Jimmy has rescued at least five persons from drowning. "An' at dat," he said last night to a Sun reporter, "I hain't got no medal fer wot I done. I hope dis one'll git it fer me." Dooling's fifth rescue was achieved yesterday afternoon on the remains of pier 5, East river. The pier is being torn away, and the boys from the houses near by have been playing tag in it, jumping from pile to pile. Jimmy Dooling was "it" yesterday. He was chasing James Hart, 12 years old, of 12 Stone street, when Hart slipped and fell into the water. Hart cannot swim, and Jimmy Dooling knew this, and plunged in after him. He managed to boost Hart upon one of the piles far enough to enable a workman on the pier to reach down and pull him up. Then Dooling climbed out himself and went home to dry his clothes. Jimmy Hart was put to bed, and his father, who is a policeman attached to the Old Slip station, promised him a whipping if he ever played on the pier again unless Jimmy Dooling was there. Jimmy Dooling acquired the habit of life saving last summer. It began when his pet dog fell into the river. Jimmy jumped in and brought the animal safe to shore. Within two weeks he had pulled two small boys out of the river. Then he stopped life-saving until January last, when he rescued 10-year-old Michael Tague, as the Sun related at the time. A month later he jumped into the icy water again and pulled out a small boy whose name Dooling can not remember. "If ever a kid ought to get a medal," said Capt. Killilea of the Old Slip station last night, "that kid deserves one." Policeman Quinn of the Old Slip precinct has a reputation as a life-saver, too. Quinn has more than fifty rescues to his credit. Last night two girls stopped to admire him while the Sun reporter was talking to Jimmy Dooling about his rescues. All the boys in the neighborhood crowded around the youthful hero. Quinn looked at the crowd and scattered it quickly with many threats. "He's gettin' jealous," said one of the girls, looking at Quinn. "Dat kid is stealin' his business." Quinn looked disgusted and Jimmy Dooling grinned.—Exchange.

Trick on "Old" Jones.

Jimmy and Tommy Bright lived in a little New England village, where the boys hang May baskets every May day. It is an exciting time of year, and the affair is conducted with all the secrecy which makes the sending of valentines such good fun.

For weeks before May day mothers complain of the snips and scraps of cardboard and fancy paper which litter the floor after the boys have spent an evening making their May baskets, and, when the day draws near, every carefully hoarded penny is spent for little gifts with which to fill it, and every little maid is on tiptoe of expectation, hoping that she will not be forgotten when they are distributed.

Well, on the May day I am telling you about Jimmy and Tommy had their baskets, and they were very pretty ones, too. They were covered with colored tissue paper, cut in little strips and curled and puffed until they looked fluffy and light enough to blow away with a breath, but they couldn't do that, for they were filled with candy and nuts, and topped off with a big orange.

Jimmy never told me the name of the little girl for whose sake he had taken so much pains, and it don't really matter, for it has nothing to do with my story.

That evening, while the boys were on their way to the place where they were to meet the other boys, for they always go in companies, Jimmy said:

"I wish we could hang something on old Jones' door."

"Let's," said Tommy.

Now the boys didn't want to hang a nice basket, such as they were carefully carrying, but something to annoy old Jones, for the May-basket custom is absurd, much as the sending of valentines is, and if the boys have a grudge against one of their neighbors they like to play some joke on him on that night.

"What can we do?" asked Jimmy.

"I don't know," said Tommy. "What can we?"

Jimmy thought a while. Then he exclaimed:

"We'll get a bag from Johnny Hopkins and catch old Jones' dog and put him in it and hang the bag."

"That's just the thing," exclaimed Tommy; so when they met the other boys they told them the plan they had made, which was just naughty enough to please their mischievous companions.

They made their rounds and hung all their pretty baskets, but they were in too great a hurry to get into mischief to hide and wait to see if the gifts reached the hands they were intended for, and when the last one was gone Johnny Hopkins ran into the barn and came back with a large potato sack.

They hurried to old Jones' house, and crept up cautiously to the front gate.

They were lucky enough to find the dog, which was of a good-natured, good-for-nothing kind, and easily coaxed him away. But when they tried to put him in the bag he objected strongly and barked and yelped and twisted and turned so vigorously that, at last, he slipped out of their hands.

"There, now, our fun's spoiled, and it's all your fault, Jimmy Bright," said one of the big boys. Jimmy made no reply, but he couldn't see just how it could be his fault when he was but one of the half dozen or more that were trying to hold the dog; but Jimmy was always full of ideas, and one occurred to him then.

"Say, boys. Put me in the bag."

"No, don't," exclaimed Tommy. "Old Jones'll lick you."

"No, he won't. I'll tel him I was afraid the boys'd lick me if I didn't do it," said Jimmy.

But Jimmy didn't have to tell the lie. Old Jones, though cross and stingy, knew boys pretty well, and when he heard the dog bark and yelp he suspected some trick and looked out to see what was going on. So when he heard a loud knock at his door and heard the boys scampering down the walk he opened the door quickly and saw the bag lying on the top step. It lay before him so temptingly that he did not take the trouble to examine its contents, but putting his foot under it carefully he sent it flying to the ground.

Jimmy was not hurt much, but he was lame and sore for a week, and he never wanted to play dog again.

Where Is Morrell Island?

The United States steamer Iroquois is about to start in search of a lost island in the middle of the Pacific ocean. This island, called Morrell, is supposed to be situated in N. lat. 29 deg. 55 min. and E. lon. 174 deg. 30 min. It was discovered in 1825 by a man named Morrell, according to a report made by him when he returned home. He represented it to be so low that it was almost level with the water, and that it was about four miles in circumference. But later navigators have declared their inability to find it. Map makers placed it on their charts, and it is still kept on official maps issued for the guidance of sailors. The danger that ships might be wrecked on its reefs if there were nothing on the charts to indicate its presence in that locality has prevented its removal from the map. It is represented to be nearly on the line between Honolulu and Yokohama. But Capt. Cooksey of the transport Grant, who recently arrived at San Francisco, reports that on February 6 he sailed directly over the place where the island is supposed to be, and that he saw no sign of land within a radius of twenty-five miles. It requires a careful survey to determine whether a small island like that really exists or not. Defects in chronometers and errors in calculations may account for mistakes in locating such a small tract of land in the middle of a vast ocean, and in the days of Capt. Morrell this liability to err was much greater than it is at present.

Recent trade developments in the Pacific ocean have caused the hydrographic officers of the navy department to inquire with more care and deeper interest into the existence of small islands of this kind, which may be an obstacle in the path of navigation. Many are kept on official charts as an extra precaution, but they are removed as soon as their mythical character is shown. It is for the purpose of determining in a definite way the truth in regard to Morrell island that the Iroquois will be sent on its cruise. It will make an accurate survey of all that part of the Pacific, and upon the report it brings back will depend whether Morrell island retains its place on the official charts or not.

For Girls to Remember.

Some one has suggested twelve things that every girl can learn before she is twelve. Not every one can learn to play or sing or paint well enough to give pleasure to her friends; but the following "accomplishments" are within everybody's reach: Shut the door, and shut it softly. Keep your own room in tasteful order. Have an hour for rising, and rise. Learn to make bread as well as cake. Never let a button stay off twenty-four hours. Always know where your things are. Never let a day pass without doing something to make somebody comfortable. Never come to breakfast without a collar. Never go about with your shoes unbuttoned. Speak clearly enough for everybody to understand. Never fidget or hum so as to disturb others. Never fuss or fret.

Little Teasers.

Here is a little exercise in punctuation that a normal school young woman recently brought home, to puzzle her father: It is not and I said but or. Looks a little confused, doesn't it? Simple though. A few quotation marks and two commas will fix it all right. For instance: "It is not 'and,' I said, 'but 'or.' " Here is a still simpler catch that may bother you some: "All 0." Not much in it, perhaps, but enough to make it troublesome. Too hard? And yet it's "Nothing after all."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Papa in for It.

"Mamma, what would you do if that big vase in the parlor should get broken?" said Tommy. "I should whip whoever did it," said Mrs. Banks, gazing severely at her little son. "Well, then, you'd better begin to get up your muscle," said Tommy, "coz papa's broke it."

Honesty.

Polarized Light and a Camera Microscope Make a Sure Test.

State chemist J. A. Hummel has hit upon a new scheme which, he thinks, will surely bring the butterine dodgers to time. By a combination of prisms, microscopes and lenseless camera with a sensitive plate, Mr. Hummel has developed a plan which must show the difference between butters and pseudo butters to every amateur eye at a moment's glance. Thus, it is hoped, the photographs will carry weight with a jury where chemical formulae failed. When asked to explain the process of examination by photographic methods, Mr. Hummel said: "The simple fact to be considered is that pure butter as made in the dairies or at the creamery contains only amorphous fat. Any heating process such as is followed in renovation and running in of milk immediately generates fat crystals. In the oleomargarine the crystals from the meat fats added to cottonseed oil are very thick. Now all we need to do is to place a sample of suspected butter in a glass slide and then under the microscope. We put one nickel prism above and one below in such a way that the light rays cannot pass through, acording to a law of physics. Now we push the tube of a camera directly over the head of the microscope and insert a plate at the other end. No direct light, you see, can pass through, that is, as long as these two prisms are properly placed. But according to the laws of light, as soon as we get a third prism, such as a crystal, which you know is of prismatic shape, the light again finds its way through. Consequently, if the butter is free from crystals no direct rays and only a dull translucent light will pass through, while otherwise bright and dark spots will come together and form the peculiarly shaded picture you see in the oleomargarine sample. The proof is simple, absolute and convincing."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

MAN WITH THE DRUM.

Is the Most Necessary Personage in Street Procession.

The man with the drum is a very important individual these days of street processions. He keeps things moving and men, from lagging behind quickstep time and is altogether a thoroughly indispensable person in a parade. The band only plays at intervals, but the drum beats steadily on. Victory in battle is often due to the man with the drum, but he sounds the summons to march on and the inspiration of the tap fires the spirit and inflames the soul and sets the heyday in the blood rioting hotly with no thought or power to attend the decision of the judgment. The man with the drums at the Auditorium is always the most interesting character in the ensemble of the orchestra. High in the center he stands among his fellows and his arms fly this way and that among the kettledrums and his flexible wrists and fingers are in perpetual motion, keeping the padded drumsticks going. In some parts of the Wagner music he would sound the alarm of his beat with a savage satisfaction and in the vorspiel to the Meistersinger his famous bombardment never failed to bring a smile of mirthful enjoyment to the generally impassive countenance of the leader of the orchestra.—Chicago Chronicle.

A MISJUDGED CLASS.

Men and Women Who Make Up the Opera Chorus.

In the gay costumes of the stage we do not get a very good idea of what manner of men and women those belonging to the opera chorus are, says the Woman's Home Companion. At a rehearsal we see it all at a glance. They are foreigners to their finger tips, Dagoes, we should call them in the disrespectful language of our every-day life. But they are undoubtedly very respectable and certainly very hardworking. They appear at every performance, at every rehearsal. I really believe that there is no class of people outside the sweatshops of New York that works harder or more incessantly. It is study, rehearse, perform every day and almost every night. There is no let-up on them, yet they seem to enjoy their work and their life. Indeed, I am sure they enjoy both, for they are inspired by a love for the art which they serve zealously, though humbly. I have read slanderous stories about these hard-working people. Those who give the stories currency should themselves be pilloried; those who believe the stories should be heartily ashamed of themselves. Theirs is hard work and honest work and assists to make the world more beautiful and life more happy.

Mother's Memorial to Son.

Mrs. Bagley, mother of Worth Bagley, who was ensign on the torpedo-boat Winslow and killed off Cardenas, Cuba, during the Spanish war, has sent to the Bath Iron Works plans for a handsome memorial tablet, which will be placed on the torpedo-boat now under construction at the Bath Iron Works in his honor. The tablet will be of bronze in the shape of a shield. The border will represent cannon balls, and on it will be the name Worth Bagley. On the lower part will be an eagle surmounting a shield and sword, while in the center will be the dates of his birth and death. It will be placed on the conning tower of the boat.

Missouri Apples.

Missouri apples that have been kept in cold storage since early last fall have been repacked and shipped in refrigerator cars to New York. There the fruit goes into the cold storage end of a steamer. It is supposed that cold storage will keep the apples until they are wanted at the Paris exposition. Missouri is cultivating European trade for its apples.

Fine Intentions.

"I am determined," said the man who is proud of his boy, "that this youngster shall acquire correct habits of speech." "The best way to do this is to see that he has good examples." "Of course, and that's what I'm going to do. I don't intend to let him say 'don't' and I ain't going to tolerate the use of that vulgarism 'ain't.' "—Washington Star.

WEDNESDAY, MAY, 30, 1900.

Deeded to the Lord.

The most remarkable deed ever drawn may be seen on the private estate of a resident of Worcester in Massachusetts. It is chiseled on a rock on what is known as Rattlesnake hill, situated near the boundary line between Worcester and Leicester.

Old Solomon Parsons, who was widely known in Worcester county as an eccentric character, and particularly as a crank on the subject of religion, paid William C. Hall $125 for a parcel of land, and directed Hall to convey it by deed to the Almighty. In order that the greatest possible publicity might be given to his disposition of the property Parsons had the deed of transfer cut into the rock verbatim et literatim.

During his lifetime Parsons is said to have made several attempts to have the deed recorded, but the register of deeds, who was aware of his eccentricity, each time put him off with the explanation that no official record was required in the case of a transfer of real estate to the Almighty.

Parsons died intestate several years ago, and the administrator included the parcel of land on Rattlesnake hill in the inventory of the old gentleman's estate which he filed in the probate court. A wag of a lawyer raised the question of title, but the judge decided in the favor of the administrator.—New York Journal.

Anecdotes of Colonel Ege.

Colonel Ege was a famous character in the early days. Although living in Doniphan county, he was often in Atchison, followed by a pack of hounds. He was a high toned southern gentleman, with a kind heart.

One day while returning home from this city he came across a man whose wagon was stuck in the mud in Independence creek bottom. Colonel Ege at once started in to help the man pry out his wagon with a fence rail. While both were working away Ege became angry and yelled to the man, "Lift, you son of a gun; you are not lifting a pound." The man picked up the end gate of the wagon and split it over Ege's head, laying him up for three weeks. Ege had his hat off when he was struck and was so bald before coming to Kansas that he was known as the Bald Eagle of Maryland.

Ege always carried a pistol and was always trying to shoot through somebody's hat without hitting him. One day, at the Independence creek ferry, he shot at a man, but aimed a little low and creased him. But Ege was always a gentleman; he took the man into his home and tenderly cared for him until he recovered.—Atchison Globe.

Spanish Proverbs.

Proverbs uncomplimentary to the fair sex are common in Spain. "A woman, like a pavement, should be well trampled on to be kept in order." "A woman is like a candle. Twist her neck if you wish her to be good;" "Beware of a bad woman, and do not trust a good one;" "Crying in a woman and limping in a dog is all a sham;" "A cock crows on his own dunghill, but hens cackle everywhere" (this in reference to the supposed garrulousness and inquisitive disposition of the sex); "Show me a magpie without a spot and I will show you a woman without a fault." In English counterparts are not wanting, for example:

A woman, a dog and a walnut tree—
The more you beat them the better they be.

Mothers-in-law and stepmothers come in for a good deal of sarcasm. Some of the proverbs in regard to them will not stand translation. Of a man who is accounted lucky they say, "If he fell from the roof of a house, he would fall on the top of his mother-in-law."—Chambers' Journal.

The Arch Destroyer.

"He is a mean, sneaking, underhanded element, the moth is," protests John Kendrick Bangs in The Woman's Home Companion. "Fire has a decent sense of the proprieties. Moths have none at all. When fire attacks you, it smokes and crackles and hisses and roars and lets you know in clarion tones that it has come. The moth steals upon you in the dead of night and chews up your best trousers, gorges himself upon your wife's furs, tickles his palate with your swellest flannel golf shirt, munches away upon your handsomest rug, punches holes in your best sofa cushions with his tusks and then silently folds his tent and steals away without so much as a thank you for his meal. For unmitigated meanness commend me to the moth! Alongside of the moth and his nefarious work even a book agent pales into insignificance and an unpaid grocer's bill becomes an absolute pleasure."

Our First Woman Editor.

According to the Hartford Courant, that paper in 1777 was owned and edited and managed by a woman, whose name comes down to modern days as "the Widow Watson." She had "exclusive charge" of the journal. After a couple of years Mrs. Watson married a leading citizen of Hartford, and after that date she no doubt let him advise and assist in the conduct of the paper. But she holds the record for the first woman editor in the country.

Sacrilegious.

An urchin in a country parish in Scotland, having been told by his parents to read a newspaper aloud to them, began to do so in the usual drawling manner of the parish school. He had not proceeded far when his mother stopped him short, exclaiming: "You rascal! Hoo dare ye read a newspaper wi' the Bible twang?"—London Telegraph.

Dealers in charcoal in Havana are said never to have yellow fever, while in lay circles it is advised always to have it about during its prevalence, because of its absorbing properties, it is presumed.

BURR'S FIGHT AGAINST FATE.

Just as Success Returned the Crushing Sorrows of His Life Came.

"Aaron Burr was 61 years old when he resolved once more to battle with fortune," writes William Perrine in The Ladies' Home Journal. "Going quietly into New York, he opened an office for the practice of law and in a fortnight had earned $2,000 in fees. But hardly had he written to his daughter about his luck when there came from South Carolina the news that her beautiful boy, who had been the idol of the ambitious statesman, was dead.

"But there was in reserve for Burr a still heavier blow. Toward the close of the year 1812 Theodosia Allston made preparations to visit her father in New York. Passage was engaged on the schooner the Patriot for Theodosia, her physician and her maid, and the lovely woman was radiant with the expectation of meeting her father within the next five or six days. The Patriot sailed from Charleston out into the ocean in Christmas week, and not a vestige of her was ever again seen, and it is surmised—but nothing is known as to her fate—that she foundered off the coast of Hatteras.

"Day after day and long after all hope had been abandoned there might be seen on the Battery at New York the lonely and unhappy father, peering far down the bay as if he were scanning the sea for a sail. Of his agony Aaron Burr gave the world but little view. He had schooled himself in the habit of never exhibiting his emotions, but in one of his letters he declared that he felt as if he had been severed from the human race."

VIOLIN MUSIC.

Its Peculiar and Varied Effect on Wild Animals.

The violin was used recently with interesting results in experiments with all sorts of living creatures. First it was played before a tarantula. She paid no attention whatever to it. But a nest of scorpions became intensely excited and wiggled frantically.

A cobra showed remarkable susceptibility. She was sleeping soundly when the experimenters approached her, but the first tone awakened her, and she raised her head. As the music swelled she continued to rise till she was standing straight as a pillar, supported only by her tail. Every change in tempo and pitch had effect. The pizzicato made her puff her entire body, swift waltz music caused her to erect her ugly hood to its fullest size, and a sudden dissonance made her wind and twist her body as if she were in real agony.

The polar bear tried to dance to the sounds of the instrument. At least he swayed his body rhythmically and made a rumbling sound which portrayed deep measure. The grizzlies and the lions moved their paws and the lions their tails also in time with the music. It happened that a string snapped, with its peculiar, sharp smack, just as the player had begun to perform before the cage of a hyena. That poor animal at once hunched its back up, drew its tail between its legs and crouched, trembling, in the farthest corner of the cage. The elephant and the ostrich were delighted by soft tones and appeared to suffer true distress from loud and sharp notes.—New York Press.

A Decided Opposition.

On one occasion, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, when Booker T. Washington was in Chicago, he stopped for a day in one of the hotels. He was pointed out to William, an old waiter, who had been in the hotel for a long time. William was delighted to get a glimpse of the great man of his race and was never tired of telling about it after that. One of the regular boarders is a stanch friend of William and a liberal "tipper."

"William," said the boarder next morning, putting on a serious face, "I met Mr. Washington yesterday, and I asked him what he thought of 'tipping.' He is opposed to it."

The boarder stood with his hand insinuatingly in his change pocket. William's face fell and settled into despairing gloom.

"Well, boss," the waiter said, shaking his head emphatically, "if dat is de posishun of Mistah Washington I'se unalt'ably opposed to it."

Took No Chances.

Samuel Clough, who edited The New England Almanac at the very beginning of the eighteenth century, was a good example of a prophet who intends to make no mistakes.

"Perhaps," says he, predicting the weather from Jan. 16 to the 22d, 1702, "it will be very cold weather if it frese by the fireside or on the sunny side of a fence at noon."

In April he hazards: "Perhaps wet weather if it rains. Now fair weather if the sun shines. Windy or calm."

And in July he ventures a small advertisement for the town of his residence:

If now the weather do prove fair,
People to Cambridge do repair.

The Voice in High Altitudes.

Generally speaking, races living at high altitudes have weaker and more highly pitched voices than those living in regions where the supply of oxygen is more plentiful. Thus, in this country, among the Indians living on the plateaus between the ranges of the Andes, at an elevation of from 10,000 to 14,000 feet, the men have voices like the women and the women like the children, and their singing is a shrill monotone.

The Effect.

Poppinjay—What did your father say when he saw me kissing you in the hall last night? Was he very angry?

Melissa Ann—Oh, no; pa wasn't mad a bit. It only made him sick, so he told ma.—Boston Transcript.

The Boy Was Benefited.

"The other afternoon," said the man in the box office of a theater, "a boy came to me and said, 'Are these any good?' and I took from him two front row seats for that night which had been torn into a hundred pieces or so and then cleverly pasted together again. 'Oh, yes, my child. But how did this strange accident happen to the tickets?'

"The boy replied: 'Why, papa came home with them last night and showed them to mamma, and he seemed to be in such good humor somehow that mamma thought it would be a good time then to tell him how she owed over $100 for provisions. She told him of it, but he got so mad that he said that every night now he wouldn't come home till after 12 o'clock, and he told me for heaven's sake when I got married to look out for a sensible woman. All the time mamma laughed, and he was getting madder, and so he said she wouldn't go to the theater with him after that, and he tore the tickets up and rushed out somewhere alone. He ain't back yet either, but mamma don't care. I picked up the pieces off the carpet and pasted them together, and if you'll exchange the tickets for matinee ones I guess I'll come down on Saturday with some other fellow and take in the show.'

"I gave other tickets to the candid kid, and he walked away very well pleased with himself."—Philadelphia Record.

TIME AND SPACE are practically annihilated by the ocean cables and land telegraph systems which now belt the circumference of Old Earth in so many different directions. "Foreign parts" are no longer foreign in the old meaning of the term. Europe, Africa, Asia, are "next door" to us. What happens there to-day we know to-morrow—if we read THE CHICAGO RECORD, whose Special Cable Correspondents are located in every important city in the world outside, of the United States. No other American newspaper ever attempted so extensive a service; and it is supplemented by the regular foreign news service of The Associated Press. For accurate intelligence of the stirring events which are shaking the nations—of wars and rumors of wars—of the threatening dissolution of old governments and the establishment of new—of the onward sweep of the race in all parts of the world—the one medium of the most satisfactory information is the enterprising, "up-to-date" American newspaper, THE CHICAGO RECORD.

Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's paper addressed to college girls in the June Ladies' Home Journal should have the widest possible reading. It is the viewpoint of a scholar and physician on "When the College is Hurtful to a girl." The social, domestic and business life of Hetty Green is strongly pictured in "The Richest Woman in America," and "The Passion Play This Year" tells of the performances and of the players who take the chief roles in the great religious drama given every ten years at Oberammergau. Ian Maclaren writes on "The Minister and His Vacation," and Mrs. Burton Kingsland on "Correct Letter Writing." Rudyard Kipling's "Just so" story telling how the kangaroo came by his long hind legs, is extremely funny. Julia Magruder's capital new serial is begun in the June Journal. She calls it "The Voice in a choir." There are several notable pictorial features: a page drawing, "The Auction at a Farm," by A. B. Frost: a group of photographs showing "Sol Smith Russell in his summer home"; the third installment of through Picturesque America; an apron worked by Mary, Queen of Scots, while awaiting execution and "Cottage Chambers." The correct thing in women's wear, articles on cocking and other themes pertaining to the home are included in the practical features of the June Journal. WASHINGTON LETTER.

Regular Correspondent.

The War Department has sent to the Senate an answer to its resolution adopted more than four months ago, asking for an itemized account of expenditures in Cuba. The answer, though somewhat extended, is by no means satisfactory to those who wish to know just what is going on down there. But its revelations, so far as they go, are startling. For instance, one item sent in is for $3,000 to Gov. Gen. Brooke for house rent for one year. This is in addition to the $7,500 which he drew as an army officer, and the $7,000 allowed him as additional salary from the Cuban funds, so that his income, which is also the income of Gov. Gen. Wood, reached $18,000 a year an amount larger than is allowed to the Ambassador at the Court of St. James, and in fact, larger than any salary allowed by the United States except that of the President. The total salaries for the island for six months aggregate $1,208,535, more than one-third of the total cost of the island and this does not include $1,377,000 for unskilled labor, and includes nothing paid to the United States officers and troops. Another item is some $364,000 for building a railway less than six miles long over almost level ground, with no payment for the right of way. The other statements, especially those concerning the Post Office are quite as extravagant. Moved by the sharp criticism passed upon the statement, Assistant Secretary Micklejohn gave out an interview intended to break its force. In this he asserted that the total expenditures in Cuba for 1899 would not exceed $11,793,740. This positive statement might well be accepted as an accurate account of the disbursements, were it not for the fact that the Assistant Secretary of War, in making it public, evidently overlooked the fact that the Secretary had previously reported to Congress what purported to be a truthful statement of the same expenditures, in which he placed them at $14,085,805. In other words, the more statements are given out, the clearer it becomes that the Department really knew nothing of the way things were going in Cuba, but was content to sit quiet and let the Rathbones and the Neeleys run matters for the benefit of their own pockets.

Notice.

The Mission Friends Sewing Society will meet at Mr. A. Soderbergs' Wednesday, not Thursday, afternoon June 6th. Meet at Dr. Blomburghs and go from there to Mr. Soderbergs place. All are cordially invited to attend.

Climate and Crop Bulletin.

For the week ending May 28, 1900.

The temperatures during the week have been seasonable. There were local rains in many parts of the state, on different days, most of them being on the 23rd, 24th and 25th, but with a very few exceptions they were merely passing showers, which gave only a momentary relief to the drouth, which is now very serious. From a little distance it appears that the early wheat and oats continue healthy and vigorous notwithstanding the dry weather, but it is said by several correspondents that a close examination in some localities discloses the fact that the process of stooling is checked or entirely stopped, and that in places the stools already started are drying up. The late sows grains show the effect of the drouth more than those which secured a good start under better conditions early in the season. Barley is feeling the need of moisture, and winter rye is very thin, and it is heading short. Early sown flax, corn and potatoes are doing fairly well, but with stands that are not the best. Late planted corn is not coming up well, some of it lying in the dry soil unsprouted. New ground breaks up dry and dusty, and flax sown in it will not germinate till rain comes. Pastures are generally poor. Grass for hay is at a standstill, and it is certain that the hay crop is much shortened. Strawberries are setting fruit well, but there must be abundant rain to bring a crop. There are some who still believe that copious rains, within a short time, will insure good crops of all the grains.

Furniture polish which gives a soft oily finish to furniture and wood work is made of one scant ounce of linseed oil, one full ounce of turpentine, and three-fourths of an ounce of cider vinegar. Shake it until thoroughly mixed, rub the furniture with it, allow it to stand a short time, and then polish it well with a soft dry flannel cloth.

More Twine.

Owing to the great demand for binding twine by our farmer friends, it has been decided by Warden Reeve that the output of twine at the prison shall be increased about five hundred thousand pounds, which will in many instances fill a long felt want for the farmers. The warden informs us that this supply can be furnished by running an hour or two extra at night, which will not be a severe tax upon the laborers. There were quite a large number of farmers in our county, as well as throughout the state, who were unable to secure twine, owing to the large number of orders ahead. Many of the unfortunates can now be supplied by placing their orders with Warden Reeve at once.—Stillwater Gazette.

I consider it not only a pleasure but a duty I owe to my neighbors to tell about the wonderful cure effected in my case by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I was taken very badly with flux and procured a bottle of this remedy. A few doses of it effected a permorent cure. I take a pleasure in recommending it to others suffering from that dreadful disease.—J. W. Lynch, Dorr, W. Va. This remedy is sold at The Imperial Drug Store.

The ancients believed that rheumatism was the work of a demon within a man. Any one who has had an attack of sciatic or inflammatory rheumatism will agree that the infliction is demoniac enough to warrant the belief. It has never been claimed that Chamberlain's Pain Balm would cast out demons, but it will cure rheumatism, and hundreds bear testimony to the truth of this statement. One application relieves the pain, and this quick relief which it affords is alone worth many times its cost. For sale by The Imperial Drug Store.

Her Heart's Secret

Or Under a Spell.

By Jean Warner.

CHAPTER XXII—(Continued.)

"I will be silent, if you wish it, sir," answered Herbert, who realized what a struggle this conciliatory tone cost his father. "I will be silent, but that is all I can yield, even to your wishes. My heart will ever be the same, and every effort in my power will be made to unravel the mystery that surrounds this unhappy girl's fate; for my opinion is unalterable that she met her death in shielding me from a shot that would have bereft you of a son."

Mr. Clive started, and a sudden tremor of alarm broke the stern repose of his face.

After a moment he spoke again, but with evident perturbation:

"I have long wished you to take a trip to Europe—a tour of at least a year. I think that, under all the circumstances, you could choose no better time than the present."

"I understand you, sir," answered Herbert, bitterly. "You think I am a child still—that I can be diverted by a change of scene—that in other climes I will learn to forget. Well, I will go, when I find that all is hopeless here. Then indeed," he added, in a lower tone "I must go elsewhere, or die here of despair. I believe—I know that you mean kindly, sir, and I—I will go, in a fortnight from to-day."

And with this promise Mr. Clive was forced to be content.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Was It a Dream?

"And your brother is really going abroad?" asked Miss Marian Grey, who had been spending a social evening with her dearest Fannie. "Dear me! Isn't the fancy a sudden one? I am sure he had no idea of such a thing a month ago."

"Perhaps not," answered Fannie, listlessly. "Papa thinks it best for him to travel awhile. He is looking badly."

"Wretchedly!" answered Miss Marian, with consoling emphasis. "I never saw any one so changed in a little while; indeed, every one is talking about it. As Miss Felicia was saying, he looks ten years older within the last two weeks."

Fannie sighed. She herself looked pale and changed and sorrowful. This first tempest-shock had been a rude one to a flower so tenderly reared. For the last ten days she had kept her room, exhausted by the passionate bursts of grief that had left her nervous and prostrated.

Miss Marian was her first visitor. Her repeated entreaties for admittance to her dearest friend could no longer be refused; and, for the last hour she had been seated by Fannie's sofa, torturing the poor girl by a clever cross-questioning, masked by the most gushing sympathy.

"The queerest reports are going round," said Miss Marian, as she shook out her lace handkerchief. "The most absurd stories are told and believed; and, of course, as you may imagine, my dear, I am a regular victim for all the newsmongers in the neighborhood. My intimacy here is so well known. Does your head ache? Do let me bathe it; papa says I have a mesmeric touch. Yes, indeed, I can't tell you how many calls I have had that I can attribute to nothing in the world but curiosity. I offended the Leslies terribly yesterday by informing them, bluntly, once for all, that there was no use in asking me any questions regarding this wretched affair, for I knew nothing about it whatever, and wished to know nothing. You have to be rudely positive to some people; or they will bore you to death."

Fannie thought so, too; but she felt too weak and wretched just now to be "rudely positive" about anything.

"Indeed, you know all that I can tell you, Marian," she said, wearily. "There is a mystery about poor, darling Sybil's loss that none of us can solve. She is gone from us—that is all we know"—Fannie's voice choked with sobs as she spoke—"gone from us forever."

"Now, Fannie," said Marian, reproachfully, "you are giving way again. It is really a rebellion against Providence to mourn this way; and though, of course, my dear, it may seem cruel to say such a thing now, I can't help thinking you will feel, after a while, that one who so persistently refused you her confidence, who closed her heart to your gaze, was unworthy, in the truest sense, of the name of friend."

"Hush, Marian!" Fannie rose from her reclining posture, and gazed upon her "friend" with flashing eyes. "I will not hear a word from you against Sybil. You never liked her. I know it! You would have poisoned my mind against her long ago, if I had listened to you: but I knew her—aye, and you—too well! What if she did refuse me her confidence? I never asked it. What if she did close her heart to my gaze? I saw enough of it to know that it was pure, and true, and noble and worthy—aye, far more than worthy—of my warmest love and trust!"

"You are easily satisfied," said Miss Marian, with her mocking little laugh. "I don't aspire to such high-flown sentiments, but I must say I prefer knowing a little about my friends' antecedents, especially when the world at large looks upon them so dubiously. People do say that if a jealous lover, whom she had flung aside for the more tempting prize, had not interfered, your dear friend would soon have claimed a dearer title still."

"And I would gladly have given it to her," answered Fannie, warmly. "The dearest wish of my heart would have been realized if I could have called Sybil sister as well as friend. She is the only one I have ever seen, lovely and true, and noble enough to be my brother's wife."

"I won't dispel your illusion, dear," said Miss Marian, rising to go. "Think and feel as you please; but, if you will take an old friend's advice, keep your thoughts and feelings to yourself. People will judge by appearances, and I am afraid that it would have taken more than the dignity of the name of Clive to have bolstered up the very shaky antecedents of your friend, Miss Wraye. But as I told Miss Felicia last evening, when she was wondering that your papa could have been so blind, it's no affair of mine. Good-bye, dear. Don't mope any longer, or it will spoil your beauty. I met Fenton out riding last evening, and he was savage at your seclusion. Don't try such a reckless follow too far. You know men can't take either friends or sweethearts like women can—on trust."

And Miss Marian trailed her lilac-silk flounces from the room, leaving the air heavy with her perfumes and poisoned by her malice.

Fannie went to the window, as if she would breathe a purer atmosphere. Marian's visit seemed to have oppressed her, body and soul.

Miss Grey was an adept in adopting invisible thumb-screws, and knew just how far to stretch her victims on the rack.

How different she was from her brother, Fannie thought, remorsefully. There was something soothing, calming about Laurence Grey's presence. How grave, and kind, and brotherly, he had been on that awful day when he had brought her home stunned and desperate with the first shock of Sybil's death!

Sybil's death—death! Aye, Fannie had at length brought herself to think—to speak the dreadful word—Sybil's death!

Death! It was a new, strange thought to this young creature, so full of life, so buoyant with hope. It was a thought from which she had hitherto shrunk appalled.

But for the first time within Fannie's knowledge—for her mother's death was only a dim childish memory to her—one near and dear to her had crossed the shadowy threshold, and it no longer seemed to her utterly unknown ground.

What was this death through which Sybil had passed? What was this veil that had so suddenly fallen between her and the friend whose hand she had clasped, whose lips she had pressed, whose voice she had heard, only a few brief weeks ago? And now—now—Fannie looked out dreamily into the gathering twilight, and, as the purple shadows grew deeper and deeper, she strove to solve the mysteries of the great hereafter—could Sybil see her now? Was the barrier between them so impassible that the dear one gone before could have no knowledge of, no sympathy with, those who sorrowed so blindly and deeply for her loss? Surely it would be unlike gentle, tender-hearted Sybil to utterly forget.

Great tears were rising into Fannie Clive's eyes as she looked up into that purple distance that sparkled already with ten thousand pallid stars, each feeble light, so her books had told her, coming from a world as great, as wonderful, as well ordered, as our own.

Was it in one of those that the homeless wanderer had at last found a home? Was it—

Fannie started and trembled. Her overwrought nerves quivered at the slightest shock: and—and there was a rustle in yonder curtained recess, that concealed the long-closed door—a movement, a step, and, oh, heavens! was the veil, indeed, lifted—the barrier passed? For, paler, more delicate, more etherially beautiful than when on earth, Sybil herself stood beside her.

"Fannie—dear Fannie!" and the sobbing, awe-struck girl was clasped in an embrace so loving and tender that it dispelled all fear. "Dearest, truest, best of friends! I could not leave you forever without a last good-bye!"

"Sybil!" whispered Fannie in accents that trembled between joy and grief, "oh, I have grieved so for you. Have you, indeed, gone from us forever? Oh, darling, tell me?"

"Hush!" said Sybil, solemnly. "Darling, I can tell you nothing—nothing. My lips are sealed—sealed to the past; sealed"—she added, with a strange sadness in her tone—"sealed to the future. I can only come to take a last kiss from the sweet lips that have spoken so often words of love and cheer to me. I come my darling, to say farewell—a last farewell!"

"Are you dead, indeed?" asked Fannie, with a shudder, "Sybil, Sybil, are you dead?"

"Aye, dead!" answered Sybil, in her strange, sad tone—"dead forever! The stillness of death is far, far better than the struggle, the moan the pitiful agony of life. Aye, I am dead, darling—dead!"

"And are you happy?" asked Fannie, in an awe-struck whisper "Sybil, darling, you do not look happy."

"I am at peace," was the grave rejoinder—"at peace for the first time since I knew the sorrow and troubles of life. Let that suffice for you, dearest Fannie. I am at peace!"

"Herbert—poor Herbert!" said Fannie, with a burst of grief. "Oh Sybil, in the strange world to which you have passed, have you no thought of him? How can you be at peace, when you have left one on earth so broken-hearted?"

Did some earthly memory flush for a moment the white repose of that lovely face? Did some earthly tenderness tremble in that low, sweet voice?

"Herbert!" she echoed, very softly. "Does Herbert grieve?"

"His heart is broken," answered Fannie, sobbing. "He has grown changed, and haggard, and old. He is going away from us to-morrow, and, alas! I fear he will never return. Oh, Sybil, Sybil, for my sake—for love's sake—speak to him one farewell word!"

"Speak to him?" echoed the spirit visitant, quivering all over as the lily quivers in the storm. "I must not—I dare not! I am dead—did I not say it?—dead to him forever! But you can, if—if he wishes it, give him this for me"—and she picked up a little scissors from Fannie's work table, and severed one of the long, shining tresses from her head—"and tell him," her voice faltered, "that only death could break the spell!"

And then, once more, she clasped Fannie to her breast, and, with a sound that seemed strangely like a mortal's sob, glided away, even as she came.

For a moment Fannie sat gazing after her, fascinated by some mysterious awe: then she roused herself, as if by an effort, from her trance-like state, glanced at the long, shining tress she still held in her hand, and, with a cry of terror, fainted away.

CHAPTER XXIV.

On the Ocean Queen.

The great steamship, the Ocean Queen, was just swinging away from the docks. It was a gay, busy, yet saddening scene.

Bright pennants fluttered from every masthead; the uniforms of the officers glittered in the summer sunlight; the newly-painted decks were thronged with eager, excited groups, laughing, chatting, sighing, or weeping, as their different circumstances seemed to demand.

Here a merry party of tourists were exchanging jests and badinage; there a mother clung to her son's neck, in an agonized farewell. Here a gay girl, all smiles and dimples, was taking her first rosetinted glance at the great world of waters; there the shy bride of a few hours clung blushingly to him with whom she had just commenced the unknown voyage of life.

In a sheltered corner of the upper deck a young girl—warmly wrapped in shawls and protected by a handsome traveling rug, sat silent and alone, surveying the scene before her with sad and thoughtful eyes.

Her glance wandered from group to group, lingering on the sorrowing ones as if they alone awakened sympathy in her breast—passing by the young and happy, as if the sight of them held a sting for her.

Yet, as she looked around her, with pity, sympathy, even tenderness, in her gaze, an acute observer would have noted her strange lack of interest in all she saw.

The noble bay, with its broad stretch of waters widening in the distance; the sunlit slopes of emerald shore around; the mighty city, enthroned like an empress at the gateway of nations, gathering in the tribute swept by the girdling river to her feet: all the grand beauties of nature and of art spread, like a living panorama, around her—might surely have enkindled a look of life and animation in a face that lacked neither beauty nor intelligence—in a face that few would have passed without pausing for a second glance.

Yet, young and lovely as was that pallid countenance, there was a shadow, even as of death upon its beauty—a languor that was not weariness, a stillness that was not repose.

It was the look of one who felt neither pain, nor care, nor sorrow, because the fire of tribulation had seared her heart so deeply that it could feel no more.

"Ah ma chere, you are here still, and safe," said a brisk voice that startled the pallid dreamer—if one can dream when hope and love have fled. "I have had such a time settling our trunks in that leetle cabin. Ma chere, but it is a bijou of a place for so leetle a one. Ah, but 'tis you Americans who know how to make—eh, what you call?—comfort—to make yourselves comfortable. But monsieur was so anxious about you that I must fly up to your side, and see that his treasure was safe and sound."

"Quite safe and quite comfortable, dear madam," answered the young girl with a wan smile. "Papa is too anxious about me. This sunlight and this sea breeze is delightful."

"The wind is not too strong?" asked the madam, who was a buxom, bright-eyed little woman of about five-and-forty, whose attire bespoke her to be something between a companion and a friend—such a traveling appendage, in short, as a motherless young girl would require on a continental tour. "Are you quite sure the wind is not too strong for you? Ah, mon Dieu! if you have a look so pale, so fragile—as of a lily that would break in too rude a blast!"

"Ah, you mistake me altogether, madam," was the half-sad answer. "I am far stronger than you think me. You know the lily often bends to the very earth and does not break."

"Ah, yes!"—the madam shook her head with a dim comprehension of the simile—"but you must neither bend nor break. Will you not go in and rest awhile? There is so much noise and confusion out here. The turmoil of these emigres is vat you call head-splitting."

"I do not find it so," was the gentle reply. "Poor creatures, it is hard for them to part."

"Ah, yes," answered the madam, with a shrug of her plump shoulders; "it is, no doubt verra hard. I know ven I first left my countrie how de bitter tears flowed. I wept—ah, mon Dieu! how I wept! Ah, I was only eighteen then and tears came freely. We are wiser afterward—wiser and harder, and colder. Mademoiselle is happy to have no heart-breaks at eighteen."

"Mademoiselle" sighed a very faint sigh; like the zephyr of a desert where there is neither leaf nor floweret to stir at its breath.

"Do we grow so hard as we grow old?" she asked, dreamily. "Does age grow too callous to feel?"

"We grow—well, perhaps not so cold as so wise," answered the madam, whose character for cheerful common sense had been always her chief recommendation. "We find it so foolish to fret at what we cannot help. And we get ourselves so sore and weary fretting that we learn to look for the smoothest and easiest way. And we find it, perhaps," concluded the madam, with her low, rippling little laugh, and a glance at her own plump figure—"we find it when we are fair and fat and forty."

"There are some who never find it," answered the girl, in a low voice—"some who sink striving to bear the pain—some who—"

She stoped suddenly, as a tall, dark-browed man, with the form and bearing of some Viking of old, advanced to her side, and bent down to her anxiously.

"The cabin is all ready, if you wish to retire. My daughter you are taxing your strength too far, I fear, to-day. Remember, we have had a long, fatiguing journey, and you are weak yet, very weak."

"But I am resting here, papa," she replied, making an effort to speak gaily. "It is so much better than the close narrow cabin. Besides," she added, more softly, "I must take my last look at my native land."

"That none in this great vessel leave with less regret," said the father, a harsh frown gathering on his brow. "There is no heartbreak in our farewell, Marie. We leave neither home nor friends behind us. Our world is here."

He laid his broad hand on her shoulder, as he spoke, and light, loving as was its pressure, there was a certain fierce assertion of authority in it the girl was quick to feel.

For the purest feelings of this fiery-hearted man lacked the gentler element of tenderness. He loved his child deeply, truly, ardently—he would have poured out the last drop of his blood cheerfully for her sake; but she must be his—his alone—his to guard, to love, to cherish—but his alone.

"I warned Mademoiselle Marie that this wind was keen," interposed Madam Gillette; "but she preferred remaining here. The spot is quiet and secluded, and the sights are, no doubt, extremely beautiful."

"As you please," said the gentleman, moving the hand that had rested upon his daughter's shoulder. "I have some things to arrange securely in my state room before the vessel begins to roll. We will have to find our sea-legs if this breeze continues before we pass the Narrows."

"Eh, ma foi!" said the little madam, holding up her plump hands in dismay. "And her trunks are not even strapped to their places. I must fly, mademoiselle, or there will be one grand smash! You are verra sure that the wind is not too strong for you?" she added, anxiously.

"Quite sure," answered the girl, with a patient, weary smile. "Let me have the sunlight, madam while I may."

And, as the little madam tripped off in her father's wake, Mademoiselle Marie sank back in her chair with a low sigh of relief. She must have been weak, indeed, or so short a conversation would not have so wearied her.

Closing her eyes, as if she would shut out sight as well as sound, the girl seemed to fall again into a listless reverie.

The pale, golden hair, brushed back in rippling masses from the low, broad brow revealed the beautiful features clearly. So still and lifeless were they, until by the deep lustre of the wondrous gray eyes that it seemed almost as if a statue were resting there, not a living, breathing woman.

Deep in that woman's heart, a smothered pain was stirring—a pain she had herself awakened by her last words—"Let me have the sunlight while I may!"

And when, at length, her eyes unclosed, there were tears glittering in their limpid depths—tears that she brushed away ere they could fall.

The river was glittering to the westward, like a sheet of burnished gold; the verdant slopes of island and point were steeped in the glorious dyes of sunset: for, far above, dim and distant as a hope of another world, a pale star trembled where the shadows met the light—the star of love and hope.

The busy, crowded scene around vanished from the pale girl's eyes. She was away—far away, beyond the sea; the wood the mountain—far up the golden river, that wound like a pathway of light into the heart of a flowery land. She stood again on the verdant slope of a sun-hallowed hill, and listened to words that would echo in her heart for a life-time—"The star of hope shines above us, and will light our pathway."

Ah, mockery—bitter mockery! Already there was a tremor in the vast mass of iron and timber; the huge wheels began to turn slowly and painfully, the mighty lungs to work. Already a world of waters was widening between; already the fiat of eternal welfare had been pronounced.

"Too late, sir—too late!"

A shout from the crowd below startled the dreamer into reality again.

"Not too late for a jump!" cried the captain, cheerily, as a young gentleman with a satchel in one hand ran breathlessly to the edge of the wharf.

The pale face of the watcher on the deck flushed suddenly with a wondrous light; the eyes kindled with radiance. She half-rose, and then, with a low cry of pain, fell back amid her cushions as Herbert Clive with the spring of an athlete, touched the moving vessel's deck.

CHAPTER XXV.

The Midnight Song.

Herbert Clive stood on the moonlit deck of the Ocean Queen, watching the faint line, now scarcely perceptible in the distance—the line that marked the fast-receding shore. The breeze had freshened, as the dark-browed traveler had foretold, and few of the passengers were able that evening to appear at the table or on deck.

Mr. Clive was one of the few, and though the mighty vessel rolled and swayed like some playful monster in the moonlit waves, he stood watching the silvery waters, undisturbed by the usual horrors of a first ocean voyage.

But sea-sickness would have added little to his present misery. He felt almost as if he would have welcomed some bodily ill that might divert his mind from its bitter and sorrowful contemplations. The thought of her he so deeply loved, so cruelly and mysteriously lost, was ever present to him. Echoes of her words her songs, were ever drifting back like broken music, to his ear. Her form seemed floating before him by day and by night, her eyes looking into his with that last look of despairing love that had brightened them for a moment ere they had closed forever. His spirit seemed broken, his energies paralyzed. He was listless, languid, dreamy utterly unlike the Herbert Clive of old

There would come a reaction after a time, for there was too much of the fire, and spirit, and strength of manhood in him to be crushed utterly by one blow, however swift and sudden, and weighty. But, for the present, the stout young oak was prostrate: the strong man's strength had failed; every fiber of the brave young heart was torn and bleeding almost unto death.

In such a state he had scarcely heeded Fannie's agitated and improbable story of Sybil's visit

It had all been a dream, of course—was not Sybil before him always, by night and by day?—it was all a dream. And yet, he had taken the long, golden tress and guarded it sacredly. It had been Sybil's once—that he knew, for no other hair could have such a sunset sheen. But he fancied Sybil had given it to her friend long, long ago, and Fannie's vivid imagination, excited by the sorrowful circumstances had pictured the golden tress as a gift from the dead.

"But I saw her, brother—I saw her, spoke to her, kissed her," persisted the girl, as, still hysterical, from mingled terror and delight, she detailed the occurrences of that twilight eve to her brother. "It was Sybil herself, pale and changed and even sadder than when in life—but Sybil, her true self, for I saw her!"

"As I, too, see her, dear, always, by night and by day," answered Herbert, kissing his fellow-mourner tenderly. "We both dream, sister,—dream as the hopeless only dream. There is no such joy on earth as seeing Sybil with waking eyes again."

He was dreaming still, standing on the moolit deck of the mighty vessel that was carrying him so swiftly from the home once made so beautiful to him by love and hope.

A sense of unutterable loneliness came over him as the line of shore grew fainter and fainter, and was at last lost in the misty distance, and, with all her canvas swelling to the wind, her heart of flame beating and throbbing, the Ocean Queen dipped her graceful bow into the waves, and proudly swept along her course from world to world.

In a fitful, despairing mood, Herbert had taken his passage on the first outward-bound steamer that sailed after his promised fortnight had elapsed, and now he began to regret his hasty compliance with his father's request.

(TO be Continued.)

If a man has a good memory he is able to forget judiciously.

SMITH ON THE BOERS.

HE DEPLORES GREED OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

History, He Says, Shows No More Memorable Fight Than the Present War—Says Victory Over Boers Will Be a Moral Defeat.

Prof. Goldwin Smith, who gave up a place in British politics and also a position in Oxford University in order that he might live in Canada, has recently returned from a European trip and has given his views on the Boer war.

"None of my English friends," he says, "has ever doubted what would be the issue of a war in which the entire forces of the British Empire were opposed to those of a population not half as large as the population of Liverpool. The Boers have put into the field decrepitude and childhood. They have no reserves. We shall win, and, having won, we shall, too, probably, reap in the judgment of posterity a measure of the same glory which we reaped by the burning of Joan of Arc. We shall be fortunate if we escape the guilt of opening an era of unscrupulous rapacity and violence which might throw back for a century the progress of moral civilization.

"A civilian can have nothing to say about this dispute as to the conduct of our generals. The generals were distinguished men. The British soldier has shown his wonted valor. Canadian and Australian have fought gallantly at his side. Our military administration seems also to have really done well and put into the field with striking rapidity an unexpected amount of force. But besides the difficulties of the country, we have encountered in our enemy a moral force on which we did not reckon and which escaped the discernment of Cecil Rhodes. We have encouraged in its greatest intensity that enthusiastic patriotism which turns the sluggard's blood to flame. Can history show a more memorable fight for independence than that made by the Boer? Does it yield to that made by Switzerland against Austria and Burgundy, or that made by the Tyrolese under Hofer? The Boer gets no pay; no comforts and luxuries are provided for him by fashionable society; he can look forward to no medals or pensions; he voluntarily endures the utmost hardships of war; his discipline, though unforced, seems never to fail. Boys of sixteen—a correspondent at the Cape tells me even at fourteen—take the rifle from the hand of the mother, who remains to pray for them in her lonely home, and stand beside their grandsires to face the murderous artillery of modern war. A newspaper correspondent the other day saw a boy of sixteen lying mangled on the field, and saying: 'It does not hurt much; only I am so thirsty.' Rude, narrow minded, fanatical in their religion, these men may be; so were the old Scotch Calvinists; so have been some of the noblest wild-stocks of humanity; but surely they are not unworthy to guard a nation.

"Ax on shoulder the Boers twice went out to make for themselves a home in the wilderness where they might live their own life. Who had a right to take it from them? Her Britannic majesty did not create Africa. There is too much truth in the saying that this is the second Jameson raid. It makes me sad to think into what hands my country has fallen."

Words Born in the War.

It will be interesting to note what marks the present war will leave on our manners, customs and language. A big war has results of this kind. The wars with Napoleon gave us "Wellingtons," "Bluchers," and probably, the long military cloak. The Russian war supplied us with a new name for girls, "Alma," broke down the military monopoly of a fringed upper lip, and made the long familiar sight of his polished mahogany obsolete for the Englishman who reached the stage of his dinner when dessert is laid and the wine goes round. That war made mustaches common and "coasters" a curiosity. The great Franco-Prussian campaign had comparatively little social influence on us—probably because we were not actual belligerents. We learned to take interest in maneuvers, a word which soon superseded the old "sham fights." As yet the present war has influenced more our language than our customs. Trekking, outspanning, veldt, laager are slipping into use. Khaki has become a familiar color, and "colonial" uniform familiar in our streets. We may each note for ourselves these indirect, unobtrusive, but probably lasting influences of the war.—London News.

Exalting the Uniform.

Ever since the outbreak of the South African war military enthusiasm has run high in Great Britain. A London paper relates that at an entertainment in Edinburgh, soon after the war opened, the audience stopped the performance to sing the national anthem. Meantime a group of excited men toward the door caught sight of a man in uniform, and before he could form any idea of what was being done they had him on their shoulders, and were carrying him about the building, shouting and singing. When they had done this to their hearts' content they set him down, and some one asked him, "What's your regiment?" "Regiment!" he exclaimed. "What's gone wrang wi' ye a'? I'm the door-keeper!"

Sacred Fires of India.

The sacred fires of India have not all been extinguished. The most ancient which still exists was consecrated twelve centuries ago in commemoration of the voyage made by the Parsees when they emigrated from Persia to India. The fire is fed five times every two hours with sandalwood and other fragrant materials, combined with very dry fuel.

A Fearful Suspicion.

"Don't you sometimes feel a twinge of self-reproach in connection with this Puerto Rican matter?" "To tell you the truth," answered Senator Sorghum, "I do. Every now and then I half suspect that we didn't get quite as much out of that deal as we might have secured."

TO FRAME BRIDE'S PICTURE.

How a New Chicago Matron Remembered Her Friends.

A recent Chicago bride who was going out of town to live distributed photographs of herself and farewell gifts to her relatives and friends and had them framed in a unique and attractive manner. They were to be mounted under glass in the manner familiar to all and known as passepartout, but instead of the usual mat of linen or cardboard she used a material which was especially appropriate, and one which made frame as well asas picture worthy of being preserved among the family heirlooms. The picture which she gave her mother had a mat of the white satin which had been used for her wedding dress, and across one corner was a bit of the lace with which the dress was trimmed. To a sister she gave a picture also mounted in the white satin, but with a design of orange blossoms embroidered upon it, while the mount for the one given her maid of honor was of the white satin embroidered with a graceful spray of bride roses. Friends less near received pictures mounted with the goods which had gone to make up the different gowns of her trousseau. The mount made from the material of her "going-away gown" had forget-me-nots embroidered in small scattered sprays, while some of the silk and figured goods were made up plain, being sufficiently decorative in themselves. In each case the mounted picture was bound in the glass with a narrow strip of soft leather in a shade to correspond with the color of the mount. Upon the back of each was plainly written the name and date of the wedding. It is needless to state that the gifts were prized as the pictures alone never could have been, and it is safe to predict that other brides will follow the graceful fashion.—Chicago Chronicle.

A SLIGHT MISTAKE.

The Bride's Father Was a Teller, but Not Connected with a Bank.

"Can I tell you the meaning of euphuism?" said an old reporter the other night in response to a question by one of the younger men on the staff. "Why, certainly, my boy. It is the pleasant art of calling a bootblack a gentleman of polish, and it's very valuable in newspaper work, provided you don't carry the joke too far. I remember when I was a cub myself and was working out in Denver a fellow came in one day and asked me to write a nice little notice about the marriage of his brother to a girl over in Centre City. 'Who is the bride?' I asked, so as to get some material for the paragraph; 'what is her father's occupation?' 'Why, he's a—teller,' said my caller, hesitating a little. 'All right,' said I, and thinking it would sound a shade finer, I referred to the lady as 'the beautiful and accomplished daughter of the well known banker of Centre City.' Next day the boss came in foaming at the mouth. 'What in blazes do you mean by speaking of old —— as a banker?' he bellowed. 'He's a professional clairvoyant and the biggest old fraud out of jail! He's got an ad. in the paper right now, offering to reveal the past and future for 35 cents and a lock of your hair!' I was overwhelmed with chagrin and hunted up my informant. 'Why did you tell me that girl's father was a banker?' I asked, reproachfully. 'I didn't,' he answered, 'I said he was a teller.' 'It's one and the same thing,' I retorted. 'No, it isn't,' said he; 'you jumped at conclusions. I didn't mean a paying teller, I meant a fortune teller.'"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

SITUATION OF WHISKERS.

The Mustache Is an Ancient Ornament.

From "Robinson Crusoe:" "My beard I had once suffered to grow until it was about a quarter of a yard long, but as I had both scissors and razors sufficient, I had cut it pretty short, except what grew on my upper lip, which I had trimmed into a large pair of Mohammedan whiskers, such as I had seen worn by some Turks at Sallee, for the Moors did not wear such, though the Turks did; of the mustachios, or whiskers, I will not say they were long enough to hang my hat upon them, but they were of a length and shape monstrous enough, and such as in England would have passed for frightful." From Wilson's "History and Antiquities of the Dissenting Churches:" "Joseph Jacob, an independent preacher at Turner's hall, Philpot Lane (in) the beginning of the last century, made a church of his own. He passed an order obliging the whole of the congregation to stand during the time of singing. This, though by no means an uncommon thing in the present day, was then looked upon as a great novelty. In this reformed church all periwigs were discarded, the men members wore whiskers upon their upper lips, in which Mr. Jacob set them an example." From "Hunter's Travels in 1792:" "They (the Hungarians) shave their beards, except the upper lip, which is generally adorned with a pair of huge whiskers."

A Flying Postal Service.

There are several small islands in the Pacific ocean that belong to England. A vessel was wrecked during a storm on one of these islands, and it was necessary to get word to Auckland. Carrier pigeons were used. They carried the messages and brought return messages. This success led to the buying of a large flock of carrier pigeons, who were trained for the work on these islands. Each bird can carry four messages, each written on paper of a certain quality and size. When four messages are ready, a bird is sent off. Each message costs either one shilling or sixpence. These pigeons are private property.

How Much You Eat

Is not the question, but, how much you digest; because food does good only when it is digested and assimilated, taken up by the blood and made into muscle, nerve, bone and tissue. Hood's Sarsaparilla restores to the stomach its powers of digestion. Then appetite is natural and healthy. Then dyspepsia is gone, and strength, elasticity and endurance return.

SEE TO THE WALLS.

A Danger in Schoolrooms and How to Prevent It.

Owing to the gathering of so many different classes of persons therein, the interior walls of churches, schoolhouses, hospitals, etc., are apt to become repositories of disease germs unless preventive measures are taken. These walls should always be coated with a clean and pure cement, such as Alabastine, which is disinfectant in its nature and more convenient to renew and retint than any other wall coating. The first cost is no greater than for inferior work, while renewals are more easily and cheaply made.

THE HEALTH OF YOUNG WOMEN

Two of Them Helped by Mrs. Pinkham—Read their Letters.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I am sixteen years old and am troubled with my monthly sickness. It is very irregular, occurring only once in two or three months, and also very painful. I also suffer with cramps and once in a while pain strikes me in the heart and I have drowsy headaches. If there is anything you can do for me, I will gladly follow your advice."—Miss Mary Gomes, Aptos, Cal., July 31, 1898.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—After receiving your letter I began the use of your remedies, taking both Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier. I am now regular every month and suffer no pain. Your medicine is the best that any suffering girl can take."—Miss Mary Gomes, Aptos, Cal., July 6, 1899.

Nervous and Dizzy

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I wish to express my thanks to you for the great benefit I have received from the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered constantly from terrible sideache, had chills, was nervous and dizzy. I had tried different kinds of medicine but they all failed entirely. After taking three bottles of Vegetable Compound and three of Blood Purifier I am all right. I cannot thank you enough for what your remedies have done for me."—Miss Matilda Jensen, Box 18, Ogdensburg, Wis., June 16, 1899.

CONSUMPTION

LANGUID

How are the children this spring? Complaining a good deal of headache, can't study as well as usual, easily fall asleep, and are tired all the time? And how is it with yourself? Is your strength slipping away? Do you tremble easily, are your nerves all unstrung, do you feel dull and sleepy, and have you lost all ambition?

That's Spring Poisoning

Nearly every one needs a good spring medicine; a medicine that will remove impurities from the system, strengthen the digestion, and bring back the old force and vigor to the nerves. A perfect Sarsaparilla is just such a medicine; a Sarsaparilla that contains the choicest and most valuable ingredients; a Sarsaparilla accurately and carefully made, and one that experience has shown is perfect in every way.

That's AYER'S

"The only Sarsaparilla made under the personal supervision of three graduates: a graduate in pharmacy, a graduate in chemistry, and a graduate in medicine."

CARTER MEDICINE CO. WINS.

Obtains Injunction in Case Involving Simulation of Labels.

Brent Good, president of the Carter Medicine Company, yesterday received a telegram from his lawyers in Chicago, Messrs. Lowden, Estabrook & Davis, informing him that a final injunction, with costs, had been granted against the Chicago Label and Box Company. This company makes a specialty of manufacturing labels, boxes, etc., for druggists. The Carter Company has been following them through the courts for two years on the complaint that the label company was making simulations of the labels of Carter's Little Liver Pills. They have now obtained a final injunction with costs, and the costs are very large, as the case has been submitted to a Master in Chancery for a final accounting.

The Carter Medicine Company has been the first and only one to prosecute printers or engravers who have prepared such labels and wrappers. It marks a new departure in infringement cases, and their victory is one of great importance to the whole "proprietary trade," and also of interest to retail druggists.—NEW YORK PRESS, MAY 2, 1900.

WINTER BILE

Causes bilious head-ache, back-ache and all kinds of body aches. Spring is here and you want to get this bile poison out of your system, easily, naturally and gently. CASCARETS are just what you want; they never grip or gripe, but will work gently while you sleep. Some people think the more violent the griping the better the cure. Be careful—take care of your bowels—salts and pill poisons leave them weak, and even less able to keep up regular movements than before. The only safe, gentle inside Spring cleaner for the bowels are sweet, fragrant CASCARETS. They don't force out the foecal matter with violence, but act as a tonic on the whole 30 feet of bowel wall, strengthen the muscles and restore healthy, natural action—buy them and try them. You will find in an entirely natural way your bowels will be promptly and permanently put in good order for the Spring and Summer work.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Winter Wheat Report.

In the winter wheat report for Illinois only the central and southern counties are involved, as but little is grown in the northern part of the state. Fifty per cent of the returns show that condition is good and of the remaining 50 per cent two-thirds indicate fair condition. Four correspondents in the central part of the state and six in the southern report damage by Hessian fly. Although crops are not suffering, about half our correspondents state that the ground is dry and rain will soon be needed. The other 50 per cent report moisture abundant and in a few counties, notably Livingston, Massac and Iroquois, there has been too much rain to suit the farmers.

Winter wheat in Indiana was badly frozen out and its condition is very poor. In most localities it does not promise to yield more than one-fourth to one-half a crop. Hessian fly has also damaged it considerably, especially in Blackford and Pike counties. A few correspondents in the central and southern portions report moisture deficient, otherwise the supply is abundant.

In northern Michigan, where it was protected by snow, winter wheat is in good condition, but winter killing and the ravages of the Hessian fly have not left much in the central and southern portions of the state. A large part of the wheat area will be plowed under. What remains has improved with the favorable weather of the last ten days. Moisture appears to be abundant enough to suit the needs of all crops, only one correspondent reporting any deficiency.

Ohio correspondents report conditions very similar to those found in Michigan. The bulk of the crop has been ruined by winter killing and Hessian fly. In the best reports received not more than two-thirds of a crop is predicted. A few counties are getting dry, but in almost all parts of the state moisture is abundant and the wheat that has survived is improving.

A few correspondents in Kentucky state that moisture is deficient but the majority report an abundance and some too much rain for corn planting. Wheat is in splendid condition and a good crop is anticipated. There are three reports of Hessian fly, but little or no damage from that source is complained of.

The reports of Missouri and Kansas winter wheat are very encouraging, condition running "good to very good," or "considerably above the average." Moisture is abundant in both states and a few counties in Kansas have had too much rain. Hessian fly has not appeared in either state.

Subsoiling for Grain.

It will not, as a general thing, pay to subsoil for grain crops. With the low price of the cereals the increase must be very considerable to pay cost of the extra work. The work of subsoiling is very great, the subsoiler having to be hauled by from four to six horses according to construction of the subsoil. There are, however, some localities where subsoiling for grains will pay. This will depend on a good many circumstances that cannot be pointed out specifically. For instance there are subsoils that are not hard to stir up. There are farms where the arrangements are such that the men and horses have idle time, and in such cases the subsoiling will not be very expensive. Then too we must make a distinction between the sections of country where the rainfall is fairly good and the sections of country where the aridity is so great that there is little or no water to hold. It is believed that subsoiling is more effective where the rainfall is fairly good than where the rainfall is very slight. This is because the subsoiling makes it possible for the ground to hold more water and a part of the heavy precipitations is caught and held in the reservoir that would otherwise run off. In the case of semi-arid lands the water seldom falls in such quantities that the soil cannot retain it.

Horticultural Observations.

The annual returns to the State of Florida for fruits and vegetables shipped out is said to be about $5,000,000. This is very much less than it would be had the great orange groves not been cut down by the severe cold spells of the last few years.

• • •

It is reported that there is quite a general movement among the truck growers of Texas for organization. This is to be commended, for by such combinations the better shipment and distribution of the products can be obtained. If the growers of vegetables and fruit ever become fully organized it will be possible to prevent inferior goods being put on the market.

• • •

A writer says that Florida suffers more damage from frost than any other state. The cold waves this spring have killed large quantities of early fruits and vegetables. Beans and egg plants were extensively destroyed. In the midst of some of the vegetable gardens the thermometer dropped to about 20 below the freezing point. Florida is really in a hard position in this regard. Her product is of value in the northern market only because of its earliness. Yet to get these early vegetables the work of growing them must begin early in February, at a time when cold waves are possible. Were the growers to wait till later, they would find no market that would pay a profit on cost of production and transportation.

• • •

The apple exhibit at Paris is likely to attract a good deal of attention from Europeans. It will not consist of the short-keeping varieties to any extent, but of those apples that are known as commercial apples and that will stand long carriage. Our apple trade with the Europeans is growing, and the exhibit at the exposition will doubtless have the effect of enlarging the market. The only trouble that we see ahead is the difficulty of supplying the demand. Good commercial apples are very high in our markets the year round, and of course will be much higher in a foreign market, where the cost of transport, handling and additional profits must be added. Without doubt, there is no more encouraging field for investment than in the line of apple growing. There are certain sections of the country that are particularly adapted to the growing of apples—sections where land is cheap and unsuited to the production of anything but fruit.

Black Nightshade.

This plant is also known as common nightshade, garden nightshade. It is a smooth annual, one to two feet high, with rough, angular, widely-branching stems, ovate leaves, two to four inchs long, with wavy margins, drooping clusters of small white flowers, and black, globose, juicy berries, which ripen from July to October.

The amount of poison present in any part of this plant varies with the conditions of growth. The more musky odored plants are the most poisonous. These plants may be easily killed by cutting them down before the fruit matures.

FIG. 23.—Black nightshade (Solanum nigrum) one-third natural size.

Kafir Corn as Stock Food.

When fed alone, stock tire of Kafir corn much more quickly than they do of corn. Some stockmen feed red and white Kafir corn alternately. This gives some variety, but only partially overcomes the defect. When Kafir corn is fed with feeds rich in protein, as alfalfa, soy beans, bran, or oil meal, animals relish it for any length of feeding period. Hogs fattened on Kafir corn alone get so that they loathe it, but fed Kafir corn with either alfalfa hay, soy beans, or skim milk, they have a keen appetite for every feed.

This lack of protein (flesh and blood-forming material) and an excess of starch and other heating substances makes Kafir corn an undesirable feed to be given alone, but combined with the other drought-resisting feeds—alfalfa and soy beans—makes a ration containing all the material in proper proportions needed for meat and milk production and the growth of young stock.

Kafir corn is a very constipating feed, and for this reason, when fed alone to either horses, cattle, or hogs, induces an unhealthful condition. Fed with other constipating feeds, such as prairie or timothy hays or corn fodder, the condition is made worse. On the other hand, alfalfa and soy beans are laxative feeds, and either fed with Kafir corn secures a healthful condition of the animal, as shown by the glossy hair, oily skin, good appetite, and good returns.

This Little Pig Came Home.

A New Jersey farmer tells this remarkable story to the Evangelist, and vouches for its truth: "I had more pigs than I wanted to keep, so I sold one to a man living in the neighboring village. The little pig had been living in the pen with his brothers and sisters, and had never been outside of it until the man who bought him put him in a basket, tied down the cover and put it in his wagon to carry to the new home. Late in the afternoon the farmer who sold it saw something coming across the swampy meadow below his home. He watched it struggling through the wet places, climbing the knolls, until he could see that it was his little pig, all covered with mud and very tired. He went straight toward the barn, against which was the only home he recognized. The money was returned to the man who had bought it, and the little pig stayed at home."

Subsoiling.

What is known as subsoiling is plowing the earth below the depth at which it is usually plowed. Where plowing has been generally but ten inches deep the soil below is the subsoil. This may not be a scientific way of speaking of it, but it is the popular way. There is a difference between surface plowing and subsoiling, in that the surface soil is turned upside down, while the subsoil is stirred by the subsoiler without being brought to the surface. Subsoiling makes more room for the development of the roots, and enables the plant to extract food and moisture from a greater area. In addition the capacity for absorbing and retaining moisture is increased. During the heavy fall of moisture in winter and spring the ground thus obtains and holds for future use a greater supply.

A Suspicious Accident.—A Chicago manufacturer of oleomargarine shipped a good deal of that product into New York state. He was promptly prosecuted and fines aggregating over $1,000,000 were placed on court records against him. The evidence was contained in the bills of lading of a certain large railroad. Now, the railroad informs the attorney-general of New York that it thought that the cases were settled and so destroyed all the bills of lading. The state therefore is left without evidence.

Heard in a Balloon.

J. M. Bacon, the Englishman who, with his daughter, made a lofty balloon ascent to observe the meteor shower last November, tells some interesting things about the sounds that reached their ears. At a height of 5,000 feet the ringing of horses' feet on a hard road could be heard. At 4,000 feet the splashing sound made by ducks in a pond was audible. The barking of dogs and the crowing of cocks could be heard at 7,000 or 8,000 feet. These sounds penetrated through a white floor of cloud which hid the earth from sight. In the perfect silence of the air around the balloon they were startled by what seemed stealthy footsteps close at hand. Investigation showed that the sound was caused by the stretching of the ropes and the yielding of the silk as the balloon continued to expand.—Youth's Companion.

CHINA GIVEN A TIP

MUST PROMPTLY AND EFFECTUALLY SUPPRESS THE BOXERS.

United States Government Takes a Hand in the Game and Instructs Minister Conger to Notify the Chinese Government That It Is Expected to Provide for the Maintenance of Law and Order and the Protection of American Lives and Property Now Threatened by the "Boxers."

Washington, May 27. — The United States government has taken a hand in the suppression of the "Boxers" in China. Minister Conger has been instructed by the state department to inform the Chinese government that the government of the United States expects it to stamp out promply and effectually the society and to provide for the maintainance of law and order and the protection of life and property of Americans in China, all now threatened by the operations of the "Boxers." There is no indications in the instructions as to the course that will be pursued by the United States in case the Chinese government fails to observe the warning conveyed in this communication. Mr. Conger is acting on parallel lines with the representatives of every European power at the Chinese court, but has not joined in any concerted action. It is intimated here that the Chinese government in dealing with the "Boxers"

Will Encounter Great Difficulty,

as the society claims to be purely social in character. The "Boxers" now are not attacking foreign missionaries, but are killing the Chinese who allow themselves to be converted to Christianity. This phase of the matter is difficult to deal with, as it is a well recognized right of a nation to deal with its own subjects as it pleases. This view does not contemplate excesses such are ascribed to the "Boxers" and there is believed to be reasonable ground for foreign intervention which would include the participation of United States warships and even troops if such should be necessary.

Mr. Conger's latest advices to the state department indicates that this troublesome society is waxing strong in the very heart of Pekin, the Chinese capital, and it was evident from the tone of his dispatch that a crisis was approaching which would either require drastic action by the Chinese government or a hostile demonstration by the powers in the near future.

BOXER OUTRAGES.

Converts Massacred, Villages Destroyed and Soldiers Ambushed.

London, Maw 27—A special dispatch from Shanghai says advices from Szechuan, province of Hu Peh, report that boxers have destroyed two villages and massacred many converts of the French missionary stations. The general commanding at Shi Nan Fu, it is added, sent a regiment to the scene of the disturbances. The soldiers were ambushed by the malcontents and lost twenty-six killed. Reinforcements have been dispatched from Iohang.

Fight With "Boxers."

Peking, May 27. — A large force of troops who attacked a party of boxers lost a colonel and five men killed and fifteen wounded. Li Chuen Lin, the former viceroy, has been ordered to remain in Peking to await employment.

DEEDS STILL LIVE.

A Tribute to the Army of the Potomac.

Fredericksburg, Va., May 27. — On the very ground through which the old Fifth corps charged at Fredericksburg, President McKinley, his cabinet and Gen. Miles, yesterday witnessed the laying of the cornerstone in a shaft which will perpetuate in bronze and granite the heroism of the Army of the Potomac. It was an impressive ceremony and rendered the more so by the fact that among the hundreds who witnessed the event were noted leaders of both the Federal and confederate forces. The monument was the personal gift of Daniel Butterfield to the Memorial association. This in itself was a unique feature, as the battlefield monuments have heretofore been mostly the gifts of corporated societies or furnished by popular subscriptions. Gen. Butterfield himself was present and assisted in the ceremony, but owing to illhealth the commital of the monument to the secretary of war was made by Col. Hill, one of the veterans of the Fifth corps. The ceremony was with due Masonic rights and at its completion the secretary of war accepted the gift in the name of the American people.

The visit of the president to Fredericksburg was primarily in honor of the annual reunion of the Army of the Potomac. The town was in gala dress and turned out en masse to receive its distinguished visitors. The president and his cabinet were welcomed at the court house, which was decorated with the national colors and the various corps flags of the Army of the Potomac.

Welcoming speeches were made by prominent veterans from both sides in the Civil war and afterward the president held an informal reception at the home of St. George R. Fitzhugh, where he was welcomed by hundreds of the townfolk, both white and colored.

Unknown Priest Suicides.

Buffalo, N. Y., May 27—An unknown priest, presumably from New York, committed suicide at the Whirlpool rapids to-day. He descended the elevator, had his picture taken, then ascended the rock, waved his hand dramatically, said "goo bye" and leaped into the rushing waters.

Builders Locked Out.

Stockholm, May 27. — A thousand builders were locked out here. Sympathetic strikes are probable and disorder is feared.

Cronje Is Thriving.

London—Gen. Cronje appears to be thriving in exile. Since his surrender he has gained thirty pounds of the forty he lost during the campaign.

Sanctioned by the Czar.

St. Petersburg—During the recent visit of the czar to Moscow he sanctioned the project for the erection of a church to commemorate the liberation of the serfs nearly forty years ago.

STATE CAN'T GET ALL THE CASH.

Surplus on Forfeited Tax Sale Is the Owner's.

Reports received indirectly by the state auditor indicate that the forfeited tax sale was a phenomenal success, better probably than any previously held. Figures are not at hand, but it is believed that higher prices, relatively, were secured than ever before, and in every county the land was disposed of with a clean sweep. The effect of this on the books of the auditors will be enormous, permitting them practically to start with fresh records.

Contrary to expectations and in direct opposition to the demands made by the authorities, it is expected that all the surplus, that is the sums received at auction above the total indebtedness for taxes, will be paid to the owners. It was thought that this money would go to the state, but Attorney General Douglas has replied to several communications quoting a previous decision. The question arose in 1881 at a similar sale of land for forfeited taxes, when the supreme court in Farnham vs. Jones held that the owner gets the surplus.

The act regulating the forfeited tax sale of 1893 was practically a duplicate of that of 1887, and when the same question arose the court sustained the previous decision. As the act of 1899 is again almost a duplicate of the two preceding, Attorney General Douglas believes that there can be no doubt as to the status of the case.

Had the attorney general expressed this opinion before the sale was on it might have led to much speculation, that is to say, if an owner allowed the taxes on his property to accumulate so much that these pretty fairly equalled the value of the whole, he might then buy it in himself at a lower figure and save on the taxes. For instance, if a piece of property ordinarily worth $1,000, had taxes of $600 against it, it might bring at auction only $500, and the owner could have bought his land back, saving $100 on the taxes. In a few instances only did the owners buy back their property at figures below the total taxes, and in these cases the profit will have to be theirs.

WHAT IT WAS WORTH.

Aitkin County's Tax Sale Good for $50,000.

County Attorney J. S. Campbell of Aitkin has finished the forfeited tax sale after eight days' selling. It was a big success. A good auctioneer and a tireless worker for the county, the auditor brought out every dollar that was in it. Outside capital was well represented, and the bidding was strong. Less than a dozen pieces were bid in for the state. Dan Shell of Worthington, Davidson, McRae and Buell of Duluth, and J. J McDonald of Aitkin, were the heaviest buyers. The receipts were upward of $25,000. This, with the redemptions and the four years' subsequent taxes that the buyers are compelled to pay, will make the sale worth over $50,000 to Aitkin county.

BLOODSHED IN ST. LOUIS.

Another Fatality Results From the Rioting of the Strikers.

St. Louis, May 25.—Renewed rioting and another fatality marked the progress of the strike on the Transit company's system yesterday. In the afternoon a Cass avenue car was stopped at the corner of Twenty-third and Cass avenue in order that a barricade which had been placed across the track might be removed. During the enforced halt a big crowd of strike sympathizers attacked the car, firing a number of shots. One of the bullets struck Special Policeman Duncan K. McRea, who was riding on the front platform with the motorman, in the left arm, passing through his body and coming out on the right side. The policeman sank unconscious to the floor. Other patrolmen who had been stationed at the corner to protect the cars, then charged the crowd and beat them back. A riot call was then sent and a dozen mounted policeman came at full gallop to the scene. The combined forces soon restored order. McRea was placed in an ambulance and a hasty trip was made to the dispensary. When the unfortunate policeman was taken out and laid on the operating table it was found that he was dead.

Eddie Manz, three years old, was shot through the leg by a man on a Cass avenue car. The little boy was sitting on the front doorstep when some small boys who had been throwing stones at a west-bound car ran up the alley south of the house. A man, supposed to be an emergency policeman, leaned out of the car window and fired a shot at the fleeing boys. The shot struck the child in the right leg near the hip. It is feared the wound will prove fatal. Several others received serious injuries during the day.

Hay Entertains Boers.

Washington, May 25. — Secretary Hay yesterday entertained at luncheon the Boer delegates now in Washington. The affair was a purely personal compliment extended by the secretary and not even of social significance. His son, Adelbert Hay, the present United States consul at Pretoria, has been treated with the greatest courtesy and consideration by the Boers, not only officially, but personally, and, perhaps it was a remembrance of this fact that induced the secretary to endeavor to reciprocate in this way.

Two Men Roasted to Death.

Greenville, S. C., May 25. — In a freight wreck on the Charleston & Western Carolina road yesterday near Laurens, Engineer William McKinney and Brakeman Charles Hayes were violently hurled against the engine furnace and covered with coals. They were roasted to death.

Desperate Fight in Office.

Terre Haute, Ind., May 25. — Otto Emons was stabbed almost to death by Jesse Hitch in the office of the Evening Gazette. During the fight Emons used a chair and Hitch a big knife. Emons finally fell from loss of blood from nine serious wounds.

Highbinders at It.

Los Angeles, May 25. — The highbinders are again frisky. Quong Yong Nan, upon whose head a price was set, was shot and killed last night by the members of a rival tong.

Astor Bids for Popularity.

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate.

Washington, May 21.—At the opening of Saturday's session of the senate President Pro Tem Frye laid before the senate a dispatch from the governor of Montana, R. B. Smith, announcing that he had revoked the appointment of W. A. Clark as senator, made by Lieut. Gov. Spriggs, and had appointed Hon. Martin Maginnis to fill the vacancy. At the request of Mr. Chandler, chairman of the committee on privileges and elections, the telegram was referred to his committee.

"Is this telegram," inquired Mr. Allen, "to be taken as construing that a vacancy exists in the senatorial representation of Montana?"

"I think the seat is vacant," replied Mr. Chandler. "How the vacancy was created is another thing."

The resolution in the Montana senatorial case was laid before the senate and on motion of Mr. Chandler it went over until to-day.

The Senate.

Washington, May 22.—A pyrotechnic discussion of the status of the Boer commissioners now in Washington was precipitated in the senate yesterday by a resolution offered by Mr. Allen of Nebraska extending to the commissioners the privilege of the floor of the senate during their sojourn in the national capital. The vote was defeated by a vote of 36 to 21, but not until after a sharp controversy between its author and Mr. Davis, chairman of the committee on foreign relations. Mr. Allen maintained that the resolution was in line with precedents, while Mr. Davis contended that under the peculiar circumstance the senate ought not to take any action that might be considered a recognition of Boer diplomats until the president, who alone had the power to receive diplomatic representatives, had taken action. The postoffice appropriation bill was finally passed, the amendment to appropriate $225,000 to carry on existing contracts for the pneumatic tube service being agreed to. An effort was made by Mr. Morgan of Alabama to displace the Spooner Philippine bill with the Nicaragua canal bill as the unfinished business, but it failed by a vote of 21 to 28.

The House.

The house yesterday, under suspension of the rules, passed two important bills reported by the committee on labor—one to extend the eight-hour law to all laborers employed under contract on government work, and the other to prohibit interstate traffic in prison-made goods by bringing them under the jurisdiction of the police powers of the state. The former bill is designed to carry the law of 1892 to its logical conclusion. The convict labor bill caused some sharp inquiries from members of the Southern states where prison labor is employed in the fields and in the mines, but upon assurances that it would not interfere with the production of coal, cotton or lumber, the opposition was not pressed.

Washington, May 23.—In the senate yesterday Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin made a notable speech in favor of his bill declaring that upon the suppression of the insurrection in the Philippines the government of the islands shall devolve in the president until such time as congress might direct otherwise. Mr. Spooner was almost too ill to stand, but he defended with characteristic vigor and eloquence the policy of the administration in the Philippines, maintaining that no other policy, in the circumstances, was possible, and that none other could have been adopted without dishonor to the country. Late in the afternoon Senator Carter of Montana presented the credentials of Senator Clark of that state. They will lie on the table for the present. Mr. Wellington of Maryland presented the resolution adopted by the meeting held in this city on Sunday evening last welcoming the envoys of the South African republics. He gave notice that on Monday he would speak on the subject. Mr. Platt of Connecticut, chairman of the committee on printing, presented a report on its investigation of the private publication of "messages and papers of the president."

The House.

Washington, May 24. — The house yesterday passed, without division, the extradition bill framed by the judiciary committee, but only after a debate in which considerable political rancor was aroused. There was no division of sentiment as to the duty of congress to pass a bill to permit the extradition of Neely, but the Democrats objected to the language of the bill which covered "any foreign country or territory or part thereof occupied by the United States." The Democrats wanted the bill to apply specifically to Cuba, contending that the broader language assumed the possibilities of further acquisitions by the United States of a character similar to that of Cuba. A motion to recommit with instructions to change the language was defeated by a strict party vote. The house also adopted the resolution to allow the committee on ways and means to sit during the recess of congress for the purpose of framing a bill for the reduction of the war revenues and the resolution for an adjournment sine die June 6. The Democrats insisted that congress should reduce the war taxes at the present session, but Mr. Payne, the majority leader, said the treasury figures showed that the refunding of the bonds now going on would practically wipe out the surplus for this fiscal year. He contended that it would be unsafe to reduce the taxes at this time. Mr. Richardson, minority leader, announced that he was in favor of the total repeal of the war tax on beer.

The Senate.

Yesterday was a day of rasping political controversy and oratory in the senate. With the controversy those on the Democratic side of the chamber, anomalous as it may seem, had little to do. With far seeing senators what is regarded to be the paramount subject of the national campaign was the subject of controversy discussed by Mr. Platt of Connecticut and Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin. The former's speech was an answer to a resolution by Mr. Bacon demanding the investigation of financial affairs in Cuba. Mr. Platt favored the adoption of the resolution, but deprecated what he declared was a cheap effort to make political capital out of a shameful condition of affairs which the Republican party needed no prodding to induce it to probe to the bottom. The speech of Mr. Spooner was a continuation of his address of Tuesday on the Philippine question. In its course he became involved in a heated and sensational colloquy with Mr. Hale of Maine over the government's conduct of affairs in our insular possessions. It was a remarkable controversy between two of the best equipped debaters in the senate and was listened to with profound attention by senators, many representatives and crowded galleries.

The Senate.

Washington, May 26.—The duty of the United States toward its "island possessions" was the subject of heated discussion in the senate again yesterday. Soon after the senate convened Mr. Bacon of Georgia began an extended reply to the speech of Mr. Platt delivered Wednesday. His speech was largely supplemental to that which he delivered several days ago demanding an investigation of Cuban financial affairs. His resolution, to which there is little or no opposition, under the rules, went to the committee on contingent expences. The remainder of the afternoon was occupied by Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin in concluding his speech on the Philippine question. The debate which he aroused took a turn decidedly political. He charged the so-called anti-imperialists with creating an issue which was not legitimate. Many of his statements were controverted by Mr. Allen of Nebraska and Mr. Pettigrew of South Dakota, and the controversy at times became almost personal.

The House.

The house practically devoted eight hours yesterday to the consideration of the Alaskan civil government bill, but progress was slow. Two amendments of importance were adopted. One authorized the secretary of war to issue permits to dredge or search for gold below the waters at Cape Nome. The secretary already had issued permits, but the bill as it passed the senate cancelled them. The house also struck out the section which permitted arrests for certain offences. The conference report on the Indian appropriation bill was adopted.

LAWLESSNESS IN ST. LOUIS.

One Boy Killed and Three Men Wounded as a Result of Strike.

St. Louis, May 23. — One boy was killed and three men wounded yesterday as a result of the strike. The boy was shot late in the afternoon while standing in the door of his home at 1200 Geiner avenue. A mob of several hundred men had surrounded a car of the Tower Grove line and were threatening the conductor and motorman. A few stones had been thrown when a shot was fired from the car, the bullet striking the boy full in the breast. Conductor Farley and Motorman Drake were arrested by the police pending an investigation. Both of them deny the shooting. The four people wounded were injured near a fight which occurred at 5:30 o'clock at the intersection of Thirteenth and Herbert streets. The riot was lively while it lasted, fully 100 shots being fired, and as the streets were crowded it is remarkable that the number of injured was so small.

LIND MAY INVITE BOERS.

Talk of Arranging a Reception for the Peace Envoys.

St. Paul, May 23.—Gov. Lind, it is expected, will arrange a reception for the Boer peace envoys now at Washington, and it is not impossible that all the leading Boer sympathizers in this section will take part in the affair. A banquet at the Ryan hotel, so it is stated, will be the gala event, and in addition other features of entertainment will be provided. When seen yesterday Gov. Lind said that he had received a number of letters and telegrams suggesting such a plan. He added, however, that he had not committed himself to saying that he would actually invite the envoys.

CHANCE TO GROW THIN.

Maj. Edwards Receives a Government Appointment in Alaska.

Washington, May 23.—Maj. Edwards of Fargo has at last scored and has received a pretty fair federal appointment. The president has nominated the major to be receiver of public moneys at Rampart, Alaska. The place is worth $2,500 per annum.

Diphtheria and Smallpox.

Pembina, N. D., May 23.—Owing to the diphtheria epidemic at Emerson, Man., the town is quarantined. The city authorities of Pembina have placed several men along the boundary line. There are twenty-eight cases of smallpox reported at Olga, Cavalier county, which village is also quarantined.

TO SECURE CARTER'S RELEASE.

Attorneys Devising Plans for the Liberation of the Former Officer.

Leavenworth, Kan., May 26.—Frank P. Blair of Chicago, one of the attorneys for Capt. Oberlin M. Carter, the army officer in prison at Fort Leavenworth, is in town to hold a conference with the prisoner relative to the efforts that are being made to have some process instituted that will get him out of prison. Just what plan Mr. Blain intends to use he refuses to make known beyond saying that half a dozen leading attorneys of the country are hard at work devising ways and means for the release of the engineer and that he has strong hopes of success. Capt. Carter has said repeatedly that he did not and would accept a pardon, as that would be construed as an admission of his guilt. He still declares his innocence and expresses confidence in his early release.

WOULD SUSPEND AUDITORS.

The Public Examiner Wants the Law Enforced.

St. Paul, May 26.—The county auditors and treasurers are coming to time in the matter of selecting depositories for the county funds with rather greater alacrity than might have been expected. Almost every mail brings additional promise of compliance to the office of the public examiner, and in a number of instances the banks in which the funds are to be kept have already been selected. A few of the treasurers have treated the subject flippantly, and one of these wrote yesterday that he had failed to reply earlier to the public examiner's demands because he always attended to business before pleasure. Public Examiner Pope says that if any of the officials should fail to comply he will ask the governor to suspend them.

HERREID FOR GOVERNOR.

South Dakota Republicans Name Him as Their Candidate.

Sioux Falls, S. D., May 26. — The state Republican convention here was a love feast. Withal it was the largest political gathering in the history of South Dakota. The ticket nominated by the 1,044 delegates is as follows:

Governor, C. N. Herreid; lieutenant governor, George W. Snow; secretary of state, O. C. Berg; congressmen at large, C. H. Burke and E. W. Martin. National delegates, Emil Branch, Geo. Rice, L. Lastutter, A. H. Beets, C. B. Collins, M. P. Beebe, James Halley and G. G. Bennett.

The platform indorses the administration, praises Senator Kyle, commends the passage of the free homes bill, condemns monopolies and favors the gold standard.

AFTER MANY YEARS.

Man Arrested for the Murder of His Brother.

St. Paul, May 26.—Edward Erickson was yesterday arrested by a deputy sheriff, charged with the murder of his brother, Martin P. Erickson, six years ago. The arrest was brought about by the confession of Gustav Wall, made to Gov. Lind. Mr. Wall claims to have been an eye-witness of the crime and says that his conscience has troubled him ever since the event. Once before Edward Erickson had been accused of the crime but succeeded in establishing his innocence. The murder was one of the most mysterious in the criminal annals of St. Paul and completely baffled the police.

MURDER FOR MONEY.

Miserly North Dakota Farmer Shot and His Cash Taken.

Bismarck, N. D., May 26. — Simon Welch, a farmer living about four miles from this city, was murdered and robbed, his dead body being found in his farmhouse with a bullet hole through the head. He was shot with his own revolver, which was afterward placed under his pillow. He was reputed miserly and had several hundred dollars about his place, which was stolen. He had also $2,500 in the bank. Officers are investigating the case and hope to apprehend the guilty men.

Currie Made Happy.

Currie, Minn., May 26.—The citizens of Currie and vicinity are jubilant over the arrival of the first train on the new Des Moines River branch of the Omaha road. A passenger train carrying the secretary and president of the road and other prominent officials put in an appearance. The town has been thronged with visitors this week to watch the completion of the road, and wheat fields along the road have suffered violence. The depot will be located only a few rods from the main part of the town, which occasions rejoicing upon the part of many who feared that the road would decide to change the location and thus leave the old town a mile or two distant.

City Treasurer Courting Trouble.

Sioux City, Iowa, May 26.—Unless City Treasurer Hittle files a $100,000 bond before the next council meeting there will be trouble. The bond was due within ten days after the election and nearly two months have elapsed. Twice the council has threatened to declare the o ce vacant without visible effect. The scarcity of sureties is probably due to a $30,000 suit pending against the treasurer as a result of controversies dating from a previous term.

St. Paul, May 26.—John Strapp, the pipeman of No. 8 Engine company, who fell through a pole hole as he got out of bed at 2 o'clock Thursday morning and fell to the lower floor, a distance of twenty feet, died at St. Luke's hospital yesterday of concussion of the brain. The deceased was a member of the Firemen's Relief association and leaves a widow.

Will Erect a Cheese Factory.

Glenwood, Wis., May 26.—The Glenwood Dairy association incorporated here yesterday and will immediately proceed to erect a cheese factory.

Charge of Poisoning.

Montevideo, Minn., May 26. — Mrs. Augusta Kerkew of Havelock was arrested a few days ago on a charge of trying to poison her father-in-law, and upon examination was bound over to await the action of the grand jury.

Killed at a Crossing.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., May 26. — William Gilbertson, eighteen years of age, residing at Weyerhauser, Wis., while crossing the track of the Soo line with a horse was struck by a train and instantly killed.

SHATTUCK AND CARLETON.

Intercollegiate Field and Track Meet at Faribault.

The intercollegiate field and track meet between Shattuck school and Carleton college took place recently on the Shattuck grounds at Faribault.

A goodly number of the wearers of the maize accompanied Carleton's track and baseball teams to yell them on to possible victory. But victory did not come. The field track contest resulted in a score of 28 to 24 in favor of Shattuck.

The forenoon was given up to what is ordinarily known as a ball game, but in this particular case it would hardly pass under that cognomen. From the start it was evident that something was wrong. It is a question in the minds of the spectators whether the man who posed as umpire ever saw a diamond before game. The hard hitting of the "Shads," coupled with the rank decisions of the umpire resulted in numerous runs for the wearers of the military uniforms. A rank decision in the first half of the sixth inning regarding a dead ball made Capt. Hill of the Carleton team decide to forfeit the game. At this point the score stood 16 to 5 favor of Shattuck.

The afternoon was devoted to field and track work. First place counted as 3 points, second as 1. Following is the records of the events won by the respective colleges:

Carleton—Sot put, Lundeen, second; pole vault, Jacobson, first, distance, 9 feet 2 inches; discus Jacobson second; high jump, Gould, second; broad jump, Harsh, second; 120-yard high hurdle, Fernald; 220-yard run, Helg, first, time 23 4-5; hammer throw, Harsh first, Lndeen second, distance 84 feet 4 inches; half-mile run, Moses first, time lost; 220-yard hurdle, Strong second; quarter-mile run, Helg first, Harsh second, time 52 second; one-mile run, Sorby second.

Shattuck—Shot put, Lowry first, distance 31 feet 11 inches; pole vault, Warner second; discus, Diment first, distance 87 feet; high jump, Diment first, distance 5 feet 1 inch; 1000-yard run, Thompson first, Tincher second, time 10 4-5 seconds; broad jump, Powel first distance 20 feet 8 inches; 120-yard high hurdle, Tincher fist, time 20 seconds; 220-yard run, Powell second; half-mile run, Drake second; 220-yard hurdle, Tincher first, time lost; one-mile run, Warner first, time 5 minutes 53 seconds.

STREAK OF ECONOMY.

Village Dads Cancel Contracts Made by Predecessors.

This year's Detroit village council is endeavoring to place itself on record as advocating retrenchment by canceling the contract made by its predecessor for the laying of cement walks upon Washington avenue the main business street. One damage suit of $2,500 has been commenced against the village for injuries sustained, it is claimed, through defective walks. The council has also involved the village in litigation by attempting to rescind the lighting contract of the Detroit Light and Land company. This move will result in higher taxes for property owners because of the many legal expenses which will be incurred.

Carleton College Trustees.

At a meeting of the trustees of Carleton college at Nothfield to select five new trustees o fill vacancies caused by removal from the removal from the state and resignations during the past year the following were elected: Judge Thomas S. Buckham, Faribault; Rev. Dr. George R. Merrill, Minneapolis; Hiram A. Scriver, Minneapolis; Lyndon A. Smith, Montevideo, and Rev. Dr. Leavitt H. Hallock, Minneapolis. Mr. Scriver is a banker of Minneapolis and an alumnus of the college. Mr. Smith is the lieutenant governor of the state, and is a trustee of the Windom Institute, which co-operates with Carleton.

M'CLELLAN FOR VICE PRESIDENT.

Friends in Congress Announce His Candidacy.

Washington, May 26. — The candidacy of Representative George B. McClellan of New York for the Democratic vice-presidential nomination was announced yesterday by his friends in congress. Among those who are urging Mr. McClellan's nomination are Representatives Stallings and Underwood of Alabama, Maddox and Tate of Georgia, Cowherd of Missouri, Bellamy and Norton of South Carolina, Ruppert, Chandler, Driggs and Fitzgerald of New York and Deveries of California.

SHOT BY A HIGHWAYMAN.

Prominent Young Man of Cleveland Mortally Wounded.

Cleveland, May 26.—Herbert Noyes, a prominent young man of this city, a broker, was shot and fatally wounded at an early hour this morning by highwaymen on Euclid avenue. He was taken to the Cleveland general hospital and is expected to die at any moment. He came to this city three years ago from Chicago where his parents reside. The police are searching for the highwaymen, but have no clue. Noyes was shot in the neck. The footpads were frightened away before they succeeded in robbing their victim.

Several Seamen Missing.

Astoria, Or., May 26.—It is impossible at this time to correctly estimate the loss of life caused by Wednesday's storm, though eleven men are missing, according to the rolls of the seamen's union, and of these three are known to have been drowned. It is possible that the remaining eight men succeeded in reaching shore from their capsized boats at points where they have been unable to communicate with this city. The loss to fishermen has been heavy in the way of nets and boats.

Russian Warships Launched.

St. Petersburg, May 26.—The Russian battleship Poleeta and the cruiser Aurora were launched yesterday in the presence of Emperor Nicholas. The czar also watched the keel laying of two other battleships.

Preacher Fished on Sunday.

Elkhart, Ind., May 26.—A week ago Sunday Rev. Steininger, an evangelist minister, was arrested while illegally fishing and was released on bonds. Yesterday he pleaded guilty and was heavily fined.

Medal for Saving 654 Lives.

New York—Although Capt. Charles E. Clark has rescued 654 persons from drowning, his heroism had no fitting mark of recognition until recently, when, at Atlantic City, he was presented, on behalf of the Volunteer Life Saving Corps of New York Island Waters, with a silver medal.

Descendants of De La Salle in Rome.

Rome—Count de la Salle is in Rome with his sons, who came to assist in the canonization of his collateral ancestor. There are also pilgrimages from Cologne, Breslau, Spain, Portugal and Sardinia.

PROUDER THAN EVER

WERE GRIZZLED VETERANS THIS YEAR THAT THEY STOOD FOR LIBERTY IN '61.

And Stauncher Are the People, Day by Day, For Liberty For All Men, and More and More Do They Condemn "Criminal Aggression"—While Liberty Dies in South Africa People of the North Star State Give Welcome to the Boer Appealing Envoys—Coming State Convention—Next Fourth of July—Mr. Towne's Candidacy — Lessons of the Hour—Other State and National Political Points of a Busy Week.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, June 4, 1900.

"And Freedom shrieked when Kosciusko fell."

Before this shall have reached all its readers of the week, Minnesota, ever brave and true to liberty and to every appeal for human freedom, will have given in her reception to the Boer commissioners her sentiments on the subject of destruction of republics, and the stifling of the desire for self government wherever it may be throughout the world. Coming immediately upon the heels of Memorial day, with its lessons of all that was suffered for the cause of country and political freedom, the public mind and heart were the more responsive, if possible, to the questions involved. Indeed, it required no close scrutiny of all connected with observance of Memorial day to find proofs of some deeply moving power in the general public mind. This was seen in numerous directions—in the sentiments of numerous short addresses in the public schools, in selections of music, in the public addresses, and especially in the disappearance, in great degree, of that flip-flap sentiment about "duty" and "Americanization" of the world by the bullets and bayonets of conquest. Indeed, in at least one instance, that of the general address in Minneapolis, there was distinct and pertinent political allusion in the denunciation of trusts and combinations as destructive of individuality. Coming from a thick and thin Republican partisan, though a clergyman, the incident was certainly significant.

Nor does it lessen the interest that while the Boer envoys are making their appeals their beloved country is apparently in the death throes of English subjugation, as also seem the Filipinos under American conquest. It but heightens the interest, and deepens our sympathy, at the same time that it intensifies condemnation of our un-American administration in its own wrongdoing.

By the way, the week has brought to light explanation of the Republican holdoff attitude on the Boer question. It seems that the Republicans are relying on English sympathizers to make good the losses they admit they will have among anti-imperialists, on both Philippine and Boer questions. In fact it leaks out that at the recent meeting of the state committee a report was made that there are 80,000 English born citizens, whose votes they expect to get to offset such losses from other foreign born citizens and from other Americans. It is a missing calculation.

The week brought serious losses to Twin City citizenship in the death of several old residents, including Colonel John H. Stevens, the first settler of Minneapolis, and John P. Rea, the well known jurist and veteran soldier.

All official recalcitrants look alike to Public Examiner Pope, and so his subordinates feel just as much at home with the Democratic "gone wrong" treasurer of Winona as with the Republican of any other county.

It is well to record that Senator Teller's resolution of sympathy with the Boers was buried in the committee on foreign relations on motion of Senator Davis of Minnesota. But never mind, it has been passed in every nook and corner of the land a thousand times over, by liberty loving Americans.

A very pretty little game is being played by Minneapolis Republicans, endeavoring to create opposition to the renomination of Mayor Gray. But everybody is on. It is a complete waste of the raw material.

Reports of the Lincoln movement continue to be immensely favorable. Chairman Corser has completed all arrangements for the national convention, and 1,600 to 2,000 delegates are expected. The movement is reaching out to great numbers of independents who will drop McKinley and stand for Bryan. This is especially true of the anti-imperialists and the anti-trusters.

There is scarcely any diminution of the flood of good things being said both in and out of the state for Hon. C. A. Towne in connection with the vice presidential nomination. At home it is but a repetition of what we all know him to be, and away from home it is the best that can be said for such well beloved son.

Nor does all this enthusiasm and admiration endanger that wise action that all feel must be taken in the final determination, towit, that, so far as the state Democratic convention is concerned, its warm endorsement of Mr. Towne, in whatever form it may be put, shall nevertheless submit such final determination to the wisdom of the national convention. The warmest friends of Mr. Towne advise this course.

There is every indication of a large and exceedingly enthusiastic convention that will select the Minnesota representation on the 20th inst. There is likewise prospect of the largest delegation to Kansas City that has ever gone to a national convention from this state. At least a trainload may be expected and possibly two. Duluth expects a carload. It is hoped to announce all particulars by another week. The Democrats and Lincoln Republicans expect to join teams, with features appropriate to the situation, with enthusiasm and harmony.

We notice in some of the state press references to the "fight" said to be "on" for "instructions for Towne" by the state Democratic convention. All of our friends cannot be too strongly reassured that there is nothing of the kind on foot, since there is no proposition, even by the warmest of Towne advocates, for "instructions" that would bind Minnesota to any notion conflicting with the wisest determination at Kansas City. The matter is covered elsewhere in this letter, but the fact should be emphasized that no friend of Mr. Towne expects or desires any action here which will interfere with such calm, final decision at Kansas City, as will undoubtedly result.

Speaking of national conventions, that at Philadelphia is expected to be opened by prayer by a Philadelphia preacher who prayed for the first Republican convention, that of 1856. What a list of political sins the reverend gentleman will have before him for his petition for forgiveness.

At this writing congress is on the point of adjourning, and it will be a good riddance of bad rubbish.

Speaking of what has not been accomplished under Republican administration, our carrying trade is nearly wiped from the seas. Of 2,626 vessels through the Suez canal in the past year by the four great nations, the United States, Great Britain, Germany and France, 2,000 flew the British, 378 the German and 223 the French flag. Our ships numbered but 25, most all of them troop transports to and from the Philippines.

Republican policy takes money out of the carrying trade, and puts it into gigantic trusts and combinations.

In a Twin City Methodist prayer meeting Thursday evening last the "deliverance of our good brother, the president," was devoutly referred to in a long-winded prayer, reference being made to the fact that the general conference suppressed the condemnation of McKinley in the canteen episode. Of course that "good brother" would not read it if offered him, but we should like to have some one show him the arraignment made by William Lloyd Garrison, son of the abolitionist, in which he presents the proofs not only of army drinking at the canteens, but the horrors existing in Manila, not only of drink but of licentiousness, both flourishing where the president as commander-in-chief has absolute power to suppress or regulate. Mr. Garrison got his facts from personal, unimpeachable sources. It is a story to shock the whole world. Of 1,300 men in a certain regiment, 480 were registered for venereal diseases. On arrival of our troops lewd women numbered perhaps 20. They flocked there in droves immediately on relaxation of the Spanish regulation when we took control, 300 prostitutes of all Asiatic races coming by one steamer. The multiplied houses were patrolled and protected by American soldiers and still are, as is the saloon, along with the now unrestricted canteen system. Chaplain Wells is quoted as saying that "whisky and bad women bring more death than bullets or other causes in the Philippines."

And this is the accompaniment of the "imperial" policy of colonization that finds commendations from the clergy and pleas for "blessings" in the prayers of the supposedly "faithful." We earnestly commend the Philippine arraignment to such as lead in "expansion" meetings, or who stigmatize those who do not feel like approving, as "copperheads" and "traitors," "keeping up a fire in the rear."

What labor may expect as fruition of "door opening" for admission of Coolie labor, is shown in the iron regions above Duluth, where Japs are taking the place of former laborers. Install the trusts safely by McKinley's re-election, and before the next four years pass Japs, Chinese, Filipinos and Asiatic what-nots will be doing all the work at starvation wages. In the language of Hanna, "We know our business.

"Two years ago," said a traveling man, "I papered my three rooms at a cost of $7.35. The same thing has just cost me $14."

"Am I earning more?" he asked in response to a question. "Well, I guess not. I was laid off by my trusted company over a year ago and am doing whatever I can strike, and little enough of that. Men that were kept on the road get $100 a month, against $125 to $200 then. You see it requires no talent or ability to sell goods for the trusts as you are simply a messenger to go around and inform them of the latest order issued. Any man can call and take orders when all the terms in a line of trade are alike.

"And I'll tell you this. I voted for McKinley in '96, but I'm going to vote for Bryan this year because he represents return to the old-time system of trade and of government."

Here and there all over the country are patriotic men desiring a way within their means to assist the people's cause. To such we commend the suggestion of The National Watchman, that they send that grand paper to lists of friends that may be reached to vote with us, for the rest of the campaign, forwarding the amount they feel like contributing. It will do great good. G. S. C.

Three cheers for the Red, White and Blue,
Three cheers for the Red, White and Blue,
May our flag wave for Liberty ever,
Three cheers for the Red, White and Blue.

THE DYING REPUBLICS

Tears for Them in Minnesota and Greeting to Their Representatives.

Program for Grand Reception to Boer Commissioners at St. Paul June 7.

Great Cooper Union Anti-Imperial Meeting and Other Political Points.

Reform press readers throughout the state, because being universally lovers of human liberty and advocates of political freedom, will have encouraged, all in their power, the reception to the Boer Commissioners at the state Capitol, June 7. The following was the official invitation:

"St. Paul, Minn., May 29, 1900.

"Dear Sir:—

"As you are perhaps aware, the Envoys of the South African Republics, who have lately landed in this country have been invited to visit St. Paul and they will arrive in this city over the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad at 11:35 a. m. on the 7th.

"A number of citizens of this state have taken steps to afford a proper reception and entertainment for the distinguished visitors and your name has been selected as one of the reception committee. We enclose herewith a button, which indicates your position as a member of such committee, and trust that you will find it convenient to attend personally and give us the benefit of your assistance. The intention is that the Envoys should be met at the train upon their arrival in St. Paul, and that suitable exercises will be held during the day, culminating in an immense mass meeting of the citizens of the state at the Auditorium in the evening.

"Arrangements are under way, by which the railroads centering in St. Paul, will issue special rates to persons outside of the city, who desire to attend, and aside from your formal duties as a member of the committee upon the 7th of June, we would earnestly request, that you exercise your influence as far as possible to obtain a representative greeting of Minnesotans to these envoys of our two Sister Republics, who are so gallantly fighting for their liberties.

"We would be pleased to have you indicate upon the enclosed postal card, whether you will be able to attend or not, and whether we may expect more guests from your locality.

"Yours respectfully,
"JOHN D. O'BRIEN,
"F. W. BERGMEIER,
"W. SIEWART SMIT,
"THEODORE F. KOCH,
"Committee on Invitations."

There is every indication at this writing, that there will be a welcome to these envoys of "Old Paul Kruger," who having knocked in vain for Uncle Sam's official recognition, are everywhere receiving the plaudits and sympathy of the American people, worthy of the North Star state. The party of five will be met at the Minnesota eastern border, by members of Governor Lind's staff, and officially conducted to the state capital. On arrival by the morning Milwaukee train they will be met by the official state committee representing all parts of the state, by German and other societies, including Turners, and be conducted by band playing the Transvaal National Hymn and other Boer music, to the Ryan for luncheon. There will be a public parade, marching to the state capital for the official reception by Governor Lind and others. In the evening will occur a monster reception and ovation at the Auditorium, Minneapolis, as well as other cities, will join in all the demonstrations.

It is to be plainly understood that this is not a mere St. Paul affair, but is a demonstration by all the state, at the state capital.

Nor does it matter what is the situation as to the British crushing of the two South African Republics. The more desperate the cause which the envoys represent, the more demand for the sympathy and sustaining hand of the American people. It is not at this writing known whether the railroads will make reduced rates, but whether they do or not it is hoped that the people of the state will make any sacrifices necessary to show the world what is felt in Minnesota for the cause of liberty, wherever the appeal comes from.

RECENT ANTI-IMPERIALIST MEETING COOPER UNION, N. Y. CITY.

Speech of ex-Governor, ex-Senator and ex-Secretary Boutwell on Hanna:—"In the year 1895 or 1896, a man emerged from obscurity of unrecognized citizenship, and in the intervening time he has advanced himself to the head of the Republican party, and without delay he becomes the apparent director of its policy. He contributed most largely to the nomination and election of President McKinley.

"And thus a party that became historically great for its victories in war and for its achievements in peace BOWS IN SUBSERVIENCY TO A SELF-CREATED DICTATOR. THE PARTY MUST BE OVERTHROWN, and in its downfall the dictatorship will disappear and in a quadrennial period or in a decade, the party, regenerated, may come again to the head of affairs in the Republic."—(Cheers.)

Gen. Carl Schurz, ex-Senator and ex-Secretary:—"What was it that so powerfully aroused the masses of the American people about the law denying the Puerto Ricans free trade with the United States? IT WAS THE SUDDEN REVELATION OF WHAT OUR IMPERIALISM REALLY IS. PLUTOCRACY LURKS IN IMPERIALISM."

Ernest H. Crosby, millionaire chairman of the meeting on silver:—"Some people of delicate nerves feel that imperialism is going to be mixed up in the silver question. THAT IS A NEBRASKA DELUSION AND QUITE A HARMLESS ONE. THE QUESTION IS ONE OF THE FREE COINAGE OF LEAD INTO BULLETS. We admire the struggle the Filipinos have made against tremendous odds, with greater success than our censored dispatches inform us."

Resolutions adopted:

RESOLVED, THAT THE QUESTION OF IMPERIALISM OVERSHADOWS IN IMPORTANCE ALL OTHER PUBLIC QUESTIONS; THAT THE APPROVAL OR DISAPPROVAL OF THE IMPERIALISTIC POLICY PURSUED BY THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION SHOULD BE THE SUPREME ISSUE IN THE COMING NATIONAL ELECTION, AND THAT ALL AEMRICAN CITIZENS HAVING THE GOOD NAME AND THE BEST INTERESTS OF OUR COUNTRY AND THE INTEGRITY AND PERPETUITY OF OUR FREE INSTITUTIONS AT HEART SHOULD UNITE IN AN EARNEST EFFORT TO SECURE THE CONDEMNATION OF THAT POLICY AND THE STERNEST POSSIBLE REBUKE OF ITS AUTHORS AND PROMOTERS BY A DECISIVE POPULAR VOTE.

NEW YORK AND BRYAN.

New York Journal's appeal for instructed delegation: It is as clear as sunlight that Mr. Bryan is the unanimous choice of the masses of the Democratic party everywhere. HIS HONESTY, HIS COURAGE, HIS PATRIOTISM, HIS STATESMANLIKE DEFENCE OF AMERICAN PRINCIPLES AND HIS DECENCY have placed his name and fame far above the reach of his enemies. Contrasted with his old-fashioned integrity and open constancy, THE SHIFTY, EVASIVE, CORRUPT PERSONALITY OF McKINLEY SHRIVELS UP. One stands for an UNTAINTED REPUBLIC GOVERNED BY THE PEOPLE—A REPUBLIC IN WHICH A MAN COUNTS FOR MORE THAN A DOLLAR. The other stands for a TRUST-RIDDEN EMPIRE, WITH SUBJECT COLONIES PLUNDERED BY "CARPET BAGGERS." Tens of thousands of voters who supported Mr. McKinley four years ago have repudiated him and have openly declared themselves for Bryan. THE COUNTRY IS TIRED OF THE WEAK DEMAGOGUE WHO HAS MADE THE WHITE HOUSE A HEADQUARTERS FOR POLITICAL CORRUPTION AND WHOSE CHIEF ADVISER AND SPOKESMAN IS A MAN WHO OBTAINED HIS SEAT IN THE SENATE BY BRIBERY. MR. BRYAN IS THE EXACT OPPOSITE OF MR. McKINLEY. HE HAS NO RIVAL IN THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY. HE WILL HAVE NO RIVAL IN THE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

NEW POLITICAL DICTIONARY.

While a dictionary of what the flag stands for, in the different Republican inconsistencies created by Hanna-McKinleyism, is being prepared, and will issue duly, the New York World suggests some words for a revised political dictionary, made necessary by imperialism, as follows:

Liberty—The rule which a strong nation imposes upon a weak one.

Freedom—Such measure of local self-government as a conquering nation deems safe for its subjects.

Civilization—Our way of doing things.

The Constitution—A rubber blanket when the Executive needs to stretch his authority; a woolen blanket when it is necessary so to shrink it that it will not cover island possessions.

Good Faith—A readiness on the part of Boers, Puerto Ricans, Filipinos and Cubans to accept whatever the governments that have taken them in charge may offer.

Benevolent Assimilation—What the lion gives to the lamb.

The Flag—A nation's "best commercial asset."—Cecil Rhodes.

To which might be added.

Plain Duty—That which a trust controlled Executive sees before the trust pulls the strings on him.

PANIC IN PRETORIA

CITY CONTROLLED BY A VIGILANCE COMMITTEE.

Kruger's Capture Is Again Reported From Lourenzo Marques — Lord Roberts Continues Silent Regarding Pretoria — Dearth of News Gives Suspicion That the Peaceful Entry of Lord Roberts Into Pretoria Has Been Blocked—May Be Some Hard Fighting Before the British Flag Flies Over Pretoria.

London, June 3.—Lord Roberts continues silent regarding Pretoria, probably because he cannot wire of events from his own knowledge. Lourenzo Marques, where all the news from the Boer side is rehandled, cables that communication with Pretoria is now suspended, some messages by courier having reached Lourenzo Marques, but none of later date than Wednesday. They have it that the burghers are in a state of panic and that Pretoria is being controlled by a vigilance committee. Lourenzo Marques again sends the report that President

Kruger Has Been Captured.

The news blank gives a suspicion that the citizens' committee at Pretoria may not have been able to carry out their plans for securing the peaceful entry of Lord Roberts and sparing the city the horrors of a siege. The peace party appeared to be in the ascendant, and as soon as President Kruger and his cabinet left Pretoria to organize a new capital the citizens' committee persuaded the commandants of the forts to withdraw their troops from the defences, perhaps with the view of keeping Order in the Town.

If messengers were sent to the British or if the British, being two hours' march from Pretoria on Wednesday, entered it at any time prior to Friday noon, Lord Roberts would certainly have telegraphed this fact. Hence it looks as though there was a Boer force between Pretoria and Johannesburg. The Boers trekking back toward Pretoria, some of them fresh from the fight with Gen. Hamilton, would have brought a new elements into the situation and would probably overrule the peace committee, taking the direction of affairs out of their hands. If this has happened the British may, as the Chronicle says, see

Some Hard Fighting

before the British flag flies over Pretoria, for even if the Boers held three forts standing close together on the hills south of the town, they would be in a position to stand a siege. The Boers, according to a dispatch from Lourenzo Marques, have re-entered the northeastern territory of the Free State and are engaged with the British between Ficksburg and Harrismith. It is reported from Antwerp that the best rooms at the Het Haasje, one of the principal hotels there, have been engaged from June 25. Gen. Buller is moving slowly against the Boer flanks. A dispatch from Vryburg, dated May 30, says:

Kruger's Occupancy

"During the occupation of this place by the Boers they flogged the natives for slight offences. A whip and several cords, knotted and salted, were found at the police station. A boy who brought a letter to a woman received twenty-five lashes, and another who sympathized with hir received fifteen."

Lady Georgiana Curzon has raised £17,000 to provide comforts and luxuries at Mafeking.

Conflicting Reports.

The Times has the following from Lourenzo Marques, dated June 1: "Reports of the most conflicting character are current here due to the activity of the Boer agents. While one section declares that President Kruger has returned to Pretoria for the purpose of arranging terms of surrender, another asserts that the British have been repulsed outside of Pretoria. Nothing authentic is known here regarding Mr. Kruger's whereabouts or the situation in the Transvaal."

ATTACK BY PIRATES.

Another Feature of the Boxer Movement in China.

New York, June 3. — A dispatch to the Herald from Hongkong says: For the first time in years a large steamer has been attacked on the Yangtse river, near Ching King by pirates. The attack took place at the junction of the great canal from Tien-tsin. This indicates that the "boxers" movement around Peking is spreading south, but reflective people realize that there is no danger for the community because the "boxers" are not armed. The only danger is to property and isolated foreigners in the interior. The whole movement will collapse with the first efforts to suppress it.

ANOTHER FOR M'COY.

He Defeats Jack Bonner in Thirteen Rounds.

New York, June 3.—Kid McCoy added another to his long list of victories at the Broadway Athletic club last night by defeating Jack Bonner of Summit, Pa., in the thirteenth round of what was to have been a twenty-five-round bout at 158 pounds. It took all of McCoy's cleverness and hard hitting capabilities to put the big miner down. It was a fast and clever boxing exhibition in which both men did some good work. Both were in good condition for the fight. The betting odds were 2 to 1 in McCoy's favor.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING.

Daughter of One of the Oldest Settlers Near Alexandria, S. D.

Alexandria, S. D., June 3. — Pearl Bloom, daughter of Samuel Bloom, was instantly killed by lightning during the storm last evening. Mr. Bloom lives on the James river, seven miles south of this city, and is one of the oldest settlers of Hanson county. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the entire community. Miss Bloom was a favorite among the young people wherever known.

FIGHTING NOT OVER.

Lord Roberts Reports Several Recent Engagements.

London, June 5.—Lord Lansdowne, secretary of state for war, has received the following from Lord Roberts, dated Orange Grove, June 2:

"Johannesburg is quiet. The people are surrendering arms and ponies. Only three Boer guns were left at the forts. The Queenslanders captured, May 30, a creusot with eleven wagons and stores of ammunition. Commandant Botha of Zoutpansberg, his field cornet and 100 prisoners were taken in the fighting around Johannesburg, some belonging to the foreign contingents and the Irish brigade. The Thirteenth yeomanry were attacked May 29 between Kroonstad and Lindley. There were some casualties.

Imperial Yeomanry Attacked.

"Owing to the interruption of telegraph lines I only to-day received a report from Col. Sprigg that his battalion of imperial yeomanry was attacked between Kroonstad and Lindley May 29. Casualties to follow. The shops in Johannesburg are being opened and there seems to be a general feeling of relief at the peaceful occupation of the town. The proclamation announcing the annexation of the Orange Free State was made known at Bloemfontein May 26 by Gen. Prettyman, military governor. The troops under Gen. Kelly-Kenny formed a square, the royal standard was hoisted, the troops saluted, a royal salute was fired and the queen was cheered. The name 'Orange River Colony' was well received."

-o-

London, June 4.—There is no direct news from Pretoria of later date than Thursday evening. Gen. French's cavalry was then at Irene, eight miles south of Pretoria, and firing was heard there. Lord Roberts was conducting secondary operations elsewhere. The correspondents with Lord Roberts have not got through a line about the operations after the occupation of Johannesburg. Official messages continue to come through, but press telegrams are held up, probably to avoid their giving a hint even as to what may be the pending operations. From the other side there filters through Lourenzo Marques a mass of statements, some contradictory, others obviously improbable, but all purporting to be facts: "Passengers arriving at Lorenzo Marques Saturday, direct from Pretoria, say that the capital was when they left Thursday. The forts were dismantled. The Boer guard at Komati Poort searched all trains and turned back most of the fugitives, among them deserting foreigners who were striving to reach neutral soil. Immense Boer convoys of provisions are between Pretoria and Middleburg. Fifteen trains are sent daily to Machadasdor with supplies for Lydenburg. Pretoria is pictured by the refugees as in a state of indescribable confusion and chaos. The populace are dismayed and the British are expected hourly." Some foreign attaches have arrived at Lourenzo Marques to communicate with their governments

Preparing to Surrender

For Orders to Leave,

as they consider that organized war on the Transvaal side is at an end. Flying among the Boers are reports that the British have been beaten back at Lindley with heavy loss, that the main attack on Elandfontein failed and Lord Roberts was forced to retire to Kilpsriverburg; that the railway has been cut behind him south of Vereeniging, and that a provision train has been captured. Without crediting any of the Boer bulletins everything from the field of war behind Lord Roberts points to a great effort last week to paralyze his advance by a bold stroke from the eastward at the railway north of Bloemfontein. Unless four Boer columns were in a movement seemingly with this objective, there was a commando in front of Gen. Brabant, near Ficksburg; another faced Gen. Rundle near Senakal, a third occupied Lindley and pressed toward Kroonstad. These operations, assuming them to have been independent, all Appear to Have Failed.

A revival of the Boer fighting power east of Lord Roberts' advance, although fruitless, is a symptom that the Boers are not yet crushed. In Gen. Rundle's attack on the intrenched Boers, seven miles east of Senekal May 29, the British did not see a Boer all day, so completely were they screened. The British infantry did not get within 1,000 yards of their riflemen. The 182 losses wired by Lord Roberts were suffered by the Grenadiers and Scots Guards while advancing over a level from which the grass had been burned. The soldiers, clad in khaki, were a conspicuous target against the black burned ground. Gen. Rundle withdrew his whole force at Sundown to Senekal, having succeeded in drawing the Boers from Lindley, allowing the threatened force to get away safely.

KILLED IN A TRAIN WRECK.

Spreading of Track Causes Death of the Engineer.

Shelbyville, Ind., June 5.—While running at twenty-five miles an hour a freight train on the Big Four system at Brookfield was ditched by the spreading of the track. When the engine started to leave the track Engineer Charles Cassidy started to jump, and as he did so his fireman, James Hart, attempted to check him. Both men were thrown under the engine, Cassidy being crushed to death. Hart escaped fatal injuries. Brakeman Charles Clary had his right leg crushed.

CHILD KIDNAPPED.

St. Paul Man Is Suspected of Taking His Own Child.

Decorah, Iowa, June 5. — Katherine Lott, the five-year-old niece of Dr. W. F. Coleman, was kidnaped yesterday. She was playing in the alley back of the house when two men drove up and took her. She was left in her uncle's charge by her mother, who has been suing for a divorce from her husband, Charles F. Lott of St. Paul. It is suspected that the father took the child.

AGUINALDO IS SHOT

FILIPINO LEADER EITHER DEAD OR WOUNDED.

Maj. Marsh Overtakes What Is Believed to Have Been Aguinaldo and His Party North of Manila—Americans Killed or Wounded an Officer Who Is Supposed to Be Aguinaldo—Horse the Officer Was Riding Captured — Saddlebags Contained Aguinaldo's Diary and Other Private Papers.

Vigan, Luzon, June 2, via Manila, June 4.—Maj. Marsh, with his detachment of the Thirty-third regiment, overtook what is believed to have been Aguinaldo and his party on May 19 at Lagat, 100 miles north of Manila. The Americans killed or wounded an officer supposed to be Aguinaldo, whose body was removed by his followers. Aguinaldo had 100 men, Maj. Marsh 150. The American command reached Labuso, where Aguinaldo had made his headquarters since March 6 on May 7. Aguinaldo had fled seven hours before, leaving all the beaten trails and traveling through the forest along the banks of streams. Toward evening May 19 Maj. Marsh struck Aguinaldo's outpost about a mile outside of Lagat, killing four Filipinos and capturing two. From the latter he had been camped there for the night. Although exhausted and half-starved Maj. Marsh's men entered Lagat on the run. They saw the insurgents scattering into the bushes or over the plateau. Along the mountainside near the town twenty-five Filipinos dressed in white with their leader on a gray horse, were seen. The Americans fired a volley and shot the officer from his horse. His followers fled, carrying the body. The Americans on reaching the spot caught the horse, which was richly saddled. Blood from a badly wounded man was on the animal and on the ground. The saddle-bags contained Aguinaldo's diary and some private papers and letters. One of these was addressed "To the Civilized Nations." It protested against the

American Occupation

of the Philippines. There was also found copies of Senator Beveridge's speech translated into Spanish and entitled "The Death Knell of the Filipino People." Maj. Marsh, believing that the Filipinos had taken to a river which is a tributary to the Chico, followed it for two days, reaching Tiao, where he learned the Filipinos had descended the river on a raft, with the body of a dead or wounded officer covered with palm leaves. Here Maj. Marsh reviewed his tired and bruised officers and men, picked out twenty-four of the freshest, with whom he scoured the country for six days longer, but without finding any trace of the fugitives. The Americans pushed on and arrived at Aparri on May 29. The officer shot was either

Aguinaldo or His Adjutant and as the horse was richly caprisoned it is a fair presumption that it was Aguinaldo. The soldiers of Gen. Young, military governor of Northwest Luzon, captured early last month an insurgent officer with papers revealing Aguinaldo's whereabouts. Gen. Young, in order to continue the pursuit, gave Maj. Marsh an opportunity to finish the work began in November. Maj. Marsh left Candon May 1, hurrying north, while Col. Hare, with a battalion divided into two parties, started for Rangued, covering the trails westward. The garrisons in the Cagyan valley were disposed in such a way as to guard the avenues of escape eastward. Spies heralded the approach of Maj. Marsh with signal fires. On reaching Labian he intercepted a letter from Aguinaldo, the ink of which had hardly dried, addressed to an officer and saying: "There has arrived this morning at Labogan a hostile column from Boki. I have set out with my column. I have no fixed route." The letter was signed "Col. David," a sobriquet by which Aguinaldo was called at the presidio where a banquet was held and speeches made eulogizing Gregorio del Pio. That night Maj. Marsh's men slept in the bamboo, resuming the advance in the morning, reaching Lagat, forty miles distant, in two days, although it was raining in the mountains at the time. Aguinaldo's papers are important. They show he took refuge in Isabela province, where he remained until he established himself at Labogan, province of Abra, where he resolved to direct the rainy season operations. Until recently he was ignorant of outside events, making no pretence of directing the insurrection, happy if indeed he might be able to keep alive among the hostile Igoshotes, who killed several of his followers.

Of the Filipino Army

CENSUS MEN FORCED TO QUIT.

Brooklyn Fails to Take Kindly to Their Questions and Eleven Resign in Self-Defense.

New York, June 5.—Twelve Brooklyn census enumerators quit Saturday. When Supt. Atterbury got to his office in the morning most of the enumerators who intended to resign were awaiting him. The spokesman said: "Women have threatened us with imprisonment for what they deem the insults contained in the queries of Uncle Sam. Men have said that they would like to break our noses for prying into their business, while aliens by the score have abused us in all the living languages and some of the dead ones."

It is to be hoped that the senate will not undertake to refund money that Senator Clark spent in trying to get a seat.

Whenever a scandal crops out of the Chicago water office the temperate citizen consoles himself with the thought that it would have been much worse had the fluid been beer.

The curious gymnastic feats which parrots sometimes perform in their cages have been ascribed to the desire of the birds to vary the monotony of their life in captivity. That was the opinion of Mrs. Maudsley, the wife of the Central American explorer, until she saw the parrots, in a state of perfect freedom, indulging in all the feats practised by their caged cousins.

It has been said that any nation which collects an indemnity from Turkey ought to receive additional compensation for the time lost and the strain on the nervous system. The delay in paying for losses inflicted upon our people in the Armenian massacres is entirely in keeping with Turkish traditions. The approved theory in the sultan's domains seems to be that "he pays twice who pays promptly."

The peculiar condition of the atmosphere over southern England and western France on January 11th gave rise to extraordinary exhibitions of solar halos, or sun dogs, described in the scientific journals of both countries. The phenomena were very beautiful, the sun being surrounded with concentric circles and inverted arches showing rainbow colors, while mock suns appears among the halos. They were caused by clouds of minute ice-crystals floating at a great elevation.

Some curious spiral fossils, recently discovered in rocks of the Permian period in Russia, appear to represent a kind of sawlike appendage, armed with enamelled teeth, and capable of being rolled up in the manner of a spiral spring, which once belonged to a species of fish related to the rays and dogfish of today. A French geologist, Monsieur Priem, suggests that the fish carried this singular weapon as an extension of its upper jaw. Except in its capability of being rolled up, such an appendage seems to be no more wonderful than that of the sawfish or the swordfish.

A writer in the North American Review calls attention to the evils of excessive legislation. It appears that at their last annual sessions, the legislatures of our forty-five states enacted more than fourteen thousand laws—good, bad and indifferent. Such industry might be said to speak volumes for the public spirit of the American people if we could wink out of sight the facts that many of the "acts" spring from an unwholesome desire to accomplish social reforms by short processes, and that many more of them represent individual or corporate contrivances to utilize the power of the state for the turning of private grindstones.

One of the most important facts which developed during the late war with Spain was the great need by this country of more coaling stations for the navy. The navy department, realizing this, has been for some time at work planning for the establishment of stations at various parts of the world, and all now depends upon the negotiations in progress between the state department and the various countries concerned. The government of Liberia has recently consented to the establishment of a coaling station at a site to be selected by the navy department, and it is the intention to immediately begin the necessary work. The department will establish stations at Pago Pago, Guam and Honolulu.

Social and economic conditions, as they are reported to exist in Guam, seem almost idyllic. Almost every one owns land, and lives happily in cultivating it; and only men do that necessary work, for the women remain at home, engaged in more appropriate duties. No man's necessities constrain him to work for another. He is his own capitalist and hired man, consequently there are no strikes, no lockouts—no "labor problem," in fact, to perplex and disturb. Since there is no "effective demand" for what the people do not produce themselves, they do not need money. There is neither store nor market on the island in which household necessaries may be bought by exiles from the outside world, and according to Governor O'Leary, upon whose authority the more essential facts stated above are based, "You have to beg people to sell things." Obviously, modern progress and modern ideas have a wide field in Guam.

Adulteration of milk is a rather different matter from the adulteration of wood alchol or plug tobacco, and this difference should be more adequately recognized by the statutes. Milk that is loaded with a deadly drug is simply poison and if it is fed to a delicate child that child is murdered as surely as though the milkman had given it paris green. Injurious adulterations put into the diet of grown-up people are bad enough, but doctoring ordinary foods has a kind of respectability compared with poisoning the food of babies.

The Italian malcontent has long been noted as the most violent of his kind. He slew President Carnot and the empress of Austria and at every hand his malevolence has been conspicuous. Now he has taken a new step and introduced an instrument of terror which may well strike dismay to the hearts of many governments. When the socialists at Rome could not be heard in debate yesterday they congregated in the chamber of deputies and sang hymns until parliament adjourned in self-defense.

A LETTER FROM THE FRENCH CAPITAL

The French Do Everything Just the Opposite from Americans.

The following letter is from a young American who is one of the advance guard at the Paris exposition. It is needless to say that the writer is a close and critical observer. His observations are keen enough to be of interest to others besides the friend to whom the missive was addressed:

My Dear Friend: Without preamble I forward you the results of my scouting expedition in behalf of our party of Exposition visitors. I am sorry now to have accepted the job. I have not seen very much so far, and the skin left on my anatomy amounts to very little. Tell our friends to bring along a barrel or two of well assorted money.

Their main "graft," if I can use this slang word, is to do everything wrong-side out, probably to mislead strangers. As a consequence it is very safe rule to reverse all the home rules while you live in Paris. I have compiled a whole book of examples to substantiate this statement, and will call your attention to the most striking.

When we take to the right in the streets, they take to the left, and vice versa; hence the danger of all kinds of collisions. I received a half a dozen bumps before I learned that. As a matter of etiquette the Frenchmen salute the ladies first, while we await their good pleasure in this respect. In their books the table of contents is at the end instead of being at the beginning. The advertisements in the newspapers are always to be found in the last pages and the editorials in the first column of the first page. Their newspapers are no newspapers at all; they are journals, their magazines are reviews and vice versa.

The best places in the theaters are in the balcony, not in the parquet. The matinee takes place at 11 o'clock a. m., not in the afternoon. In this they are probably right, as "matinee" means morning. Yet they never say "good morning," but "good day."

By the way, all the clocks in the restaurants near the theaters are half an hour in advance of the standard time; this is intended to force you to leave half of your dinner untouched, thus saving money to the crafty restaurateur.

In America you never pay for theatrical programs, soap, light and towels in the hotels (this is called service), and napkins in the restaurants; in Paris you will have to pay for all these things and many others, among them bath robes, soap and towels you call for in the bathhouses.

If you have the misfortune of being "pinched" by a "Sergent de ville," he will not arrest you, but will simply take your name and address. The subpoena will cost you four cents by mail, but you will have to demonstrate that you are not guilty. On the other hand your lawyer will have the privilege of closing the case. Should fine and imprisonment be ordered by the court, time will be given to settle the fine and to constitute yourself a prisoner. As a matter of course this applies only to misdemeanors.

In case of drunkenness the saloon keeper who sold the last drink is prosecuted as the main offender. I was furnished this information by a prominent jurist, having had no personal experience.

The American girl is comparatively free, losing this freedom as soon as she gets married. The French girl never sees a beau alone, but does as she pleases after her marriage. An elopement in France is useless, even if the girl is of age, because no one can perform the marriage ceremony without the consent of the parents or guardians. A girl who is of age can obtain this consent by process of law by summoning twice her parents or guardians at an interval of six months before the court which decides the case. Girls, however, occasionally elope so as to compromise their reputation and thus compel their family to give their consent. An elopement not followed by marriage is called by the facetitious Parisians "a marriage at the City Hall of the Twenty-first Arrondissement," there being only twenty arrondissements or districts in Paris. Some 500 or 600 children are weekly born in Paris from these unions contracted with the left hand.

Presentation is not necessary in the French capital; in fact, you enter into conversation in public places with any one you meet. But if you present some one you are absolutely responsible for him. A lady has no right to refuse recognition to a gentleman who has been presented to her; presentations, however, must have been previously assented to by her. The husband is responsible for a breach of etiquette committed by his wife. The American who is married supports his wife. The Frenchman makes her work. If he is in business she keeps his books and acts as cashier. The aristocratic French woman even keeps house no matter how sick her husband is. In the poorer classes the husband works at his trade, and the wife at her own unless there are too many children to take care of. By the way, the Parisian woman seldom nurses her own children, she sends them to the country to be raised by peasant women until they are two or three years old. A Parisian woman is seldom, if ever, seen in the parks nursing her offspring.

Any one seeing a woman carrying heavy bundles in the streets may offer assistance and it will be accepted. Similarly the Parisian woman will seldom refuse to be escorted with an umbrella when it rains. Umbrellas are freely offered in this way on top of the omnibuses and tramways, when the sun is too hot or when it rains. To America such offer would appear impertinent. When a vehicle is stranded in the streets of Uncle Sam's dominion the passers-by generally let the driver get out of it as best he can. The Parisians of all classes do the reverse; rich and poor, young and old push at the wheel. If two men fight, everybody takes a part in the fray, even jumping on the Sergeant de ville who attempts to restore peace. The fun of it is that most of the time the fighters do not know what the whole business is about, and many a poor devil gets a thrashing simply because he happens to be there.

Paris has twenty mayors who are no mayors at all. The Prefect of the Seine, appointed by the government, is the real chief of the municipality. Paris pays a police force amounting to 21,000 men, including the municipal guard, and the regiment of firemen, but the government alone represented by the prefect commands this force. The same rule applies to all the municipal institutions of the French capital; the city pays, the government rules.

There are a thousand other dissimilarities between the French and the Americans; it would require a dozen letters to make mention of them. What is the end for us seems to be the commencement for them. To quote only an example, "our school commencement" is called by them the end of the school year." Our working week ends Saturday afternoon; they work until Sunday night late, and if they rest at all take their vacation on Monday. The workingmen are paid on Monday, which they call "St. Lundi" (Holy Monday), because they seldom work on pay day.

HAPPY JUNE DAYS.

Where Byron Was Born.

Another birthday of Byron has just passed, and still the long promised memorial to mark the spot is conspicuous by its absence. The place of the poet's birth is the corner of Holles and Oxford streets. A large drapery emporium covers the site, and the business stationery bears the poet's busts in the right corner. But Byronites look in vain for a marble bust outside, which it was understood would replace the bronze one removed years ago on account of structural alterations.—London Express.

NOTICE WOMEN'S CLOTHES.

Men May Pretend They Do Not, but Facts Are Against Them.

"It may be true that men don't appear to notice women's clothes," said a woman the other day, "but all the masculines of my acquaintance have a very unpleasant way of remembering the things I wear, nevertheless. The other evening one of my friends came to se me. He is a taciturn individual, who, should I come into the drawing room to greet him some evening clad in a Paquin gown of satin embroidered with pearls and trimmed with duchesse lace, would make no comment whatever. "Well, on this particular evening I had on my new spring hat, which is really an old one completely metamorphosed, I thought, and I was betrayed very foolishly into asking him how he liked it. "Isn't it pretty?" I asked, secure in my belief that he didn't know a hat from a thimble. "I don't like it as well as I did last year, when it was trimmed with yellow crepe and quills,' was his astonishing response, so unexpected a response, indeed, that I nearly fell off the steps and became suddenly painfully aware of a rip in one finger of my glove. Any man that could recognize a chapeau after many days and when it was so greatly changed, I reasoned, must take in at a glance the smallest detail of my toilet, and I instantly became nervous and began to pat my hair and arrange my frills as women do when they're conscious. That's the reason I believe that men notice details when they don't appear to, for if this dignified man would remember a trifling thing like a last year's hat, why wouldn't his fellows?"—Pittsburg Dispatch.

MAN'S SUSPENDERS

Fastened to His Back by a Bullet From a Revolver.

"I've heard of curious methods of saving lives," said a veteran detective at headquarters the other day, "but I believe the oddest I ever ran across was in New Orleans one Mardi Gras. I had gone with other detectives from all over the country to look out for crooks who usually flock there carnival time. One morning I was walking down Newspaper Row, which is on Camp Street, when the crowds which were gathering to view the parade were startled by a pistol shot coming from one of the banks. A second later a man dashed out of the door and made a bee-line for a paper store across the way and was immediately lost from sight. With a couple of policemen and a lot of reporters I went into the bank and there looked for the dead man. But the fellow who was shot, though he considered himself as good as dead, wasn't a corpse. He was nearly scared to death, though. He was surrounded by employes of the bank, and when asked where he was shot, said he didn't know. We looked him over but there wasn't a trace of blood to be found, yet he declared he'd been hit in the back somewhere and began to cry. A reporter discovered a small hole in the coat. 'Here it is,' said he, 'shot plumb through the spinal column, and the bullet is on the inside.' The man who was shot didn't fancy the joke at all and became more tearful than ever. He took off his coat and then his vest, and then pulled his suspenders off his shoulders. The bands fell over his arms, but the straps remained stationary where the leather wedge was. One of the fellows gave a jerk, the victim gave a howl and the suspenders came down, bullet and all, for the latter had become imbedded in the leather and had pinned his suspenders to his back as neatly as if they had grown there. The victim was immensely relieved, as you may well imagine, but I don't know that he was so lucky after all, as he is now serving a long term in the Louisiana penitentiary for embezzlement, and the man who shot him is, thanks to the peculiar justice dealt by Louisiana juries, a free man today, but out some $800. His victim was a clerk in a bank and had got hold of his money on pretense of investment and had spent it all. The only way he could get even was to shoot.'—New York Mail and Express.

DEALING WITH SAVAGES.

Missionary Took Desperate Chances to Christianize Cannibals.

A very remarkable story was told by Senator Vest, of Missouri, a day or two ago. "The most pathetic scene I ever witnessed in my life," said he to a Washington Post reporter, "was the outcome of a very singular and curious condition of affairs. Up in British North America there was a tribe of Indians under the control of native sorcerers, and practicing all manner of savage rites. Among other things, these Indians were cannibals. A Scotchman, named Duncan, went among them, and at the risk of his own life civilized them. He taught them every dogma of our religion except the Lord's supper. His great work had been to win them from cannibalism, to teach them that capturing and then roasting and devouring human beings was barbarous. He was, therefore, afraid to acquaint them with the sacrament of the Lord's supper, because they would, in turn, ask him why it was wrong to eat each other and yet a part of religion to eat their god. He doubted his ability to explain the matter satisfactorily to their untutored minds, and so, for fear that they would regard him as an imposter and return to their barbarous ways, he let the matter rest. This was not satisfactory," continued Senator Vest, as he told the story, "to the governor of the province of Vancouver or the bishop of the English church, both of whom demanded that he should either administer the sacrament or else give up his lay ministry in the church. Duncan explained the reasons which had actuated him, but they were not accepted as sufficient. He appealed to the highest authorities of the Church of England and was overruled. He went back to his Indians and asked them if they would accompany him to Alaska, where they could be under a flag that guaranteed religious freedom. Almost the entire tribe of 1200 Indians decided to follow him. When I was there the Indians were taking the doors from off their houses, the sashes from their windows, and their scanty furniture from their rooms, preparatory to sailing away in their great canoes, in order to start life over again in a new country. It was, as I have said, the most pathetic scene I ever witnessed. It was more than this," added Senator Vest, speaking with almost vehement emphasis, "It was the most conspicuous example of religious prejudice and fanaticism I have ever known."

Dog Saved the Boy's Life.

The large pet dog of Charles Hagerman of Irishtown, Adams county, saved the life of his 3-year-old son in a singular manner while the two were at play in the yard. The child had a chain fastened around its body and attached to the neck of the dog. They were strolling about, when the boy accidentally fell into the cistern, containing several feet of water. The dog, bracing himself for the shock, pulled on the chain with sufficient force to hold the child's head above the water. The pitiful cries of the boy were heard by a young lady residing with the family, who hastened to the scene, and rescued the little fellow from his perilous position.—Baltimore Sun.

Bering Sea Phosphorescence.

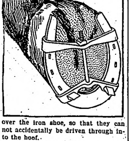
Washington Star: "I have often heard of the wonderful phosphorescence of the southern seas," remarked a traveler from the north to a Star reporter, "and I have seen many pretty fair samples of it in the Atlantic between New York and English ports, but I did not know it prevailed to any extent in northern waters until during the last summer. In August last I was on board the revenue cutter McCulloch, in the Bering sea, about sixty-three degrees north latitude, bound north, when one night about 10 o'clock I happened to go on deck, and I was almost frightened by the sight of the sea. The wind was blowing sharply enough to raise the white-caps, and the whole sea looked as if it were lighted from its depths by a million arc lights, throwing the whitest rays upward and under the flying foam. The hollows of the waves were dark, but every crest that broke showered and sparkled, as if it were filled with light. From the sides of the ship great rolls of broken white light fell away, and she left a broad pathway of silvery foam as far back as the eye could reach. But about this hour was the most striking display. Here it was as if the ship were plowing through a sea of white light, and as the water was thrown back from her prow it fell in glittering piles of light upon the dark surface beyond, and was driven far down below, lighting the depths as if all the electricity of the ocean were shooting its sparkles through the waves and turning itself into innumerable incandescents that flashed a second and then shut out forever. I stood on the forecastle deck looking down into the brilliant white turmoil of the waters until I began to feel as if we were afloat upon some silver sea, and a real uncanny feeling took possession of me. The white ship was lighted by the phosphorescence of the waters, so that as high up as the deck there was a pale, weird white, that made one feel as if the 'Flying Dutchman' were abroad upon the seas aond had passed by us. The masts towered in ashy gray above the decks, and every rope and line stood out distinctly in the light, but cast no shadows. It was all as ghostly as if we had gone up against the real thing, and it was a positive relief to get back into the wardroom, where there was something more human. I don't know how long it lasted, but when I went to bed at 11 o'clock I could still see the silver shining through the air port in my state room."

Gear Operated by Electricity.

On the California, Nebraska and West Virginia, three 13,000-ton armored cruisers planned for the United States government, electricity will operate the turret turning gear, blowers for ventilation, mechanical bread mixer, laundry, amunition hoists, gun rammers and air compressors for torpedoes. The machinery for propelling each vessel is to develop over 22,000-horse power to drive the ships 23 knots, and this, with the standard naval water tube boilers, must not exceed 2,000 tons in weight.

Calk Attachment for Horseshoe.

The necessity of keeping a horse's shoes sharpened in winter weather to enable him to keep his feet on ice-covered and slippery pavements has given inventors an attractive problem. One solution offered is an adjustable calk that can be fastened to the shoe temporarily and which can readily be resharpened at will. It consists of two bars, bent as shown, with their ends bent up into hooks so as to engage with the shoe. As both bars are of shorter length than the largest diameter of the shoe, it is evident that they can readily be held in place with a bolt and nut in the manner shown. Wedge shaped calks are fastened in tapering holes formed in the bars, the location of the holes being directly over the iron shoe, so that they can not accidentally be driven through into the hoof.



Believe Andree Is Alive.

Ernst Andree, brother of the explorer, S. A. Andree, believes that his brother is alive, and that he will be heard from by the latter part of the coming summer. Ernst Andree is thoroughly acquainted with his brother's plans and is better able to discuss the notable fate of the polar expedition than any other living scientist. He has made a study of the movements of the northern ice pack, of aerial currents in that latitude, and of the known bodies of land in proximity to the pole. He assisted the explorer in designing, equipping and testing the balloon in which S. A. Andree and two companions started from Norway, for the north pole July 11, 1897. A note dated July 13, 1897, was brought back by a carrier pigeon four days after the start was made. No word has been received since from the party.

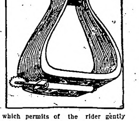
Ernst Andree advances the theory that the balloon was blown about by conflicting currents of air and finally set down at a point from which it would take the party three arctic summers to reach the neighborhood of Hudson bay.

"I expect to hear from my brother during the coming summer or autumn," says Ernst, "but in case he does not return by that time I must admit that the chances of his being seen alive again are very slim."

Herr Andree scouts the idea that the balloon has been wrecked, and asserts that the party could travel in it with even more safety than in sledges. It was put together, he says, without regard to expense, and every precaution possible was taken to make it absolutely safe and able to resist a violent shock. Moreover, in the water the balloon was almost as manageable as a boat.

Spur on Stirrup.

The picturesque though cruel heel spur that has played so important a part in all the famous rides of history is to be displayed at last by a novel and up-to-date stirrup spur, similar to that shown in the illustration. The spur, which is of the familiar toothed wheel type, is fastened to the heel of the riding boot. The shank to which the wheel is attached is contained in a casing and mounted on a spring, which permits of the rider gently pricking the horse's sides without applying any force to the dig.



Animals Play Jokes.

To show that there are useful spots of gray matter in every species of animal a trainer picked out the ugly and forbidding hippopotamus. He said, quotes the New York Tribune: "Maybe you think this freak of animal nature doesn't know a thing or two. I'll show you that he does. We have one with us who is as big as all outdoors and with his eyes peeled looks like an old-fashioned picture of the Inferno. His keeper is named Spencer. This name ought to make him know better. The keeper feeds the hippopotamus with bran balls. Punch is fond of these. They are rolled up and tossed far into his internal economy before he can close his jaws.

"A short time ago this keeper got funny and teased Punch by holding a ball of the coveted morsel close to his nose, where he could get the sweet savor of it, and then jerking it out of his reach. This was not a pleasing performance for Punch, and in many ways peculiar to his kind he showed it. He lay down in his tank and held his nose low, and when the keeper held out the bran ball he pretended to be indifferent or asleep. Seeing this the keeper became careless and began rubbing the bran ball about Punch's nose. Here is where Punch showed the cunning of ancestry, and, waiting his chance, grabbed the keeper's hand between his teeth.

"'Wow-wow-wow!' yelled the keeper.

"'Whu-u-owa-a-a-h!' snorted Punch in great delight.

"After enjoying the situation for a minute or more and winking his eye knowingly he eased up on Spencer's hand, so that the latter could get it back to its original ownership. Punch then slid back into his tank of water and the noise that ruffled the surface indicated that he was having a jolly good laugh underneath at the expense of Spencer.

"Elephants are the trickiest of all, however. They look dull and heavy, but just the same they are, like a mischievous boy, always on the alert for forbidden fun. In the twenty-five elephants of our show fifteen of them are trick performers and able to do a lot of things that startle observers. Only the other day five of these were doing a pyramid act and Professor Lockhart had just climbed up to the top of the head of the beast forming the apex when the largest elephant gave a keen squeal and at this signal the huge animals turned in opposite directions and the surprised professor had to jump to save himself from a disgraceful tumble. The elephants got together in a corner and the shrill blast they blew in unison showed the knowing that they were in a mood of enjoyment and the joke was on the professor."

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Cow Peas.

Probably no forage crop has attracted more attention in recent years than the cow pea. It was slow in getting a foothold in public esteem, but when that position was once obtained it advanced very rapidly in public favor. This is largely due to the fact that the experiment stations took up the cow pea and investigated it. They found it to be a very good plant for the collection of nitrogen and its introduction into the soil. The farmers are now in close touch with the experiment stations and the value of the cow pea was pressed on the notice of the farmers wherever the pea can be successfully and safely grown. We do not hesitate to say that if we had no experiment stations the cow pea would be still struggling for recognition. Without doubt the cow pea is destined to play a much larger part in our agriculture than at present. There is no reason why the farmers that have ground in the early crops in the spring and first part of the summer should not plant cow peas afterward. Of course the pea vines will not in such case mature seed, but the vines and roots will greatly improve the soil.

Horticultural Observations.

There is to be a big crop of fruit this year, as the trees and vines are setting very full with few exceptions. If all the fruit on the trees is left to grow, the harvest will show a large amount of very small fruit that will bring almost nothing in the market. The well-formed fruit of good size will get the prices that pay the profit. This is the time for reading and calculating orchardists to consider if it will not pay them to thin their fruit. If one-fourth the number of apples, peaches or pears be grown on a tree that blooms full the weight of fruit produced will be the same, and it will sell in the market for more money. Some of our enterprising orchardists have been thinning their tree fruits for many years, and have made that operation a part of their system. What they have found profitable others may imitate with hopes of like success.

* * *

It is to be hoped that the time is not far off when the producers of fruit will find some way of controlling the sale of it by the middlemen to the extent of seeing that the fruit reaches the consumer in as good condition as it leaves the hands of the grower. It is exceedingly discouraging to the ambitious grower to know that if he sends beautiful fruit to the Chicago market it is more than likely to be repacked and used for facing poorer fruit. It is one of the problems that will have to be settled by the collective action of fruit producers. The consumers in the great cities will hail the advent of such a day with gladness. At the present time Chicago buyers have become almost hardened to being swindled in fruit purchases. One of the great reasons for the extraordinary development of the banana trade is that people are able to purchase them without trusting to luck. If a man gets swindled when he buys bananas, it is his own stupidity that is at fault, as he can see every banana before he buys it. But with most of our native fruit, like the peach, a man must view it through red netting. If he pulls off the netting and finds fine-looking fruit, when he gets home he is likely to find inedible green fruit making up the bulk of the basket. One day last summer the writer desired to secure a basket of the best peaches on the market. He found a dealer with a large quantity of fairly good fruit, and with a few baskets of fancy peaches marked up to a fancy price. He was assured that the price was high because all the peaches in the basket were as good as the ones on top. When the baskets were opened at the home of the buyer it was found that the bulk of the fruit consisted of green peaches the size of walnuts, with just enough fine peaches over them to conceal them. The result was in this case a lessened purchase of peaches, the preference being given to fruit that could not be dishonestly packed.

Canadian Bacon.

A word about Canadian bacon and ham, for nowhere have I found such beautifully marbled pork, and most certainly I have never tasted such luscious meat, says J. C. Mills in the Farmer. Much as I dislike to admit it (for the farmers of the United States ought to be able to produce the best of everything), the facts are, we have forgotten entirely that the ultimate end to be reached in producing pork is the meat. We have thrown aside the prime end to be sought and are breeding the lard pig, and have forgotten what our Canadian friends know as the true end to be sought, a meat that will please the palates of the meat-eating public. The English and Canadians are excellent judges of all kinds of meat, and especial attention seems to be given to the production of fine bacon and hams, and well do they profit by it. This question is certainly a problem for the American people to solve, and especially our own state and the Dakotas, for these states are natural bacon and ham producers. On investigation, I learned that in the production of the fine bacon and hams found in Canada, that breed was necessary first and then feed. Yorkshires and Tamworths seemed to be the breeds for this purpose, and the feeds consisted of oats, barley and peas. Pea-fed bacon was the best.

Avoid "New Treatment" for Hogs.

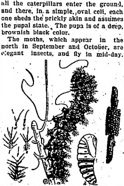
Bulletin 63, Indiana Experiment Station: Several years ago, when lecturing before Indiana farmers' institutes, Mr. S. H. Todd of Ohio advocated the feeding of meat from hogs that had died of cholera to healthy pigs. The claim was that feeding this diseased flesh produced a mild form of the disease, and the pigs fed the same thereafter would be free of cholera. This view advanced by Mr. Todd caused considerable comment. Apparently, however, the method of treatment adopted by him was not entirely a success, for in March, 1899, he wrote the undersigned that his hogs took sick and died so easy. I say it was not cholera. It was much worse. I lost forty head of hogs. This, however, was perhaps just as much a case of cholera as many swine breeders report on.

At the present time an attempt is being made by Indiana parties to sell on the market much such a method of treatment as that adopted by Mr. Todd. The claim is made that pregnant sows fed flesh from cholera-diseased swine will have the malady in a mild form, and that the unborn pigs will also be affected, so that thereafter they will be free from cholera and be "immune," as it is termed. While no experiments have been conducted by disinterested parties to prove the effectiveness of this method, reasoning from comparison, as shown by experience with other diseases, both with humans and animals, it is entirely unlikely that this method will prove a preventive. Further, this station is in possession of facts proving that pigs born from sows affected with cholera while pregnant have died from the disease long after.

The Buck Moth.

The scientific name is hemileuca maia. The caterpillar is very poisonous. A report of the Minnesota Agricultural College says: "It is very common in Minnesota, and feeds on the wild cherry and apple, but chiefly on the red oak and willow, where it can cause considerable damage, as it is a voracious feeder. The caterpillar is brownish black, with six spined tubercles on each segment, except on the eleventh, where there is only one dorsal tubercle; an additional one is found on segments one to five, and also on segments ten to twelve. When full grown the caterpillar measures a little over two inches in length. The sting of these caterpillars is really quite severe, and it is not easy to handle them with impunity. When mature all the caterpillars enter the ground, and there, in a simple, oval cell, each one sheds the prickly skin and assumes the pupal state. The pupa is of a deep, brownish black color.

The moths, which appear in the north in September and October, are elegant insects, and fly in mid-day.



Their wings are so lightly covered with scales that they are semi-transparent, and look like delicate black crape. The bands across them are creamy white, and broadest on the hind wings. The female moth deposits her eggs in naked belts of from 100 to 200 eggs; these are only fastened together by a little glue, and are not deposited in perfect order.

Pure Seed.

Low priced seed, especially of grasses and clovers, is to be avoided unless the buyer knows for a certainty that it contains no inferior seed and no seeds of injurious and objectionable plants. Clover and grass seed containing weed seeds is not worth the sowing and should not be taken as a gift. Just now this warning may be of value, as it is reported that there is a strong tendency of the market to advance. In such cases the farmers may be led to purchase seed at the same price they formerly paid, which in this case will mean a cheaper seed. When prices for seeds advance and the purchasers make a fuss about it, the seller is tempted to even up matters by taking old seed and mixing with the new or else taking seed that is impure with weed seeds and mixing it with the nest; this makes a grade that is very deceptive. A man will sometimes save a dollar on a bushel of seed and afterward pay $25 in the work of eradicating the weeds from his land.

Variety of Feed for Hogs.

Whatever feeds may be used the variety should be as great as possible, and changes should be made at every opportunity. The only object in raising hogs is the production of meat, and the more rapidly a hog can be made to produce meat the more profitable he becomes. The man who makes hog raising the most profitable is the one who induces his hogs to eat the most of the right kinds of food, and who never keeps them on any one kind of grain of forage until their appetites become cloyed and they get "off their feed." The greater the variety and the more frequent the changes the more will be eaten and the more rapid will be the growth. No matter what food may be used or what the age of the animals which consume it, a great saving may be effected by feeding so that none of it will be wasted.

Subsoiling for Root Crops.

Subsoiling for root crops frequently pays largely, for the reason that the ground is put in a shape that permits the roots to develop without resistance in all directions. In addition most of the root crops have tap roots that strike downward for moisture and additional nourishment. Experiments, even in the arid and semi-arid regions, have shown great advantage in subsoiling for such crops. Not only are the root crops benefited, but the potato crop is also benefited. The subsoiling helps through times of drouth, and thus prevents a check to the development of half-formed tubers.

Diseased Cattle from Argentina.—A dispatch from Liverpool says that recently two cattle ships from Argentina brought to Liverpool 400 bullocks and 200 sheep, all affected with foot and mouth disease. They were slaughtered, and their feet and heads burid at sea. By a new law no more such cattle or sheep will be permitted to land even for slaughter purposes.

KING DORADO'S LAND LOCATED.

The Story of Eldorado According to Modern Research.

Eldorado has at last been located, the golden sacrificial raft of its king has been found in a lake in the Colombian mountains, and now an expedition is on its way to drain off the waters of the lake and get some more of the treasure of the "gilded one." That region, the rumors of which fired the imagination of the adventurers from the time of the discovery of the New World down to the end of the eighteenth century, and lured the conquestadores through the forests and mountains of South America, and which even at the beginning of the seventeenth century exerted a master influence on the schemes of Sir Walter Raleigh, has given up to modern research the secrets which it guarded for four hundred years.

Begota, the capital of the South American republic of Colombia, lies in a mountain valley eight thousand feet above the level of the sea. In the mountains near Bogota is the lake of Guatavita. The waters of this lake are to be drawn off to find the treasures of Eldorado. From the end of the eighteenth century up to within a few years ago the story of Eldorado has been dismissed as being one of the phantoms which haunted the brains of the early explorers, having no foundation except the inflamed imagination which had been engendered by the wealth of Mexico and Peru. But for the last few years the old legend had been studied, the old chronicles have been examined and the chaff winnowed from the wheat. Explorations have been made, not as the conquestadores made them, in shining mail and with flaunting banners, but as dry and musty archaeologists make them. The result has been the location of Eldorado in the region of Colombia, now known as the department of Cundinamarca, round about the Colombian capital. Much gold has already been gathered from the shores of Lake Guatavita, and the company formed to draw off its waters want what treasure remains there.

The story of Eldorado, as modern research has it, is this: Long before the days of Columbus, and down to his time, probably, there reigned in the highlands of what is now Colombia a mighty king who was in alliance with the Incas of Peru. His people were the Chinchas. Stretching southward from Bogota to this day can be seen remnants of the old highway which connected the kingdom of the king of the Chinchas with the domains of his great ally of Peru. Now the Chinchas were sun worshipers, and their king claimed descent from the sun. For all that is known of his ancestry he might have been also brother to the moon and first cusin to all the fixed stars. But for him and his people it sufficed that he was a descendant of the sun. Every morning at the rising of the sun the king came forth in state to do homage to his ancestor, and the mountains and the valleys resounded with the acclamations of his people. Their places of worship were upon the shores of streams or of lakes, and of all the holy shores, the shores of Lake Guatavita were the most holy. To the margin of this lake used to repair pilgrims from all parts of the king's domains, as now pilgrims go to Mecca or to Rome, and offer their tributes. They came to those waters as the Brahmin of India goes to the Ganges, for the waters thereof were sacred.

The pilgrims all brought offerings of gold and precious stones and cast them into the lake for the propitiation of the sun god. On occasions of high festivals the king himself repaired to the lake and went through the ceremony which has given to the world the word "Eldorado" in its modern meaning. The high priests of the nation met the monarch on the border of the lake before daylight and began those mystic rites the major part of which have been lost to history. From out the far times of the lost American empires and kingdoms, however, this much has been rescued. When the first rosy beams kindled upon the mountain tops the beacon fires which announced the coming of the sun god forth from his black tent of night the king, stripped of his royal robes, was anointed with clay by the priests, probably to the sound of weird chants, and the high priest blew gold dust over him until he was coated from head to foot with the precious metal. Then, stepping on board a gilded raft with his chief Caziques, the king was towed out into the middle of the lake. Suddenly, as it does in tropic regions, the sun sprang with its light above the mountains, and there, towering among the nobles, who had accompanied him, shone the descendant of the sun in the reflected beam of his ancestor, while from the vast multitude which surrounded the lake arose joyful acclamations and the sound of barbaric music.

It was the story of this ceremonny which was told to the Spaniards who first visited the shores of the new world, and so they called the king of the Chichas "El Dorado"—the gilded. From the description of the king the phrase came to mean his country, and so, made into one word—Eldorado—it became something which the knights and nobles of Castile sought as ineffectually and as valiantly as Galahad sought the Holy Grail, though not with such pure hearts and high ambitions. It is probable that a model in gold of the raft, with the king and his chief Caziques on it, was a favorite offering of the rich pilgrims who came to pay tribute to the sun by throwing their offerings into the sacred lake.

Such a tribute would not only be valuable from a religious point of view, but would also be a delicate piece of flattery for the king. Human nature did not differ much in El Dorado from human nature in New York, and people with an eye to political preferment kept the other eye on the "boss" then as they do now.

One of these votive rafts was found recently imbedded in the soil of the shores of the lake by a German archaeologist, and is now in the museum in Berlin. Gold pieces, evidently offerings, to the value of many thousands of dollars, have been found from time to time on the shores of Lake Guatavita, but, as the region is one to which few Europeans or Americans penetrate no notice was taken of the fact until recently. Now it has been proved beyond doubt that at the bottom of Lake Guatavita lie untold treasures. The only trouble is to get at them. One or two crude attempts have been made to draw off the waters of the lake and dig out the gold which lies in the soil of its bottom, but such efforts so far have not met with success. Now a well-organized expedition is starting out from England to capture, if possible, the gold of El Dorado.

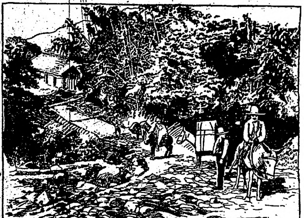
The land of Eldorado was, as a matter of fact much less prolific in gold than either Mexico or Peru. It was the use that the Chichas made of their gold which appealed to the imagination of the conquestadores. The fame of the sun-descended was spread all along the shores of the Caribbean, and the natives of whom the Spaniards asked their questions regarding the new continent told not only of the "gilded one," but of his city. As modern research seems to have determined, the capital of the descendant of the sun was built of frame, wooden houses, the sides of which were covered with gayly colored cotton cloth. Gold does not seem to have been much thought of except as it represented the color of the sun and most faithfully reflected his beams. Over the cotton cloth which draped the sides of the houses of the prehistoric capital of Chicha were hung many strands of cord, threaded with gold beads, and as the morning breezes swept down from the Cordilleras these golden strands waved to and fro, making a mighty shimmer in the early sunlight, and to one who observes them from afar, as Philip von Hutton believed he did, the city might well seem to be one of houses and streets of gold.

One of the things which seem to have puzzled those who took the story of Eldorado seriously is that nowhere could be found the city of Manoa, which one Spanish adventurer declared was the capital of the desired country. Now the only authority upon which the name Manoa rests as that of the capital of Eldorado is that of one Martinez, a mutineer, who was set adrift from a Spanish ship. He returned to civilization and declared that he had been cast upon the coast of Guinea and had been conducted through the wilderness to the city named Manoa, which was the capital of Eldorado; that the king of the country was in alliance with the Inca, and that the roofs of the houses of the city were covered with gold. Martinez was a liar. He had heard the story of Eldorado, and it is not hard to seek for the place to which he was taken, for, far up the Amazon river, at the junction of that mighty stream with the Rio Negro, stands the city of Manaos, still bearing its old Indian name, which became Manoa in the Spanish of the romancing Martinez. Or perhaps he was right and Manoa was the original name, and Manaos is a Portuguese corruption of it. But he saw no Eldorado.

Sir Walter Raleigh led no less than two expeditions in search of Eldorado, and so enduring was the belief in the existence of the place that Spanish expeditions in search of the place were sent out as late as the latter part of the eighteenth century. Those who are interested in Eldorado as it appears in fiction should read the well-known chapter in Voltaire's "Candide." To us of today Eldorado has resolved itself into a question of hydraulics—draining of Lake Guatavita.



TRAVELING INTO EL DORADO.

The First Printer.

Consul Schumann of Mainz reports that on Junne 23 next a festival will be held in that city in commemoration of the 500th anniversary of the birth of Johann Gutenberg, the inventor of the art of printing. In this festival almost all civilized nations will take part, and it is to be hoped that the United States will also be duly represented. In connection with this festival the foundation of a Guutenberg mseum is planned.

BEER IN BRAZIL

Cooled by Putting Ice Into It and Costs Nine Cents a Glass.

Few sights are funnier than to see a Brazilian drinking beer and putting ice in the glass to cool it. In that equatorial country no attempt is made to keep the beer cool before it is drawn. In the wholesaler's house it is cooled before delivery, but if the man who drinks it doesn't like the temperature, in goes a bit of ice, if ice is handy. Brazilian beer can be chilled only once, and it is undrinkable overnight. Bahia draws its beer supply from Rio Janeiro and Sao Paulo breweries, which make for the most part light beer. A glass of beer is called "chopps," and it sells for sixty reis, or nine cents. Teutonia Halle, in Bahia, the only establishment in the town that approaches the dignity of a saloon, sells as many as three and sometimes six kegs of beer a day. A keg once opened has to be sold before the day is over or else it spoils, for refrigerators are unknown. Most of the lower classes buy cheap wines, and especially the native rum, "cachaca," a glassful of which costs only forty reis. So with them the drinking of beer is a cultivated taste. At society functions it is the custom to have all kinds of drinks in a room set aside specially for that purpose. Beer in the cask is on tap at the weddings of the 400.—New York Press.

Restaurant Drove Out Church.

The Protestant Episcopal church of the Archangel in Harlem, N. Y., has been meeting in a hall over a restaurant. The proprietor of the restaurant, tired of singing and the chanting, opened the windows leading from his kitchen into the airshaft and kept them open. The smell of the cooking and the smoke that ascended every time the cook was careless were too much for the congregation, and the church had to move.

PAID FOR HIS LEVITY.

The Young Man Waxed Humorous About the Oysters.

There was an oyster famine in Detroit on Good Friday, says the Detroit Free Press. It was owing to the nature of the observance and partly to the fact that the season for these popular bivalves is waning. And, as usual, when an article is scarce, there was a great demand for oysters. The downtown restaurants were fairly besieged with orders that they could not fill. It seemed that everybody, including those whose religious leanings influenced them to taboo animal food, was hungry for oysters. At one place the last stew had just been served to a young man who regarded it with suspicion. Gently stirring the milky way with his spoon, he was unable to perceive more than the proverbial lone oyster working there, and he was softly humming "Just Tell Them that You Saw Me," when a stylishly dressed young man entered and called for oysters. "There isn't another oyster left," he was told, "and I don't believe you'll find any in town." [illegible] I like to be accommodating, and you may have this stew. I haven't touched it, as it just came off the fire. As a matter of fact, I ordered steak anyway, but I guess I was misunderstood." "No, thank you," said the stylishly dressed young man, "I'll try somewhere else." He, too, seemed suspicious. Then the young man that had been the victim of circumstances and an oyster famine went on a fishing excursion, using a cracker as a bait. He caught two. "This is a case of oyster stew, oysters too, and oysters, two," he remarked, regardless of the feelings of those around him. And the waitress charged him double price for revenge.

Another Odious Comparison.

How to Grow the Finest Asters.

Asters naturally succeed best in rich, loamy soils and the cool temperature of the northern states, notably northern New York and the New England states, and in similar locations in the west, but with proper attention to the season of planting equally fine flowers can be had in almost every section of the country. In our own locality, where seed is planted early in May in the open ground, the flower-buds are apt to blight during the very hot, dry weather of midsummer, or else, if the weather is more favorable, the flowers are frequently destroyed by the black beetles, which appear in great numbers when they commence to flower. Both of these difficulties are easily avoided, however, by sowing the seed in shallow drills in a cold frame or in boxes of soil in the warm, sunny windows of the living-room in the house early in March. The young plants are transplanted to stand three inches apart or else planted in small flower-pots as soon as they are one or two inches in height, and then planted in the flower-beds when the trees are coming out in leaf. Treated in this manner they make fine plants, coming in flower much earlier than from seed sown in the open ground, and avoid both the blight and the periodic attacks of the black beetles.

Naturally, the fine flowers raised by this method create a desire for a longer period of bloom, and we have discovered in our trial grounds that by sowing the seed during the latter part of May and early in June the plants grow finely during the summer months and commence flowering early in the fall, after the period during which the blight and the beetles make their attacks, and furnish us fine blooms until the plants are cut down by the heavy frosts late in the fall. Thus, by adapting our season of planting to the climate, we are enabled to have two periods of fine blooms against the single flowering season of more favorable locations. Not only is this double period of bloom most satisfactory for our heavy, loamy soil, but it is also equally adapted for light, sandy soils, where equally fine blooms may be grown in the same manner if care is taken to make the soil rich with well-rotted manure; in such locations it will also be of great service to place a mulch of fine hay or grass on the soil in which the plants are growing. This will not only help to preserve the moisture in the soil, but will also greatly assist the fine growth of the plants by keeping the soil cool during the heat of mid-day.

The seed should be sown thinly in shallow drills, three inches apart and covered one-half inch deep, either in the hot-bed or in a finely prepared seed-bed, carefully dug and raked into a fine, loose condition, as early in the spring as the soil will break up in a fine, loose condition. The aster is quite hardy, and seed may be sown in the open ground about the time the earliest trees are starting out in leaf, or when the peach trees are in blossom. Plants which have been grown in cold frames and hardened off by thorough ventilation may be planted out at this time, as they will stand light frosts without injury.

Equine Distemper.

A bulletin of the Virginia Experiment Station says: Equine distemper is an infectious and contagious disease, characterized by an inflammation of the mucous membrane lining the various cavities of the body. Synonyms.—Influenza, Epizootic, Catarrhal Fever, Epizootic of the Horse, Pink Eye and various others.

History.—Equine distemper has been recognized for many years. In fact, it is recorded to have appeared in Seville as early as 1299. From that time it has made its appearance at different intervals, gradually spreading from city to city, and from country to country, until 1872 and 1873, when it invaded Canada in a very severe form, and rapidly spread over the whole of the United States, causing the death of many animals and great hardship among the people. Since 1873 distemper has been a constant resident of the United States, although much more moderate in form, more isolated in outbreaks, and, owing to a better understanding of its pathological phenomena, its fatality has been greatly diminished.

Causation.—The causes of equine distemper are divided into predisposing and direct. The predisposing cause is anything that tends to lower the vitality of the animal, as damp, dark, very close and crowded stables, undue exposure to drafts and stormy weather, and especially overwork with scanty nourishment. The direct cause of equine distemper has been shown to be a micro-organism. Authorities differ, however, as to the exact class of that microbe. Some claim that the disease in question is caused by a bacillus, while others say it is produced by a coccus. After a careful study of the experiments of the various investigators it seems apparent to the writer that an oval-shaped bacillus is the specific cause of the disease, and that when varieties of the cocci class are present there is some other disturbance associated with the true type of distemper. For example, when the catarrhal inflammation becomes infected with the pus-forming, or pyogenic bacteria, suppuration is the result, and various forms of cocci may be found in the contents of the abscess which is produced.

Dairy farmers should hold onto every good dairy cow. Just now, when veal calves are abnormally high in price, the temptation is great to let go of them. This is especially the case with the man that is a little hard-up for ready cash. The man that lets go of promising calves now is depriving himself of good dairy cows in the years to come. The high price of calves today would seem to indicate high prices for dairy cows a few years hence. The money that is permitted to remain invested in the dairy calf will in many cases prove exceedingly profitable.

A model packing house, which will show American methods of slaughtering and dressing cattle, will be one of the exhibits at the Paris Exposition.

Lawton's Rubber Bathtub.

General Lawton made it a habit of his life to take a cold water bath every morning before breakfast, and while campaigning he carried with him a rubber tub. It made no difference where he was, he always ordered the tubful of cold water to his quarters every morning.

In following the Apaches he reached a mountain. He knew that the Indians had fled there, and before pursuing them farther he left his rubber tub and other tent equipments at the base of the mountains in charge of an old and faithful sergeant to guard carefully until he returned. It was an old trick with that tribe of Indians when being pursued to circle around and return to the exact point whence they started.

The general left the tub and started out after the Indians. They circled around, covering a wide territory, and beat General Lawton back to the base of the mountain. When he got there, he found that the old sergeant and his six men had been killed and that his tub had been carried off by the Indians. The Apaches evidently learned how highly the general prized the rubber tub, for they placed great store by it after they had captured it and guarded it as closely as they did their own lives.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Memories of a Waltz.

"Did you ever try to dance with a foreigner?" asked a Louisville gentleman who had been traveling abroad. "I did once," he continued, "and that experience was more than enough for me. It happened at a ball at Mustapha, at the Hotel St. Georges. I asked an Austrian countess to waltz, and when we started I supposed we would dance in the leisurely American fashion. The countess had a different idea in her head. She preferred to whirl madly like a dervish on a space that could be covered with a parasol, and on account of her superior strength I clung to her, and we began to spin.

"Finally, when it seemed to me that we were performing our antics on the ceiling with our heads hanging down, I could stand it no longer and, gasping for breath, suggested that we sit down. I saw two chairs galloping around the room and prepared to catch them on the next lap. We steered for them, I clinging helplessly to the athletic lady, and then we sank down. I sat dazed and almost insensible until I was aroused by the countess saying:

"'Excuse me, but we are sitting on the same chair.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Our First Postal Rates.

The first law of congress fixing rates of postage went into effect on June 1, 1792, with rates as follows:

Not exceeding 30 miles, 6 cents.

Over 30 and not exceeding 60 miles, 8 cents.

Over 60 and not exceeding 100 miles, 10 cents.

Over 100 and not exceeding 150 miles, 12½ cents.

Over 150 and not exceeding 200 miles, 15 cents.

Over 200 and not exceeding 250 miles, 17 cents.

Over 250 and not exceeding 350 miles, 20 cents.

Over 350 and not exceeding 450 miles, 22 cents.

Over 450 miles, 25 cents.

It would seem that postmasters of that day must have been greatly perplexed in adjusting the rates on each letter under such a diversified schedule as the above. The weight limit was one ounce (single), but a single letter was a single sheet, two sheets double, three sheets triple, four sheets a quadruple letter, even if the whole four did not exceed an ounce.

A Shock For Carlyle.

Thackeray once told Sir John Millais this amusing story of Carlyle:

He had spent a day in the reading room of the British museum and had given a great deal of trouble to one of the officials, sending him up and down ladders in search of books to satisfy his literary tastes, and on leaving the room he had gone up to the man and told him that it might be some satisfaction to him to know that he had obliged Thomas Carlyle. The official hesitatingly answered him, with a bland smile and the usual washing of hands in the air, that the gentleman had the advantage of him, but that probably they might have met at some mutual friend's house. He had never heard of Thomas Carlyle.

Water.

The body needs internal as well as external baths to keep it healthy. To give the body an internal bath drink plenty of water. Two quarts should be taken each day, beginning with a glass just after rising and ending with a glass just before retiring. If you are inclined to stoutness, do not drink during meals or within a half hour before or after them. If your complexion is bad, nothing is more conducive to a cure than drinking water either hot or cold, but preferably the latter.—New York Press.

Kingsley's Way.

I go at what I am about as if there were nothing else in the world for the time being. That's the secret of all hardworking men, but most of them can't carry it into their amusements. Luckily for me, I can stop from all work at short notice and turn head over heels in the sight of all creation and say, "I won't be good or bad or wise or anything till 2 o'clock tomorrow."—Charles Kingsley.

Man can run about ten miles an hour and jump about 23 feet at his best. The horse can trot a mile in two minutes and gallop one in one, while the greyhound, hare and ostrich are all faster even than this.

The sword blades forged at Toledo by the Saracens could be coiled up like a clock spring and would resume perfect straightness as soon as released.

WORKED IT BOTH WAYS.

A Neat Swindling Scheme That Fleeced Bucket Shop Patrons.

"If the real inside workings of the average bucket shop were laid bare," said a telegraph operator who has had much experience in such establishments, "the revelation would open the eyes of the young donkeys who imagine they can beat the game. Just to illustrate the point I'll tell you a little story.

"Some time ago there were two rival bucket shops in a certain southern city, supposed to be run by northern operators. Business was a little slow, and it was evident that the speculative element was inclined to be suspicious of both establishments. One day the manager of one of the concerns hunted up a young fellow who had more money than brains and, handing him $50, asked him, as a special favor, to go over to the other house and make such and such a play. 'It's a private speculation of my own,' he said, 'and I have a straight tip, but I can't very well place the money myself on account of my connection with —— & Co. If I did they'd get suspicious right away.'

"The young idiot supposed, of course, that he had struck a bonanza—one bucket shop man playing against another! It must be a sure thing! So he not only placed the $50 as requested, but played the tip hard himself, and so did all his friends, whom he promptly let into the secret. Needless to say, they were all eventually skinned out of every cent they put in, but the remarkable part of the story is that the same tactics were worked back and forth by both managers on at least a dozen different occasions. Each time it was done they gathered in a lot of new clients and made a big haul. It developed not long afterward that the two bucket shops were run by the same people."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

HE ROUSED JEFFERSON.

Why the Hotel Porter Waked Jefferson From His Sleep.

Leslie's Weekly tells this story about Joseph Jefferson: A number of years ago he played a one night engagement in a small Indiana town, appearing in his favorite part of Rip Van Winkle. In the hotel at which he stopped was an Irishman "recently landed," who acted as porter and general assistant. Judged by the deep and serious interest which he took in the house, he might have been clerk, lessee and proprietor, rolled into one.

At about 6 o'clock in the morning Mr. Jefferson was startled by a violent thumping on his door. When he struggled into consciousness and realized that he had left no "call" order at the office, he was naturally indignant. But his sleep was spoiled for that morning, so he arose, and soon after appeared before the clerk. "See here," he demanded of that individual, "why was I called at this unearthly hour?"

"I don't know, sir," answered the clerk, "I'll ask Mike."

The Irishman was summoned. Said the clerk: "Mike, there was no call for Mr. Jefferson. Why did you disturb him?"

Taking the clerk by the lapel of the coat, the Hibernian led him to one side and said, in a mysterious whisper: "He were snoring loike a horse, sor, and Oi'd heerd the b'ys say as how he were onct afther shlaping fur twinty years, so Oi sez to mesilf, sez Oi, 'Moike, it's a cooming onto him ag'in, and it's yer juty to git the craythur out o' yer house instantly!'"

Had Driven Mules Before.

Daniel C. Pomeroy, once a prominent New York criminal lawyer, in his early life was a stage driver on the old Butterfield line and gleaned his legal education largely upon the box seat of his coach or while change of horses was being made at the stations. He was associated with others in the defense of one Mrs. McCarthy on her trial at Utica for the murder of a man named Hall of Ogdensburg, who was killed by a bullet from her revolver which was aimed at another man. Judge Doolittle presided at the trial and seemed to believe in the prisoner's guilt. The judge was bitter, and so was Pomeroy. The latter made an objection and insisted upon it rather strenuously.

"Mr. Pomeroy," said the judge, "I am not a horse and can't be driven."

"Well, your honor, I learned in my early experience to drive mules, and I will try to keep up my former reputation."—Philadelphia Call.

Going by the Eye.

Unless one has some other sort of knowledge to contradict it it is natural to accept the evidence of the eye. Therefore the answer which a teacher recently received from her class of small children was not altogether surprising.

"Which is farther away," she asked, "England or the moon?"

"England!" the children answered quickly.

"England?" she questioned. "What makes you think that?"

"'Cause we can see the moon, and we can't see England," answered one of the brightest of the class.—Youth's Companion.

Lead Pencils of Old.

Ancient writers mention the use of lead and graphite for ruling papyrus, and pencils fashioned rather crudely in the manner of those now used were made in the sixteenth century, the graphite coming from the Borrowdale mine at Cumberland, England.—Chicago Chronicle.

Inexpensively Managed.

"Your capital is not large."

"But quite sufficient. You see, our business is peculiar in that it does not necessitate any evasion of the laws."—Detroit Journal.

We Want Correspondents.

We desire a correspondent in every school district in the county, one who will give the local news of his or her locality in a fair and impartial manner. To any one who will undertake the matter the SPECTATOR will furnish the necessary stationery and postage and will send the paper free during the time the person acts in that capacity. Only one correspondent desired in each district. It is an advantage to any community to be represented in the columns of the local paper.

Representative Richardson, of Tenn., offered the following resolution in the House democratic caucus and it was adopted: "Whereas, there is known to be a large and growing surplus in the Treasury, over and above the necessities of the government arising from the taxes levied and collected under the war tax act of 1898; therefore, Resolved, that we favor the reduction of the taxes provided for in said act, and we do not think the present session of Congress should adjourn until said taxes shall have been repealed as to certain articles and reduced as to others until there is a total reduction in the aggregate of at least 50 per centum. We pledge ourselves at all times to support any measure or measures providing for such reduction." Before the campaign is over the republican managers will be sorry that they allowed Congress to adjourn without reducing war taxation.

—If you are troubled with rheumatism take the Imperial Blood and Rheumatism cure. It will positively cure all diseases arising from impure blood, and is sold under an absolute guarantee to benefit or money refunded. Call for free sample at the New Drug Store.

Foiled.

"Anger," he said thoughtfully, "shortens life."

She looked at him sharply.

"It also," he went on, "spoils beauty. It has an exceptionally injurious effect on a pretty face."

"John Henry," she exclaimed, "what is it you want to say to me? What provoking suggestion have you to make now? For what offensive ruling in domestic economy are you paving the way?"

Then he knew that all his precautions were useless and that he might as well have told her in the first place that she would have to wait a month for that new bonnet.—Chicago Post.

The Point of View.

The Bird in the Hand assumed his most winning aspect and addressed the Bird in the Bush.

"It is conceded," said he, "that my position renders me worth twice as much as you are, but I will trade places with you, even up, asking nothing to boot!"

But the Bird in the Bush thought he could detect something of disingenuousness in this seemingly magnanimous offer and flew away.—Detroit Journal.

The Real Thing.

Johnny (who is jealous of mamma)—Mamma likes me better than she does you!

Evelyn (who enjoys teasing)—Why, no, Johnny. Of course she loves Betty and me best! Just think, she was our mother long before she was yours!

Johnny (scornfully)—Hoh! What of that? You are nothing but a sample copy, anyway! And Betty's only a trial subscription! But I am the real thing!—Life.

SAVING AN OLD PAINTING.

Ingenious Method by Which It Was Transferred to New Canvas.

"Did you ever hear of transferring an old oil painting to a new 'canvas?'" said a well known art connoisseur of this city. "One would declare at first blush that the thing was absolutely impossible, but I saw it done with a picture over eight feet square, and the operation was a perfect success. The painting to which I refer had been a fine example of the early Italian school, but it had lain forgotten in a garret for many years and had become so incrusted with dirt and grime that it was impossible to distinguish any of the details. Ordinarily it could have been cleaned without trouble, but the damp and mold of two centuries had rotted the canvas until it was ready to fall apart at a touch, and scrubbing was, of course, out of the question.

"That was the condition of things when it was taken in hand by an expert restorer from Belgium who happened to be in the city. The first thing he did was to glue a huge sheet of thick manila paper firmly to the face of the picture. Then he turned it over carefully and picked off every particle of the old decaying canvas, revealing the rear surface of the paint itself. It was a big job and required no end of patience, but the last thread was finally removed, and nothing was left but the fragile shell of pigment. That he covered with the strongest fish glue, and a new sheet of canvas was spread over it and pressed down.

"In a few hours it was perfectly dry, and the painting was as firmly attached to its new foundation as if it had been there from the start. Nothing then remained but to take off the manila paper, which was readily done with hot water. After that the surface was thoroughly cleaned, and the picture is now almost as bright and clear as it was when it left the painter's easel. The owner could hardly believe his eyes. It seemed to him that a veritable miracle had been accomplished."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

TIME AND SPACE are practically annihilated by the ocean cables and land telegraph systems which now belt the circumference of Old Earth in so many different directions. "Foreign parts" are no longer foreign in the old meaning of the term. Europe, Africa, Asia, are "next door" to us. What happens to-day we know to-morrow—if we read THE CHICAGO RECORD, whose Special Cable Correspondents are located in every important city in the world outside of the United States. No other American newspaper ever attempted so extensive a service; and it is supplemented by the regular foreign news service of The Associated Press. For accurate intelligence of the stirring events which are shaking the nations—of wars and rumors of wars—of the threatening dissolution of old governments and the establishment of new—of the onward sweep of the race in all parts of the world—the one medium of the most satisfactory information is the enterprising, "up-to-date" American newspaper, THE CHICAGO RECORD.

FREE A large map of the world on Mercator's Projection, about 21x16 inches in size, beautifully printed in colors, with a large-scale map of Europe on the reverse side, will be mailed to any address free of charge on receipt of request accompanied by two 2-cent stamps to cover postage and wrapping. A special coach was attached to Monday's train in order to accomodate the day crew of the Crookston Lumber Company who came up to work the night shift of the St. Hilaire Lumber Company's mill. They expect to remain here at least six weeks as it will take that long before logs can reach there should heavy rains set in at once. Foreman March of the Crookston Lumber Company has charge of the night crew.

The St. Hilaire Lumber Company shipped a fine log to Fargo, N. Dak., last Thursday which is to used in the log rolling contest at their Fire Festival on June 7th. The log is one of the finest ever floated to be used in a sport of this kind and it will not take over a quarter of an hour after a lumber jack strikes the log before he can drink out of the river while standing. This company will have a representative there wearing "corks."

Died.

On Saturday June 2nd at the home of her parents, from that dreaded desease consumption, occured the death of Josie Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hall, aged 15 years. Deceased was a favorite among the girls of her age and was greatly beloved by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. She was of a bright cheerful disposition and her presence will be greatly missed both in church circles where she was prominent and in school where she was a true ardent student. Monday at 2 o'clock p. m. the funeral services were conducted from the M. E. church which was beautifully decorated for the occasion by friends of the departed one. The following girls acted pall bearers: Edith Dahl, Ester Olson, Hulda Gigstad, Mary Anderson, Eva Johnson and Myrtle Knowles. Rev. Mr. Myers preached a very touching and instructive sermon after which the remains were viewed for the last time. Interment was in the Swedish Lutheran cemetery.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Hall wish to extend their heartfelt thanks to the many kind friends who so kindly assisted them and extended aid during the sickness and death of their beloved daughter, Josie.

A maiden lady of mature years who objected to the use of tobacco seated herself in one of the smoker's seats of a Minneapolis street car one day recently next to a gentleman who was enjoying a good sigar, says a neighboring quill pusher. But she no sooner got a whiff of smoke than she said: "If you were my husband, I'd give you a dose of poison." The man, after looking at her a moment, quickly replied: "If I were your husband, I'd take poison." He kept on smoking, but the look the lady gave him would have frozen liquid air.

It is stated by eminent statisticians that the average duration of human life is about 33 years. One-fourth of the people of the earth die before reaching the age of 6, one-half before 16, and only about one person in 100 lives to the age of 65. This applies to all people in every condition of health and does not conflict with the actuaries tables of deaths as prepared for use of life insurance companies, since these latter tables take into account only selected lives in healthy countries; that is the lives of people in ordinary good health. It is calculated that the deaths are 67 to the minute, 97,790 per day and 35,639,835 per year, while the births are 70 per minute, 100,800 per day and 36,792,000 per year.

Origin of the Months' Names.

"January was named after the Roman God, Janus; the deity with two faces one looking into the past the other gazing forward to the future," writes Clifford Howard, in the June Ladies Home Journal. "February comes from the Latin word februo, to purify. It was customary for the Romans to observe festivals of purification during that month. March owes its name to the old God of War. Among the Saxons this month was known as Lenct, meaning spring; and this is the origin of our word Lent. April was named from the Latin operio, to open, in signification of the opening of flowers. The Saxons called the month Eastre, in honor of their Goddess of Spring, from which comes our word Easter. May was named after the Roman goddess Maia, and June was so called in honor of Juno. July was named in honor of Julius Caesar and August gets its name from Augustus Caesar. September is from the Latin septem, seven, this being the seventh month according to the old Roman calendar. October, November and December also retain the names by which they were known under the old calendar, when there were but ten months in the year—octo, novem and decem meaning eight, nine and ten."

Her Heart's Secret

Or Under a Spell.

By Jean Warner.

CHAPTER XXV—(Continued.)

He had left too soon, too soon. There might have been some trace of Sybil discovered if he had waited longer. His father would take no interest in the search, now that he had gone. Indeed, had he not said that the matter must be dropped entirely? He had hurried away, at a moment's bidding, like a thoughtless, unreasoning child and left his love, his darling, lying in a nameless, bloody grave, unnoticed, unavenged!

Oh, he had been mad—weak as well as mad—to let his father's stern prejudices of caste influence him at such a time! Sybil, his beautiful, gentle, sorrowful Sybil—ah it had been surely a prophetic shadow that had warned her from his side, a presentiment of evil that made her shrink from visiting his home—that home within whose fatal borders she had found a cruel death!

Everything spoke of her to his tortured memory. The pale moonlight seemed to typify her delicate beauty; the foaming waves recalled the first night of their meeting, when they had stood together on the steamer's deck that was carrying her forward to her doom.

How strange had been her smile when she spoke of the stern Fate guiding our life barques! How significant her words seemed now! Truly, truly, the spell that had led him to her side had been a fatal one—truly, love had been her doom!

He lit his cigar and began to pace the deck restlessly. It was deserted now, save by an officer ever and anon moving silently across it on his round of duty, and then as swiftly disappearing again. The ladies' cabin was just beneath him, and as he reached the stern of the vessel, a strain of soft music, floating through one of the open windows chained him to the spot. So low and sweet was the strain, that it seemed as if the hidden singer were breathing it to herself alone:

"I'll bind thee with a charm, my love,
I'll seal thee with a spell,
That thou shalt love me more than all—
Shalt love me more than well!
For all my dower is magic power—
A power I dare not tell."

Herbert Clive listened as if he would still his own heart-beats to hear. That song—Sybil's song—and, oh, heaven! surely, it was Sybil's voice, weak and low, as if it struggled from unspeakable distance, yet still Sybil's voice!

"That spell shall bind thee fast, my love,
But life shall pass in tender dreams,
And thou shalt ne'er awake;
Dreamed only for my sake.
In one brief hour I wield a power
That Death alone can break."

The strain died away again into silence, and Herbert Clive lifted his face, white with a strange, solemn awe.

It was Sybil who sang—Sybil! This was no dream, unless—unless he were going mad. It was Sybil's voice, Sybil's song—the song that was indelibly written on his heart—the song that had at first charmed him.

The mystery that had shadowed her life and darkened her death was around her still. What power had she to cross the portals of the spirit land that was denied all others? Had she, indeed, been a being of different mould from the mortals around her? Had he loved no mortal woman, but a visitant from another sphere?

And as if in confirmation of the wild idea, her last words drifted back to him:

"Think of me as speaking from another world when I say to you that I might, but for the gulf that divides us, have found earth's sweetest happiness at your side."

To Herbert's morbid, excited fancy no thought seemed too strange and improbable. The common-sense philosophy of everyday life had no voice in the turmoil of his heated, tortured mind.

A beautiful Danish tale he had read in boyhood recurred to him, of a mermaiden who left her ocean home, and lived a life of pain and sorrow, to win mortals' love and mortals' hope.

Had there not always been something strange and unreal about Sybil, some subtle fascination that either drew or repelled all with whom she came in contact? And how unnatural had been her sadness, her silence, her strange, morbid reserve!

Herbert paced the deck hour after hour, and yet no solution of the problem was reached. It was Sybil's voice and Sybil's song that had reached his ears—he could tell no more.

But the morning light gives a different shape to our midnight fancies. A few hours of sleep, brought on by utter weariness, refreshed Herbert in spite of himself, and, after his matutinal cup of coffee, he was prepared to look upon his nocturnal experience by the sober light of day.

His first step (as little knowledge could be gleaned from his fellow passengers otherwise) was to look over the passenger register and see what ladies' names were entered as his companions on the voyage.

None in the long list were familiar to him; but two, singularly attracted his attention, perhaps from the hand-writing, which, bold and irregular as it was, he had a vague idea he had seen somewhere before.

Scrawled upon the top of the page, in a man's careless hand, were the names of Miss Marie Laponte and her attendant, Madame Gillette.

CHAPTER XXVI.

A Sailor's Yarn.

Herbert lost no time in inquiring more about the name that had attracted his attention.

The captain—burly, good-natured sailor—gave him all the information he could, but that was very unsatisfactory.

Col. Laponte and his daughter had taken passage about ten days before the Ocean Queen sailed. The young lady was an invalid, and her father had been very anxious that she should have the most comfortable accommodations the ship could afford. A fine-looking man, the colonel! Looked as if he might have seen foreign service, but not able to stand the sea. Sick as a dog—not able to lift his head from his pillow. Luckily, they had a smart little Frenchwoman along, who can take care of both father and daughter.

"There she comes now," added the captain, laughing, as Madam Gillette tripped up on deck. "No one but a Frenchwoman could look so trim and taut after a three-days' voyage. She comes up every morning just at this time, to take the air. She has a holy horror of the sun. Good-morning, madam!"

"Ah, good-morning, Monsieur le Captain. I wish you a verra good morning!" answered the madam, with much effusion. "I come up, as you see, to get my leetle breaf of air. It ees so close so warm, down below."

"How are your patients?" asked the courteous sailor. "Getting a little better, I hope?"

"I don't know, Monsieur le Captain. It is what I cannot tell. Monsieur Laponte seems bad—verra bad; but then, it is not with men as with us poor women. For verra little sickness they make vat you call one grand blow!"

The captain's rich laugh was delightful to hear; the little Frenchwoman's quaint sociability seemed to have taken his fancy immensely.

"Very true, madam—very true, indeed! Gentlemen are trying patients. And your young lady, does she suffer much from seasickness? You ought to coax her up on deck, madam. Fresh air and the bright sunlight are the only remedies that work a speedy cure. But it is the last thing you can persuade a lady to do. They shrink from the very sight of the terrible sea."

"It is so with mademoiselle," replied the madam, shaking her glossy curls, despondently. "I beg, I pray, I entreat her to come up on de deck; but no, she will not. She is too weak, she say—too weak. Ah, poor chile! she is verra; verra weak but de light and air would make her strong."

The captain made some pleasant rejoinder, and Herbert turned away.

A ray of interest had, for a brief while, brightened the dark turmoil of his mind; but it faded away as quickly as it had come.

He had never heard of, never met, this Col. Laponte and his daughter. The writing had struck him, for the moment as being familiar, but it must have been only fancy. Some rich foreigner travelling, probably, with only an invalid daughter to sustain the honors of his name.

So the ripple of curiosity that had changed, for a brief moment, the current of the young man's thoughts, died away, and all was still with the hopeless languor of despair again.

The days dragged on wearily; there was a great deal of rough weather for that season, so the old tars said.

Sudden storms would sweep down from the southward, and swell the slumbering billows into wrathful turmoil; sunlit skies would be swiftly darkened by threatening clouds, moonlit nights made black and hideous by appalling tempests.

The old sailors began to mutter superstitions and forebodings. Some bad luck followed the ship, for there was surely never such a summer voyage before.

Herbert, who passed all his time on deck, listened with a sort of gloomy pleasure as the whispers of evil portent went round.

They seemed to accord with his own despondent mood. They sent no thrill of terror to his deadened heart.

Of what value was a life like his? Far better to lose it as swiftly and painlessly as possible than to keep it, barren and hopeless, without joy or love!

It was on one of the lowering nights we have mentioned that a knot of sailors were gathered around the capstan, discussing the signs of foul weather; Herbert was smoking near, and, without feeling any especial interest, listened idly to the drift of the conversation.

It was a heavy, sultry night, and the sky was dark with the omens of a gathering tempest; but a pale moon still struggled with the clouds that swept in broken masses over the face of heaven, while the forked tongues of flame leaping up, ever and anon, from the horizon made an angry contrast to her pallid light.

"I tuk a v'yage like this before once," said a grizzled old tar, whose utterance was somewhat impeded by the huge "quid" he had rolled, entirely under his tongue. "I don't mean to say that I haven't seen harder blows and rougher weather many a time, but a downright onnatural, Jonah-cussed v'yage like this, I never tuk before but once."

"And how did the v'yage end, Bill?"

"Wall," answered Bill, slowly turning his quid, "it ended you might say, bad enough, for the ship—Which her name was the Sea Witch. The ship an' more than half of 'em aboard her, went down to Davy Jones' locker. And it was a dead woman as dun it all."

"How was that? Spin us the yarn, out and out, Bill?" asked two or three eager voices.

"Wall, 'tain't so much of a yarn," answered Bill, giving another reflective turn to his quid; "for it's every word true to natur' as gospel. It wes, ez I calculate, more'n twenty years ago, and I shipped as second mate aboard the Sea Witch. There wa'n't no steamships in them days, and to tell the truth, I don't think folks was any the wuss for it. This 'ere b'iling water, lashing agin the wind and waves, ain't nuther right nor nat'ral, 'cording to my notion. The Sea Witch war as tight a little craft as I ever sot foot on, and the captain war a gentleman to the marrer of his bones. We had about half a dozen cabin passengers aboard, and one of these—a tall, pale sort of sorrowful-looking young gentleman—tuk my fancy at once. He had a soft, kind way of speaking, and he didn't seem to set himself above an honest Jack Tar, like he war made of different clay. I had many a talk with him, for he used to stay on deck, ez if he didn't like to be alone, 'specially after dark. He was very l'arned and clever, and he told me many queer things that I'd never heern before. But"—Bill's voice sank to a mysterious whisper—"he never told me he was a Jonah."

"A Jonah?" echoed the listeners, in tones of awe.

"We had 'bout the cussedest weather that v'yage I'd ever seen," continued Bill, as if he disdained interruption. "Twan't as much foul weather as cussed weather. The wind kep' a-shiftin' roun' as if it didn't know cl'arly which way to blow, and the gales would bust on ez if they had a spite agin' the canvas; while the way the thunder would crash, and the lightnin' dance roun' them mastheads, was enough to make the toughest hide creep. And the mermaids, or," Bill added, solemnly, "something else, kept a-singing, at the stern of the ship—a-singing death-songs every night."

"Have you never heard nothing here?" asked one of the men, in a hushed voice.

"It's no matter what we've heard here," answered Bill, significantly. "I'm talking now 'bout what war heard there. Ennyhow the singing wa'n't meant for nothing—for the Sea Witch struck on a rock one night, when the sky was so dark we couldn't see how near we war to shore, and the best half of the men aboard went to the bottom with her. Folks never can tell cl'arly what or how things happen at sech times. It's jes' ez if so many lives were thrown out of a bag, and everybody grabs for his own. I only know that I caught hold, somehow, to a broken spar, an' was a-hanging to it for life and death, when I seed the white face of Mr. Riggs—which Riggs was the name of the tall, pale gentleman that I had sort o' tuk to. I saw his white face a-shining out of the water beside me, and I grabbed him and held him fast. He was a-hanging, though I didn't know it when touched him, to a long, narrow box, and when I dragged him from it, it was orful to hear. That air box, shipmates, was a coffin, and that air coffin held his dead young wife, ez he had run away from home with a year before.

"He told me all afterward, while he war lying in the hospital, whar they tuk him when he was dragged ashore. I wa'n't much the wuss or my wetting, but that and sorrow together were his death. He told me, when he was a-laying there dying, that he married her ag'in her father's will and under her father's cuss, and that cuss had followed him and stuck to him to the last. She had cried out, when she was a-dying, that she couldn't rest without her father's pardon, and that he must take her home and let her father say he'd forgive her poor clay. And it was for this that the v'yage was cussed—it was for this the Sea Witch went to the bottom; because no craft could carry that air dead woman, that was underneath a father's cuss. Her sperrit was a-wandering round that air ship, for Mr. Riggs told me, with his dying breath, his wife followed him by night and day."

The moon glided out from a mass of cloud as the story ended, and Herbert Clive turned to throw his burned cigar end into the troubled waves. As he did so the flutter of a woman's dress at the companion-way atracted his attention.

He glanced toward the spot, and saw—aye, he could have sworn it—as plainly as he had ever seen in life, the pale, beautiful countenance, the floating golden hair, of Sybil Wraye!

The white-hooded cloak he had so often seen her wear was thrown back around her shoulders. Their eyes met, and then—then, ere he could spring forward to her side, she had melted from his sight. The moon had passed beneath a rugged storm-cloud, and all was darkness again.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The Storm.

That night a terrible storm burst over the devoted vessel. Herbert was awakened from his troubled slumbers by the din overhead, and, hastily putting on his clothes, rushed above to discover the cause of the tumult.

Beneath a sky of inky darkness lit ever and anon by the lurid gleam of lightning, the Ocean Queen was struggling onward against the mountainous billows that reared their angry foam-crests in her path. The canvas already hung in tatters from the bending masts; the engines groaned and creaked as they labored onward, while the hoarse tones of the captain's speaking-trumpet, echoed by the shouts of the sailors, mingled discordantly with the roar of the angry waves.

There had been night alarms before during the voyage, but never one like this. Captain, officers and sailors seemed thoroughly aroused by a sense of immediate danger, and worked with the fierce energy of men who were working for their lives.

"Will you lend a hand at the pumps?" said the second mate, in a cautious tone, as Herbert reached his side. "The men are pretty well worn out, and we can't spare any more hands there just now. We don't want a panic in the steerage if we can help it; but the vessel's sprung a leak, and we're off one of the worst coasts in Christendom."

"Is there danger?" asked Herbert, briefly.

"She's filling like a leaky tub," was the significant reply, "and the fires are pretty near out. We can't make headway against a gale like this much longer. But there's seven hundred souls aboard, sir, and we'll just have to do the best we can."

There was no time for further conversation. A hoarse call from the captain summoned the mate to his side, and Herbert took hold of the pumps manfully.

The sailors were working on in dogged, gloomy silence.

"Tain't no use, sir," muttered one in our hero's ear. "Orders is to keep quiet and give no alarm; but we can't make no headway 'gainst a leak like this. The water's a-rushin' in like a cataract. Better take to the boats, I say, while there's time."

"Aye, aye! Better take to the boats, while we've got boats!" responded a sullen chorus.

"Avast, there, you cussed cowards!" growled our old friend, Bill. "Do you forget the women and children we've got aboard?"

"Aye, aye!" muttered the other; "but the women and children can take their chances with Davy Jones as well as we can. There—good heavens! what was that?"

For, with a sudden jar, that made every boat and timber in her thrill, the Ocean Queen seemed to sink in the trough of the sea.

"It's the engine that has stopped, you fools!" growled old Bill, laying his brawny hand on the shoulder of a man who would have fled from his post. "We ain't none the worse for the loss of 'em. If it warn't for all the pipes and, b'ilers we have in our hold we wouldn't be in this fix now. Never did believe in this 'ere tea-kettle sailing. Give me a stout, live-oak bottom, and I wouldn't think twice of a gale like this. These iron-pot ships is all agin natur'. Cheer up, my hearties. Don't knock under to a capful of wind like this!"

"Man the boats!" came the hoarse command from the quarter-deck, as loud shrieks from the steerage passengers told that the alarm had reached there at last. "Man the boats! Stand back, ye cowards!" continued the captain, in stentorian tones, as the firemen rushed up fiercely for the first chance of life. "Women, and children first! I'll blow out the brains of the man that steps beyond the line!"

"Good heavens! is all hope gone?" exclaimed Herbert to the old sailor beside him.

"Capt. Knok ain't one to give up easy," was the meaning reply. "The ship's a-settling fast, sir. We ain't got much chance."

Then ensued a scene of confusion terrible to witness—terrible to remember.

Wild shrieks and cries blended with the voices of the tempest, as the terrified passengers thronged up on the deck, falling over and crushing each other in their mad rush for safety.

In vain the brave and self-devoted officers stood manfully at their posts, striving to keep order—in vain the better portion of the sailors exerted themselves to save the helpless and weak. The panic-stricken crowd surged to and fro, crushed by falling spars or washed off by the billows that swept up on the deck of the lifeless, helpless steamer, now a mere hulk at the mercy of the winds and waves.

For a moment it seemed as if the tenderest ties of nature were forgotten, and only the animal instinct of self-preservation reigned supreme. In the first madness of terror, brothers deserted their sisters, husbands their wives. Only the mothers, true at this supreme hour to their holiest instinct, gathered their frightened little ones to their breasts, and struggled for them and with them for life.

The darkness was intense. The red glare of the ship's lanterns, held by the officers, only flung a fitful lurid gleam upon the maddened crowd, who were pressing forward, blindly and desperately to the bulwarks, where the captain stood, firm and immovable as a rock, his drawn revolver in his hand and Herbert Clive at his side.

The first boat was filled and lowered, and went down under the very eyes of those left behind, the despairing cries of the drowning mingling with the agonizing wails of those still on deck.

The second boat was more successful. It breasted the billows for a moment, and then was lost to sight in the darkness; but it awoke a faint hope in the breasts of those who had yet to make the desperate attempt. They might even yet be saved!

A third, a fourth, a fifth, each with its wailing trembling, terrified freight, were sent off in the midnight darkness, and then the fierce instincts of the rougher men, who had hitherto been controlled by their officers, burst all restraint.

Life was too dear for them to sacrifice it to chivalrous chimeras!

Rushing forward, they took possession of the remaining boats, regardless of the captain, who, pistol in hand, fought like a lion for the defenseless ones left in his charge. But all in vain.

The revolver was wrested from his hand by a brawny fireman, and he was flung aside while, with curses and yells of triumph, the remaining boats were seized by the desperate men, whom neither menaces nor violence could any longer control.

The last boats, filled with struggling, shrieking madmen, pushed off into the foaming waves, and the Ocean Queen, with four hundred souls still on board, was left to her fate.

Herbert had done a man's work manfully during these terrible hours. He had lost sight of self entirely in his efforts to save the helpless and the weak.

He had stood by the captain's side until hope was gone; but now—now that the time for action had passed, and he stood face to face with a dark and terrible death—life that he had thought so worthless, grew suddenly precious to him.

He thought of his home and Clive Towers seemed to rise before him, grand and stately, bathed in the glad sunshine of early spring. Fannie's sweet face looked out at him from her vine-wreathed windows; his father's smile, grave, yet tender, beamed upon him from the open door; Laurence Grey's faithful hand was upon his shoulder. Fenton's merry greeting echoed in his ear. He was home again.

Ah, tossed upon angry waves, in midnight darkness, how bright, and glad, and beautiful seemed that distant home! Shadowed though it might be by clouds of sadness—seen through mists of unshed tears—it was home, still home.

He strove to think of higher, holier things, to lift up his soul to Him who rules both the light and the darkness. He strove to pray, but a thousand wandering fancies flitted through his mind.

The shrieks, the prayers and supplications of his fellow sufferers awoke no echo in his breast; he was like one in a trance, a dream.

The great billows swept over the deck, and the Ocean Queen shivered and groaned in the death-throes. Helpless forms, lashed to broken spars, drifted by him in the darkness; moans and supplications rose piteously on every side, as the cruel waves dashed, relentlessly, again and again over the pitiful remnant of humanity still clinging to the upper deck.

And still Herbert dreamed of Sybil—Sybil, who had gone already through the dark gate now opening before him. Sybil, who had returned to warn him of his coming doom.

Old Bill's story recurred to him. Had she, too, followed him, luring him on to death? Had she, indeed, bound him by some potent spell that "death alone could break"?

Would she meet him on the threshold of the unknown world, on which he even now was treading? Sybil, Sybil, his only love!"

There was a jar, a mighty shock. Herbert was flung rudely forward. A huge spar floated before him, which he caught with the hold of the dying.

Lashed to it already was a woman's form—a woman whose long, floating hair brushed his face. And as all were swept downward into the waste of waters, a flash of vivid lightning illumined the scene, and showed Herbert the white features of the woman with whom he was meeting death. They were the pale, rigid features of Sybil Wraye!

PROPER REMEDY FOR A FAINT.

The Timely Suggestion Made by the Husband of a Woman Who Had Swooned.

"What do you think we would better do now?" asked the pudgy man.

It was what the wide-chested man said that made the incident worth telling. They had gone to a ball at the West Side armory. They had brought their wives. A great crowd was present. They sat in the gallery and watched the dancers. Neither had gone out often with his wife. They were prosperous enough in business, but a little shy on social amenities. If an insult was to be resented, both or either of them would know just what to do at any spot in the road. When one of the women fainted from suffocation caused by the over-heated atmosphere of the room, both of them looked as if they didn't know what on earth to do under such complicated circumstances; and he turned helplessly to his wide-chested friend.

"What do you think we would better do now?" he asked, plaintively.

A dozen other women had gathered around the swooning woman and were faning her and pouring water on her forehead. The wide-chested man knitted his brows in thought and then said:

"Let's go and get a drink."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Making of a Hero

Perhaps it would never have happened had a comrade given him a word of encouragement. But the men were too intent on the grim work before them, so, in the hail of lead, when Private Cory dropped to the ground it was generally understood that a bullet had knocked him over. Such, however, was not the case, as the ambulance corps, following in the rear, soon discovered. He had merely fainted from fright.

The doctor turned over the shivering bit of humanity to look for the wound, found none, and smiled. Cases of this kind were not unknown to him. "Poor fellow," he murmured. "Let him remain with the rest."

"No, he is not hurt at all," he said to one of his assistants. "His wound will come afterwards when he recovers from that faint, and God help him, then. There is no bullet wound that will give him the agony that is before him."

"Shall I throw a bucket of water over him, sir?" asked a man with a blood-stained bandage around his head, but sufficient of his face left uncovered to show his intense disgust at his comrade.

"No, you must not disturb him," was the curt answer, and he turned to give his attention to the burdens which the stretchers were now quickly depositing in the improvised hospital.

"Poor lad," he mused, as he bent over his work, "I must give him a word of encouragement when he comes round."

But when, later on, Private Cory staggered to his feet, the kindly doctor was too busy to notice him. He looked wonderingly around the tent. Then the remembrance of what he had done seemed to rise up and strike him full in the face. He sank down again with a choking sob. He clutched the earth with his hands, as men do when struck down in battle with a mortal wound. It was a burning hot day—the wounded were suffering terribly from the intense heat—but he shivered with cold. Outside the shells were screaming, while now and again came the subdued but harsh growl of the smaller arms. It seemed as if a thousand voices were shouting at him and reproaching him for his cowardice. Then a human voice joined in the wild orchestra.

"You bloomin' cur. Call yourself a man?"

It was the stern sergeant of his company, who had been brought in wounded in three places before he had given up. His face was gray with the pain he was enduring, but he must needs give vent to his disgust at such pusillanimity. A contemptuous smile played about his bloodless lips.

"I call it gettin' money under false pretenses. You're clothed and stuffed with the best o' everythink the country can send out, includin' a briar pipe and baccy, and then yer go and—Pah!" and he broke off. "I couldn't hev believed it o' any man in the whole bloomin' company."

He stopped because the pain of his wounds became so great, and he bit hard the piece of Cavendish he had in his mouth to stifle a groan, but other men took up the cue.

No agony of the battlefield could equal what Private Cory was now enduring. He quivered as if acted upon by some powerful electric current, but he made no answer to their taunts, and continued to lie with his face turned to the ground. He tried to reconstruct the wreck of his manhood, but his brain was still in a whirl, and those shrieking shells outside still seemed to be telling the world that he was a miserable coward.

A man was handing round some broth. He had been hours without food, and the savory odor caused a craving hunger to take possession of him. A pannikin full was being passed, from which men took a drink, their expectant comrades looking on with eager, wistful eyes. Cory raised his head, hoping his turn had come, but he was immediately greeted with a storm of curses that caused him to drop it again. Fool that he was to expect it. He might have known.

At that moment the doctor came up.

"Give Cory some of that soup. Hold up, my lad," he said, not unkindly; "you may make a soldier yet. Drink this," and he handed him the tin vessel.

"He is a broth of a boy," shouted a man, and this poor joke was greeted with laughter even by those who know they had but a few hours to live.

Cory sat up. The soup seemed to put life into him, and he ceased to shiver. He was barely out of his teens, but his face, in its ashy grayness, looked more like that of a man who had passed his prime.

"Feelin' a bit better now?" began the sergeant.

"He'll run for it as soon as he's able," remarked the other. "Whew! listen!" he broke off, as a shell exploded just outside. "They seem to have got the range of us now. Nice Christians, these Boers, firing on the Red Cross."

For a few seconds there was silence as the men realized their danger. The angry growl of the quick-firers was every now and then punctuated by the long, deep-mouthed baying of the Boers' Long Tom.

"They are aiming at us, by God!" shouted a man, running into the tent with his right arm hanging helpless by his side.

Immediately there was a violent concussion; the air was filled with dust, smoke, and a pungent smell, and the end of the tent lit up with a tongue of flame. In an instant three or four men sprang forward and the fire was extinguished.

"The devils are firing at us," cried the sergeant. "The next shot will count a bit if I am not mistaken."

Scarcely were the words out of his mouth when a huge rent suddenly opened in the canvas, and a shell dropped right in the middle of the tent. The wounded ducked under their covering, as if they would bury themselves beneath the ground. The doctor, with another, rushed forward; but Private Cory was before them.

"Not you, doctor!" he shouted, as he seized the bomb.

"Quick, my man! Into the bucket with it!" said the doctor. "No! There's no water! My God—"

But Cory had dashed through the opening and was running like a hare. They were all dumfounded for a moment. Then a cheer broke from them when they realized what he was doing—a cheer in which dying men joined.

"Throw it away! Now! Throw it!" yelled the doctor after him.

Still he ran. The music of what he knew was their applause rang in his ears. Nothing had ever sounded so sweet to him. He smiled. It reminded him faintly of his achievements in the football field, when the crowd roared their approval. The ball he carried now was heavier, but the applause—only he knew what it meant to him, and he clutched the destructive missile like a child hugging a doll. He felt inclined to kiss it. If he lived he would be a man and a comrade again. If not—but he ran on.

Some one has wisely said that it requires often but the turn of a straw to make a coward a hero, or a hero a coward. Cory was now a man again. The paralysis of panic that had seized him a few hours ago and had frozen his heart existed now only as a hideous dream. Another ten yards—he was quite fifty from the tent. He heard them urging him to throw it. A few yards more, then with a tremendous effort he hurled it from him. Instantly there was an explosion, and Cory fell on his face.

"Poor chap! He is done for, I doubt," said the doctor, as several raced forward, followed by a number of wounded, who limped in pain.

They knelt by his poor shattered body. The sergeant, his old tormentor, regardless of his own wounds, had been among the first who rushed to his assistance.

Cory raised the only hand left him, which the N. C. O. clasped murmuring something about forgiveness. A smile of exultation played about his comrade's face for a moment, then the film of death gathered over his eyes. He tried to speak, but no words came in obedience to the moving of his lips, for his soul had taken its flight to that land where brave spirits are at rest.—Mainly About People.

Wit Half a Century Ago.

Alfred Montgomery was a member of the English board of internal revenue half a century ago. At one of the sessions of this body, held on a baking hot day, he was shocked to see the chairman's private secretary come into the boardroom with his coat off. As the secretary was leaving the room, Montgomery called him back and said: "Mr. Blank, if you should find it convenient in this hot weather to take off your trousers, pray do not let any feeling of respect for the board stand in your way." One day a canon wrote and asked if he must pay a license duty on a carriage which was only used to take his infirm parishioners to church on Sundays. "What do you say, Montgomery?" said the chairman. "Oh," answered he, "tell the canon that the board will not insist on the old people going to church." He complained of having been bitten at a country house to a certain lord who was not remarkable for his personal cleanliness. "I never have been bitten there," said the nobleman. "No," said Montgomery, "even bugs must draw the line somewhere." On another occasion, when his carriage ran away, he called out to the coachman: "Drive into something cheap."—Argonaut.

Boomerang Joke.

Derby (Conn.) special New York World: James Blakeman's hennery, in Huntington town, was robbed of a number of fine chicken's a fortnight ago. He offered a reward for the thief. On Monday George Crofutt, an intimate friend of Blakeman, told him he had stolen the chickens. Blakeman has often played practical jokes on Crofutt, who wished to pay him back in his own coin. But Blakeman could not see the joke of losing his chickens, and he had Crofutt arrested yesterday. The unhappy Crofutt tried to explain, but Blakeman, very angry, would not listen to him. Crofutt told Judge Curtis to-day that it was all a joke and brought witnesses to prove he was at the White Hills Baptist church when the chickens were stolen. The judge reserved his decision.

The Way of the Transgressor.

The lot of the discharged prisoner is still anything but a happy one. Here is Samuel Seely, released from the Brooklyn penitentiary after having served a five years' sentence for embezzlement, coming forth with just $5 in his pocket, given to him by the penitentiary authorities, and finding his former wife divorced and remarried and his son with another name, which the courts have permitted him to take to hide his shame. This leaves the discharged prisoner all alone in the world, and with the fates against him.—Boston Herald.

He Was a Pusher and Thought He Knew How to Have His Salary Raised—Serious Possibility—A Woeful Day of Mourning in Wormville.

He Was a Pusher.

A physiognomist would have said, after a glance at the young man with the pink eyebrows, that he was one to push himself forward at every opportunity, and proof would have been at hand to corroborate the diagnosis. A lady who boarded the Metropolitan car found every seat taken, and the young man was the first to offer her his. As she bowed her acknowledgments he looked more closely at her and queried:

"Aren't you Mrs. Bluefields?"

"Yes, sir," was the reply.

"Husband has an office on F street?"

"Yes."

"I thought so. I am one of the clerical force in his office, you know."

"Well?"

"Oh, that's about all. One of the clerical force, you know, and if it comes handy you might tell your husband that I gave up my seat to you. Everything goes when a fellow is looking for a step up and a raise of salary."—Washington Post.

His Explanation.

An old sea captain who had navigated his ship many times round the world persisted in maintaining that our globe is not a globe at all, but a flat surface. No arguments, derisive or painstakingly educational, could alter his opinion one jot. Some one said to him once:

"But if the earth is as you say, captain, there must be an edge to it. How is is that no one has ever tumbled over the edge?"

"Why, of course they have," he answered, triumphantly; "that's where the ships go that are reported 'missing.'"—Tit-Bits.

How to Dress the Little Girls—A Pretty Green and White Foulard Frock of Pique—Our Cooking School—Household Hints.

Ojibway Lullaby.

The wind is in the trees;
Does my darling baby hear
What is whispered to the ear
With the lisping of the breeze?—
"Love will keep his mother near,
And the baby need not fear,
For the wind is in the trees."

The stars are in the skies;
Does my darling baby see
How they wink at him and me,
Bright, almost, as baby's eyes?
How they wink to him that he
Is as safe as safe can be,
For the stars are in the skies?

Then go to sleep, my child;
The squirrels are in bed,
Black squirrels, gray and red,
And the little foxes, wild:—
The stars are overhead,
And the winds with me have said;
"Go to sleep, to sleep, my child!"

A Hint from Paris.

Glace silk is the most fashionable material for summer mantles. These are being made to throw about one's shoulders when wearing a dressy reception gown or with a decollete evening gown. Pearl gray cloth makes an elegant wrap, heavy stitched bands being a feature of the trimming. Many of the mantles have a V-shaped front consisting of fluffy ruffles of chiffon or deep flutings of chiffon and lace. A great deal of lace and feather trimming adds to the beauty of some of the mantles.

Glace silk, veiled in white lace, or in beautiful luxeuil lace, are favorite combinations for parasols. The exquisite pastel shades make the parasols a thing of beauty. Some are ruffled throughout; some are lined with pufflngs of chiffon; others have the stripes of the goods running horizontally; some are of white chiffon trimmed with bands of black lace, others again are embroidered in Tambour stitching. Some of the handles are carved in designs of parrots' and birds' heads, the long necks twisted into crooks. All up-to-date girls will this summer have a huge bow of ribbon on the handles of their parasols and the brighter the color the more chic.

Useful Bon Voyage Gift.

If you have ever noticed how forgetful and bewildered people become when packing a satchel you will not smile at the useful little parting token a quick-witted niece gave her aunt. It was simply a card some four inches long and three inches wide, on which was neatly written an enumeration of the necessary and desirable articles that should go into a satchel. Besides a full list of toilet implements it included soap, scissors, court plaster, corkscrew, needles, thread, clothes brush, twine, boot laces, collar buttons, small mirror, address book and pencil.

Moths in Carpets.

If you fear that moths are at work at the edge of the carpet, it will sometimes suffice to lay a wet towel and press a flatiron over it; but the best way is to take the carpet up and clean it and give a careful attention to the floor. Look at the cracks, and if you discover signs of moths, wash the floor with benzine and scatter red pepper on it before putting the carpet lining down. Heavy carpets sometimes do not require taking up every year, unless in constant use. Loosen the edges, fold the carpets back, wash the floor in strong suds, with a tablespoonful of borax dissolved in them. Dash with insect powder or lay with tobacco leaves along the edge, and retack the carpet. Or use turpentine, the enemy of buffalo moths, carpet worms and other insects that injure and destroy carpets. Mix the turpentine with pure water in the proportion of three tablespoonfuls to three quarts of water. Sponge carpet with mixture.

Housecleaning Hints.

To clean wall paper: Lay a sheet of thick blotting paper over the stain, and then press a hot iron over it. As soon as the blotting paper becomes greasy move it; bring a clean part over the stain, and then apply the iron again. Repeat this until the stain has quite disappeared.

For polishing furniture: One third linseed oil, one-third turpentine and one-third vinegar. The bottle must be shaken every time an application is made.

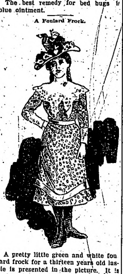
To be delivered from ants make a pyramid of crocks or other vessels containing sugar, bread, cakes, etc., with the lower one standing in water.

For washing carpets: Dissolve a box of any good washing powder in two gallons of boiling water; use as a soap when cold.

A sure exterminator for roaches is powdered borax.

The best remedy for bed bugs is blue ointment.

A Foulard Frock.



A pretty little green and white foulard frock for a thirteen years old lassie is presented in the picture. It is rather elaborately trimmed with heavy cream lace, edged with stitched bands of white taffeta. The hat is a leghorn having a corded silk crown, and is dressed with white roses and knots of black velvet ribbon.

French Eggs and Spinach.

Poach as many eggs as you may require and let them get cold. Then flour each egg, dip into a rich batter and fry a golden brown. Cook some spinach, press it through a sieve, return it to the saucepan, add to it butter, pepper, salt and a squeeze of lemon juice, and make very hot. Place the spinach on a long dish in a mound, place the eggs in a row on this and pour round a good brown gravy.

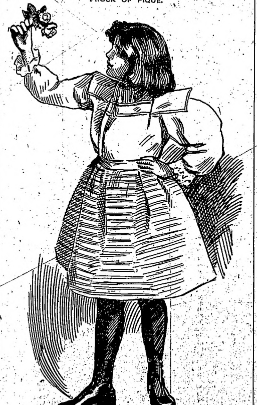
Egg Pie.

Grease a pie dish, then break into it about half as many whole eggs as it will contain. They should be dropped in carefully, so as not to break the yolks. Then for each egg add a tablespoonful of cream and one teaspoonful of run butter. Season the whole with pepper, salt and chopped parsley, garlic, if it be liked. Cover the pie dish with a top crust, cut slits across it and bake at once in a sharp oven to a delicate brown.

Deviled Eggs.

Hard boil four eggs, and when cold remove the shells and cut them in halves, crush the yolks (in a mortar, if you have one), with a teaspoonful of anchovy, the same of French mustard, and enough cayenne to make the mixture hot in flavor; add a piece of butter the size of a walnut, then refill the eggs with this paste, shaping it like a cone and cutting off the points of the whites to make the half eggs stand on the dish. Serve cold and garnish with cress and radishes.

FROCK OF PIQUE.



The very simplicity of the pretty pique frock shown recommends it for the wardrobe of a little girl. A chemisette and sleeves of white muslin, white braid outlining bretelles and belt and tiny pearl buttons down the front make it a charming study in blue and white.

Marjorie's Surprise Party—Still the Last—Degenerated College Yells—Was Not Willie—Playing Train—The Building of the Nest.

The Building of the Nest.

They'll come again to the apple tree,
Robin and all the rest,
When the orchard branches are fair to see
In the snow of the blossoms drest;
And the prettiest thing in the world will be
The building of the nest.

Weaving it well so round and trim,
Hollowing it with care;
Nothing too far away for him,
Nothing for her too fair—
Hanging it safe on the topmost limb
Their castle in the air.

Ah, mother bird, you'll have weary days
When the eggs are under your breast,
And shadows may darken the dancing rays
When the fledglings leave the nest.
But they'll find their wings in a glad amaze,
And God will see to the rest.

So come to the trees with all your train
When the apple blossoms blow,
Through the April shimmer of sun and rain
Go flying to and fro;
And sing to our hearts as we watch again
Your fairy building grow.

Marjorie's Surprise Party.

By A. W. B.

Clear, in the soft, warm sunshine, the Easter chimes were ringing. It was little Marjorie Dean's birthday, and she had come to pass a few days with her grandparents at their country place.

Like all good little girls, Marjorie went to church with her grandmother, for the child took much pleasure in listening to the choir boys sing; but the greatest delight of all was marching with the other little children up to the chancel, where each child received an Easter plant to carry home.

Being Sunday, Marjorie's birthday could not be celebrated until the following day; and Mrs. Dean, not wishing the child to be disappointed, promised her that Martha, the old cook, should bake a large birthday cake on the morrow. This was enough for the little girl's happiness, and she ran off to find Martha and to plan for the beautiful cake.

Monday morning came, and with it the warm, bright sun peeping in at Marjorie's window. After breakfast the child ran out to find James in the barn, for she knew the cows were to be milked, and nothing delighted her more than to look on. Sometimes, when the cows would switch their tails across James' face, he would pretend to be very cross, just to hear the little "missies'" happy laughter.

That afternoon Mr. Dean told his granddaughter there were some new nests in the barn, and as grandma was in need of some eggs, he suggested that Marjorie should amuse herself hunting the nests. The old gentleman's suggestion seemed to please the child immensely, so, hand in hand, they started for the barn, happy in each other's company.

Marjorie hunted about, peeping into all the nooks and corners of the loft until she found almost enough eggs to fill her apron. As she was leaving the barn, she spied an old sleigh by the door. "Oh, look, grandpa," cried she, "would I find any eggs there?" But Mr. Dean was outside talking with James and did not hear the question. So Marjorie stepped upon the runner and was about to peer under the seat when out flew old Buffy, the mother hen, and for an instant startled the child so she almost dropped the corners of her apron. She looked into the sleigh and to her joy found a nest containing three large, warm eggs. After putting them in her apron, she ran to find her grandfather, to tell him of old Buffy's flight and the discovery of the eggs.

Then they returned to the house. When Marjorie had deposited the precious eggs in Martha's care, grandma called her to dress for tea. At 5 o'clock she was ready in her clean white frock and started downstairs to find her grandfather. To her astonishment, in the hall stood nine little girls, all in their crisp, fresh gowns, looking very much like a party, thought Marjorie. "It's a surprise, a big surprise!" cried they all in chorus. Just then grandma appeared at the door of the diningroom to find 10 of the happiest little faces one could wish to see. She led them into the rom, and there, on the tea table, was the promised birthday cake. It was frosted in white and pink, with nine pink tapers burning brightly in the center. The children, overjoyed at such a sight, clapped their hands, and soon the room was filled with their happy voices.

Tea being over, Mr. Dean took the little ones to his study, where he and his wife had prepared a surprise for all. From chairs to sofa, tables to book shelves, windows to stove, were stretched strings of all colors. Marjorie was the first to ask "Why, grandpa, what are all these strings. It looks just like a large spider's web."

"Well, Marjorie, you are nearly right, for it is called a Cobweb Party," replied Mr. Dean, as he gave a string to each little girl. "And now you must keep winding until the ends are reached."

Such excitement prevailed for the next few minutes that Mr. and Mrs. Dean were kept busy disentangling the webs. On went the children from one end of the room to the other, around the chairs, under the tables, over the sofa, until at last the strings ended and shouts of joy went up as each child found tied to her string a little green basket holding a brightly colored egg.

Marjorie had not finished; her web seemed longer than the others. But finally the string led her to the stove, where the fire was burning brightly. Suddenly the child uttered a little scream, and bending by the side of the stove, cried out:

"Oh! grandma, grandpa, come quickly and see! a real live chicken."

They all ran to where Marjorie was crouching on the floor and saw to their astonishment, a tiny little chicken amidst bits of broken egg shell, lying in the green basket.

The children danced about like little puppets, clapping their hands and crying aloud, "A real, true chicken; and all Marjorie's own."

When quiet was restored, Mr. Dean told the little ones of his granddaughter's discovery in the afternoon, and explained that this must be one of Buffy's chicks, who, knowing it to be Marjorie's birthday, had come out to surprise her and wish her "Many happy returns of the day."

College Yells—a Degeneration.

There was once a time when a college yell was an inspiring cry, not wanting in that melody that results from the blending of sonorous young voices in perfect time and accord, ringing with enthusiasm, and pronouncing words or phrases chosen with some respect for the rules of euphony. It was undoubtedly music of a barbaric kind, such as marked the beginnings of civilization, but it held the elements of harmony, with a defined cadence and measure and pent-up fire that had something of the flavor of Homeric days.

The college yell of today has lost all of its music, much of its inspiration and most of its significance. It is no longer a spontaneous outpouring of pride and loyalty to the alma mater, but a harsh mechanism which at the turning of a crank pours forth a great volume of discordant sound. Its main object seems to be to make a noise, and a bigger, louder, more disagreeable noise than the rival school, should its representatives be present.

Now, it may be that American institutions of learning are wholly dependent upon the college yell for preservation and sustenance, and that they might helplessly collapse should its support be withdrawn. Among conservative people, however, there is a growing suspicion that the interests of education may be conserved with a little more decorum and a little less yell. Some one has wisely suggested that an initial step in weaning the American university from dependence upon the yell would be to follow the example of Oxford and Cambridge and fix a certain day in the year when students shall be conceded unlimited license, when discipline and the faculty shall take back seats, and youth and merriment reign supreme, and not college yell and class yells alone be the order of the hour, but when all manner of cat calls and caricature of the dominies shall be reckoned among the day's privileges. Should such an order be established, so strange a combination of manliness and of babyhood is the American student that, finding himself cast wholly upon his own responsibility, one may safely predict he would use his liberty with a wise restraint and consideration unknown to English universities.

The Japanese Frog.

The little folks in Japan make some very interesting paper toys, and none is more interesting than the frog manufactured out of green paper. First cut a piece of paper into a square much larger than you expect the frog to be. Draw lines from the four corners of the square and from the middle of the sides. First fold the paper along the diagonal lines, then turn it over on the other side and fold it along the lines from the sides. It will then form a kind of box which can be pressed together along the folds in the shape of an unequal diamond. Now, seizing the paper below the ends of the cones, fold it backwards so as to have two more regular, equal points. When this has been done to each of the eight cones the result fill be a perfect diamond, with a small diamond in the center. Then each one of the cones must be folded again, so as to get all the points around the center. Care must be taken to get the points as even and equal as possible. To finish the frog, turn the upper points out so that they spread and form the forelegs, and the lower points so that they form the hind legs. When it is finished a fine thread may be attached to the frog's body, and by careful jerks it almost seems to leap around on the floor or table. The paper used should be stiff enough to retain the folds as given to it, but not so brittle as to break under the handling. Do not be discouraged if the first frog you make is lame, for then it is certain that the points have not been folded evenly.

Playing Railroad Train.

"We're playing railroad train," she said as she pulled her father's paper away, "and I'm the conductor. Tickets, please!"

He took a card from his pocket and handed it to her. She looked at it intently for a minute and then handed it back. "That was issued yesterday," she said, "and isn't good today. You'll have to pay cash or get off the train."

Had One at Home.

A class was being examined in spelling the other day at a school in Manchester, when the teacher questioned a little girl as follows: "Ethel, spell kitten." "K, double i, double t, e-n," replied Ethel. "Kitten has two i's then, has it," said the teacher. "Yes, ma'am," answered Ethel, confidently, "ours has."

CONGRESS

Resume of the Week's Proceedings.

The Senate.

Washington, May 29.—In the course of a speech in favor of the adoption of a resolution expressing the senate's sympathy for the Boers yesterday Mr. Wellington of Maryland referred to a secret understanding existing between the United States and Great Britain. When Mr. Lodge of Massachusetts demanded proof that such an understanding existed, Mr. Wellington said under the circumstances it was difficult to produce tangible proof, but he believed there was a secret understanding at the state department. Mr. Lodge said under our form of government no such understanding could exist, and as the secretary of state had denied the existence of any alliance or understanding, he believed that the country would accept his statement as true. The reading of the sundry civil bill was completed, but not all the committee amendments have been disposed of. A lively debate was precipitated over the proposition to continue the life of the industrial commission until Oct. 31, 1901. Charges were made that the commission was being used as a Republican campaign machine and that important testimony had been suppressed. The committee amendment, however, was agreed to.

The House.

Yesterday was a dull day in the house considering the near approach of the final adjournment. The Alaskan civil government bill was passed and some resolutions and legislation was cleared up. Mr. Dalzell gave notice that the anti-trust bill of the judiciary committee would be considered on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week under a special order.

The Senate.

Washington, May 30.—A few minutes before adjournment last evening the senate added to the sundry civil appropriation bill an amendment appropriating $5,000,000 for the Louisiana purchase exposition to be held in St. Louis in 1903 on condition that $10,000,000,000 in addition be raised by the exposition authorities. The amendment was offered by Mr. Cockrell of Missouri and was adopted without debate and without division. Because an amendment offered by him subsequently was stricken out on a point of order, Mr. Gallinger of New Hampshire moved to reconsider the St. Louis fair appropriation and the motion is now pending. As it is known that a considerable number favor the appropriation it is very probable the motion will not be adopted. Mr. Bacon addressed the senate at length in support of the Teller amendment expressing sympathy with the Boers, after which the resolution was sent to the committee on foreign relations by a vote of 40 to 26. Mr. Fairbank of Indiana endeavored to secure consideration of a resolution providing for the extradition of criminals from the United States to Cuba, but Mr. Allison declined to lay aside the appropriation bill for that purpose. No session of the senate will be held to-day.

The House

The house yesterday refused to accept the senate amendment to the naval appropriation bill relating to armor plate, and adopted a modified proposition reading as follows: "That the secretary of the navy is hereby authorized to procure by contract armor of the best quality for any or all vessels above referred to, provided such contracts can be made at a price which, in his judgment, is reasonable and equitable; but in case he is unable to make contracts for armor under the above conditions, he is hereby authorized in his discretion to procure a site for and to erect thereon a factory for the manufacture of armor and the sum of $4,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward the erection of said factory." With regard to ocean and lake surveys the house refused any appropriation for surveys by the navy and tied up the conferees with instructions. It also refused to concur in the senate amendment to abolish the two-years sea cruise for naval cadets. With the above action the naval bill was sent back to conference. The conference report on the other items having been agreed to. The conference report on the postoffice appropriation bill agreeing on all items except the senate amendment appropriating $225,000 for pneumatic tube service was adopted and the house then concurred in the excepted amendment.

The House.

Washington, May 31. — The programme of the leaders of the house yesterday contemplated the launching of the debate upon the anti-trust resolution and bill, but there was a strong undercurrent in favor of adjournment on account of Decoration day. Mr. Dalzell, who presented the special order under which the house was to operate, in deference to this sentiment, withdrew it in order that the 190 pension bills might be passed. After they had been passed, as a further mark of respect, the house adjourned. The Chinese commission bill which was under consideration several weeks ago has gone back to the calendar, the motion to strike out the enacting clause having been defeated.

The House.

Washington, June 1. — The house yesterday, under a special order, adopted, after an exceedingly hot debate, in which the leaders on both sides charged the other with playing to the political galleries, entered upon the consideration of the resolution reported from the judiciary committee proposing a constitutional amendment to lodge in congress the power "to define, regulate, control, or dissolve trusts, monopolies or combinations." Under the terms of the order the day, with a night session last night, was devoted to debate, and to-day at 5 o'clock the vote is to be taken without opportunity to amend. Saturday is to be devoted to the bill to amend the Sherman anti-trust law.

The Senate.

At the conclusion of a session lasting eight hours the senate yesterday afternoon passed the sundry civil appropriation bill, which has been under consideration for nearly a week. The amendment providing for an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the Louisiana purchase exposition to be held in St. Louis in 1903, was continued in the bill. An amendment was incorporated providing for the beginning of the work on the memorial bridge between Washington and Arlington cemetery to be erected in memory of the dead of both the Union and Confederate armies. While the bill carries only $20,000 for the project, it is expected ultimately to cost about $5,000,000. The passage of the sundry civil bill leaves only two general appropriation bills to be acted upon by the senate—the military academy and the general deficiency measure. It is expected they will be passed by Saturday night.

The House.

Washington, June 4.—Only one vote was cast in the house Saturday against the Littlefield anti-trust bill to amend the Sherman act of 1890, to make it more effective in the prosecution of trusts and combinations, their agents, officers and attorneys. Mr. Mann of Illinois cast the negative vote. The bill, according to the statements of the Republican leaders, goes to the limit of the authority of congress under the Constitution. All the minority amendments except one were defeated. That was an amendment declaring that nothing in the act should be construed to apply to trade unions or labor organizations. All except eight Republicans, Messrs. Aldrich of Alabama, Allen and Littlefield of Maine, Bailey, Long and Calderhead of Kansas, and Cannon and Hitt of Illinois, voted for the amendment.

Purposes of the Bill.

The anti-trust bill, passed by the house Saturday amends the Sherman anti-trust law so as to declare every contract or combination in the form of trust or conspiracy in restraint of commerce among the states or between foreign nations illegal, and every party to such contract or combination, guilty of a crime, punishable by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and by imprisonment not less than six months nor more than two years. It provides that any person injured by a violation of the provisions of the law may recover threefold damages. The definition of "person" and "persons" in is enlarged so as to include the agents, officers or attorneys of corporations. For purposes of commerce, it declares illegal all corporations or associations formed or carrying on business for purposes declared illegal by the common laws; provides that they may be perpetually enjoined from carrying on interstate commerce, and forbids them the use of the United States mails. It provides for the production of persons and papers and confers jurisdiction upon United States circuit and district courts for the trial of causes under it, and authorizes any person, firm, corporation or association to begin and prosecute proceedings under it.

Clemency for McGowan.

Washington, June 5—Secretary Long has accepted the recommendation to clemency of the court-martial in the case of Capt. John McGowan and has reduced the sentence of suspension on half-pay from two years to six months.

New Style Board of Strategy.

Flushing, N. Y.—The young women of this city have formed what is known as a board of strategy to assist members to secure the young men of their choice as husbands.

American Wins Honors.

Paris—The first medal of the Paris Salon of 1900 has been awarded to M. D. Despradelles, professor of architecture and design of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, for his design for a monument entitled "The Beacon of Progress."

Dewey's Interesting Relic.

Washington—Admiral Dewey has in his possession the flag captured by Sir William Draper during the battle between the British and the Spanish in Manila bay in 1762. It was given to him by William Everett of Massachusetts.

Her 105th Birthday.

Boston—Mrs. Mary Dow Peavey of South Boston recently celebrated her 105th birthday. She enjoys good health and her memory is as clear as it was when she was a young woman.

News of the Northwest

ANOKA MYSTERY STILL UNSOLVED.

Authorities Apparently Awaiting the Offer of a Reward.

Anoka, Minn., June 3.—Sheriff Merrill has returned from Grantsburg, Wis. He did not bring Harry Balcom back, as many here expected. Mrs. Balcom accompanied him and went to his house. Later they drove to the Wise farm, and Mrs. Balcom remained there.

On the same train were the relatives of the Wises, and also relatives of the Balcoms. It is not believed that Mrs. Balcom will make any admission implicating Balcom or weakening his alibi, which is undoubtedly the reason for her being in the sheriff's company. Detectives remained at Grantsburg.

No arrests have been made. There have been twelve persons under surveillance, including Balcom. His alibi is not accepted by some without further corroboration. He is still under a cloud and will be watched. It seems that in the neighborhood where the Wises lived there has been one continual round of trouble, enmity and strife between them and some of the neighbors. Most all this started in the cattle-poisoning episode of two years ago. The younges Wise girl seems to be irrational. She does not act like herself, and fears are entertained that the strain may be too much. William Wise's condition is improved, his general symptoms being better, and he can move his feet more than at any time since the tragedy. Joseph Wise is also improving.

The county commissioners will meet June 9, and if no arrests have been made then, will offer a reward. As soon as a reward is offered arrests will probably be made, and not before.

BLEW UP THE BANK.

Two Desperadoes Held Citizens at Bay, While Their Pals Looted the Vault.

Des Moines, Iowa, June 3.—The Savings bank at Sheldahl, twenty miles north of here, was blown up by four robbers, who secured $1,600 and escaped after holding fifty or more citizens at bay with rifles. Shortly after midnight, a terrible explosion shook the town and immediately the inhabitants turned out to learn the cause. A glance up the main street showed the building of the savings bank in ruins and the timbers burning. Fifty citizens rushed to the scene and were met by the gleaming barrels of two rifles in the hands of two strangers, who ordered the citizens to halt, and kept them at bay while two others proceeded to loot the bank's safe. The four strangers then made their escape.

BRIDGES WASHED AWAY.

Damage Done by Heavy Downpour of Rain at Clear Lake.

Clear Lake, Iowa, June 3.—A severe rain storm destroyed all bridges on Willow Creek in this vicinity. Considerable livestock was killed by lightning. Rain fell in a steady sheet for about four hours. The lake has risen eight inches, and the creek rose four feet, but is falling rapidly. Damage to crops is considerable.

SUICIDE AT STILLWATER.

Veteran Prison Guard Ends His Life —No Reason Assigned.

Stillwater, June 3. — H. J. Kenyon, for the past ten years a guard at the prison, committed suicide at his home here by shooting himself. No reason can be assigned for the act save that he had not been feeling well for some time.

To Purify Chinatown.

San Francisco, June 3.—In order to set at rest all reports that there is further danger from the bubonic plague, and to protect their business interests the merchants of this city have decided to raise a fund which is to be expended in purifying the Chinese quarter. At a meeting yesterday $30,000 was subscribed and a committee was appointed to increase the amount to $50,000. More money will be raised if necessary.

Arm Amputated to Save Life.

Jackson, Minn., June 3.—Philip Yerk, living near Alpha, Jackson county, had his left arm amputated near the shoulder by Dr. W. C. Portmann, as a result of a fight he had with John Schaan on April 23. In the fight Schaan is said to have bitten Yerk's finger, and recently blood poisoning set in, necessitating the amputation of the arm in order to save his life.

To Have a Celebration.

Redwood Falls, Minn., June 3.—The subscriptions of business men and individuals for the G. A. R. encampment celebration of the anniversary of the battle of Santiago and Fourth of July celebration here July 2, 3 and 4, will reach nearly $1,000, and it is expected that $200 more will be realized from the sale of privileges.

Good for Crops.

Fergus Falls, Minn., June 5.—A welcome shower, the first in six weeks, fell here yesterday evening. The rainfall was only .31 of an inch, but it will be sufficient to freshen pasturage and save the grain for some time. There have been a few light sprinkles heretofore, but the total precipitation for May was only .18 of an inch.

Sudden Death.

Wykoff, Minn., June 3.—Mrs. F. H. Bartlett, wife of one of the oldest citizens of Fillmore county, died suddenly yesterday of heart failure. While sitting on the edge of her bed combing her hair she dropped back and was found dead. She was seventy-seven years old.

Gold Strike Near Sisseton.

Sisseton, S. D., June 3.—Excitement is running high over the discovery of gold fifteen miles northwest of Sisseton in a deep ravine in the Dakota hills. Hundreds of claims are staked. Three hundred people were on the ground Thursday.

Forests Still Burning.

White Earth, Minn., June 3.—Forest fires are still burning and the drouth remains unbroken. Hay and field crops are suffering in consequence, especially on sandy soil.

Captured at St. Peter.

St. Peter, Minn., June 3.—John Theisen, a Missouri criminal wanted at Chillicothe, Mo., for burglarizing a store, was captured in this city by Sheriff Block. Requisition papers have been honored by the governor and an officer is now on his way here after the prisoner.

Ratified by Wilhelmina.

The Hague, June 5.—Queen Wilhelmina has ratified The Hague convention with Spain and also with Germany. The adhesion of Great Britain is expected immediately.

ANOTHER CLUE IN THE WISE CASE.

Men Living Within Two Miles of the Scene of the Crime Are Now Suspected.

Anoka, Minn., June 5. — There were no developments yesterday in the Wise murder. Joseph Wise, the plucky little fellow who has a terrible bullet wound through both lungs, seems bright and more cheerful. He says positively that his mother was shot first. After she was down he thinks she was shot again. Then his father was shot. Wise is considerably better, and can move one hand a little. The Wise home was the object of many visits from the curious yesterday. The entire farm was walked over in search of clues. Suspicion is said to point strongly to two men within a radius of a few miles. Two detectives think they may have run against a straight clue, but not one word will they divulge. Neither, it is said, have they reported to the authorities.

DRAGGED TO DEATH.

Young School Teacher Meets a Terrible Fate Near Anoka.

Anoka, Minn., June 5.—Miss Vina Norris, a handsome young lady twenty-three years old, and a graduate of the St. Cloud normal school, was killed near here Saturday in a runaway. He horse was frightened by a dog. Miss Norris undoubtedly attempted to step out, but her foot caught and she fell backward onto the hard road. The horse was running furiously and the girl was dragged over the rough ground. The animal ran directly home, where Miss Norris' grandparents found the terribly bruised body of the granddaughter still fast to the rig. Life was not yet extinct, but after a few convulsive shudders, she was dead. She was dragged nearly two miles.

WISCONSIN BANK ROBBERY.

Bank of New London Wrecked and Several Thousand Dollars Taken.

New Lisbon, Wis., June 5—The Bank of New Lisbon, owned by W. H. Cash, was burglarized and several thousand dollars in cash taken. The whole front of the safe was blown out with nitro-glycerine, and the front of the building was partially wrecked. The explosion was terrific. There is no clue to the perpetrators, although it is suspected that a couple of strangers who have been hanging around town for two days may have been the guilty parties. The bank will suspend business, pending temporary repairs, when business will be resumed. President Cash says none of the depositors will lose a cent. Messages were sent in all directions, and it is hoped the robbers will be apprehended.

THIEVES GRAB A WOMAN'S PURSE.

Three Men Rob Their Victim and Run.

St. Paul, June 5. — Mrs. Stone, an elderly lady living at 925 Laurel avenue, was robbed in a sensational manner yesterday morning in front of the Central Park M. E. church. She was on her way to the morning service in the church and had stopped to talk with friends outside the building. Three men, she says, seemed to crowd about her. Before she was aware of her intention her purse containing $37 and some valuable papers was grabbed from her hand. The thieves struggled through the crowd and escaped.

ATTACKED BY A BEAR.

Bruin Chews Up a Farmer's Arm, Swallowing the Hand.

Cumberland, Wis., June 5. — Report comes to this city that John Olson, a farmer living nine miles north of here, had a terrible struggle with a large black bear. The animal caught him by the arm and chewed the member completely off, swallowing the hand. Mr. Olson's brother shot the bear and saved his brother's life. The injured man is reported in a critical condition.

Cattle Rustlers Active.

Pierre, S. D., June 5.—After the conviction of McNutt several years ago on a charge of cattle rustling that kind of work was practically stopped in this portion of the state, but as time has gone by the lesson seems to have been forgotten and complaints are becoming numerous again. Most of the depredations have been in the way of horse stealing and in the picking up of young unbranded calves on the prairie and hauling them away in wagons. The stockmen are becoming wrothy, and another example will result if the business is not stopped.

Disastrous Collision.

Alliance, Neb., June 5.—A disastrous rear-end collision occurred yesterday on the Burlington three miles west of here. Engineer Hunting was instantly killed, Fireman Johnson very seriously injured and Brakeman Ellis badly hurt. Freight train No. 30 was running in two sections and the second section crashed into the first. It is thought Engineer Hunting fell asleep or was unable to control his engine. The property loss is heavy.

To Be Tried for Murder.

Pierre, S. D., June 5. — Van Moore, the half-breed desperado who beat an Indian woman to death several weeks ago, has been taken in charge by the authorities of Stanley county, and on a preliminary hearing he waived examination on a charge of murder and was committed for trial at the July term of court. He was brought here for confinement.

Deering Warehouse Burned.

Sioux Falls, S. D., June 5.—Fire in the warehouse of the Deering Harvester company, of which C. F. Espey is the local agent, caused damage to the estimated amount of from $10,000 to $15,000; insured.

Fire at Fergus Falls.

Little Falls, Minn., June 5. — The building occupied by Max Bahre's saloon was practically destroyed by fire with most of its contents. The loss is nearly covered by insurance.

Where Are the Fish?

Albert Lea, Minn., June 5.—Efforts are in progress to ascertain why all the fish except bullheads have disappeared from Fountain lake, for while few seem to have been caught and no dead have been seen about the lake there is a mystery as to what has caused the absence.

Cowboys and Cattle Thieves Fight.

Manhorn, Tex., June 5.—In a fight between cowboys and Mexican cattle thieves on the Rio Grande thirty miles south of here two Mexicans were killed and one cowboy fatally wounded.

EXPORTS TO SWEDEN.

What Minister Thomas Has to Say of Them.

William W. Thomas, American minister to Sweden, arrived in Washington recently from his post abroad. He made a statement for publication, which will be of interest to many people of the Northwest, saying, among other things:

"Our commerce with Sweden and Norway is in a most satisfactory condition. Only two difficulties have arisen within the last three years, and they were most agreeably settled. The commerce amounts to $12,000,000 per year, with the balance of trade very largely in our favor, our exports to Sweden alone amounting to $8,000,000, consisting of cotton, pork, petroleum, sole leather and cereals chiefly, and the imports being $4,000,000, chiefly iron. Swedish iron continues to be the best in the world, and is indispensable in the manufacture of the finest cutlery and the finest drawn wire.

"The first difficulty we had was with lard. Sweden, some time ago, passed a law inflicting heavy fines and penalties on the importation of adulterated lard, a commodity we export largely. This law went into effect April 1, 1899. Soon after a large importation of American lard was seized at Malmo, Sweden, examined, declared to be adulterated and condemned. Two courses were open to me—one was to protest by official notes; the other, to try milder measures. Being on friendly terms with the foreign office at Stockholm, I represented that America made no objection to the law relating to the adulteration of food, nor any objection to the lard's having been condemned and confiscated, providing that it was adulterated; but that I had evidence, conclusive to me, that the lard was pure. This was the first case under the law, and it would be a precedent. I, therefore, earnestly requested that the case be reopened, in order that the first chemist in Sweden might, with scrupulous care, examine the lard. The foreign office acceded to my request, and sent for Dr. Luren, professor of chemistry in the University of Lund. He made a careful analysis of the lard, declared it to be pure, and, on his certificate to that effect, the public prosecutor moved that the indictment to that effect against the lard be quashed, and the complaint was dismissed. Since then there has been no more trouble with the importation of American lard into Sweden.

"The other case was American horse meat. It may not be generally known that we have a number of large slaughter houses for the slaughtering and packing of horse meat, which, I believe, is all exported. On every package of this salted horse meat the United States inspector at the slaughter house puts his stamp, certifying that the meat came from healthy animals. The Swedish custom house authorities held that the signature of the inspector, instead of being stamped, should have been hand-written. This would throw much difficulty in the way of our methods of packing and stamping as to amount to practical prohibition. On this question, I wrote a formal note to the Swedish government, and the government decided to allow my request, and, so far as America is concerned, to admit the stamps of the United States inspectors in the usual way.

"My present visit to America is for a very pleasant purpose. In 1870 I led a little colony of Swedes over the ocean, and, with them, founded the settlement of New Sweden, in the dense forests of the north of my native state of Maine. The colony numbered fifty-one souls all told, men, women and children. It has grown and prospered and to-day has over 2,000 happy, contented Swedish-American farmers. There is not to-day a more prosperous agricultural settlement in the United States than in New Sweden. On June 25 next, the colonists celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the day when I led them into the Maine woods, and, on invitation, I have sailed from Old Sweden to be with them, speak to them and rejoice with them on the day. I bear with me an autograph letter from King Oscar expressing his congratulations on the success of the colony and his best wishes for its future. I also bear with me a fine portrait of the king, signed "Oscar," with the king's own hand, which he has charged me to present to the colony."

Speaking of the rumor that has been current in this country for some time to the effect that King Oscar of Sweden was in failing health, and was thinking of abdicating, Minister Thomas said:

"I know there are lots of these stories, but from my personal observation of King Oscar and from what I am informed, he will live ten or twenty years to rule over his people. He is seventy-three years old, but he rides and shoots as well as when a young man, and I remember him thirty-five years ago. There is also no truth in the stories that Norway and Sweden are on the point of dissolving their relations. King Oscar is beloved by the people of both countries, and I have seldom witnessed greater contentment and happiness."

How the Vikings Scatter.

Newspapers in the Scandinavian language are published in Australia, Africa, and South America, and if only Asia will come in line the chain will be complete. The South American representative is Norden of Buenos Ayres, published by G. Krieger. It costs $10 per year. There are said to be 3,500 Danes in Buenos Ayres and hundreds of Swedes and Norwegians.

While many of the officers in the Congo State army have been criticised and complained against in the Belgian parliament, the Scandinavian officers have been highly eulogized by their superiors, the press and King Leopold himself.

The military committee of the Norwegian storthing is sharply criticised for failure to make an appropriation for strengthening the defenses of Christiansand, Norway's Gibraltar. The place has an excellent harbor and is the key to the North Sea Baltic passage.

Bjornstjerne Bjornson, though still confined to the house by an attack of influenza, continues to work on his new drama. For convenience sake, the play is referred to as "Laboremus," but it is doubtful if this title will be retained when the book appears on the market.

On May 17 the Swedish flag was raised over the De Laval separator factory at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in honor of the return of John Bernstrom, president of the company, from Sweden. The men struck and would not work until the Stars and Stripes were raised over Sweden's colors, and when this was done all was harmony.

A PLEA FOR THE FINNS.

Senator Nelson Says They Are the People for Alaska.

Senator Knute Nelson has written a brief but interesting newspaper article on the colonization of Alaska by the Finns and Laplanders. He writes:

"We have in Alaska a vast stretch of territory but little explored, sparsely settled, possessing peculiar advantages; unique difficulties, and, apart from its golden lodestone, attractive to few because of the nature of the country. What shall we do with it? How shall we make this great, primitive state a cultivated, smiling land? The answer comes from a far-off race, a people who have been ever patient toilers in an unproductive land, oppressed and poor, with no great national traditions, but eminently fitted for transforming Alaska into a settled and cultivated state. I allude to the people of Lapland and Finland, the curious races of the region of reindeer, bitter winters, icebergs and snow. They are a class of emigrants that should be encouraged to come to Alaska, for they can occupy a country that no other race in the world can make anything of, and an influx of the people into this Northwestern state would be one of the greatest blessings that could befall that country.

Unfortunately, there has arisen in Alaska among the miners, an antipathy to these men, and it is with the object of showing how necessary it is for Americans to put a stop to their persecution and to encourage, rather than attack the Laps and Finns, that this is written."

Then follows about 1,500 words on the habits and customs of the Finns and Laplanders in Norway, Sweden and Finland, and what they have accomplished in bleak and unproductive regions where others could not live. In conclusion he says:

"They will cover the hills and valleys of Alaska with reindeers, as they have in Lapland and in the northern part of Norway and Sweden. The animals live upon a kind of moss in summer and winter, and they find this moss in Alaska, as they find there the same climate as in Lapland. Both the reindeer and their traditional masters are destined to rescue Alaska from the desert state in which it has reposed for so long, and make it a bustling, prosperous country, worthy of our Union. Let us see that they are encouraged to come over."

REV. MR. MUUS DED.

He Was One of the Norwegian Lutherans' Most Active Workers.

Rev. Bernt J. Muus, for forty years pastor of the Norwegian Lutheran congregation at Holden, Goodhue county, died May 25, at his old home in Norway. Death thus takes away one of the most active workers and capable organizers within the Norwegian Lutheran churches of America. St. Olaf's college and scores of churches in Minnesota and Wisconsin stand as monuments to his zeal and tireless industry. He never made any pretensions to being other than a plain country parson, and was content to make his only home in America in the village of Holden, where he planned and wrote and every now and then rode out to visit distant places.

In his early days he had twenty-eight preaching places, some of which he could not reach more than once or twice a year, and then only after great hardship. He held only this one pastorate in his long service in the church.

Bernt Julius Muus was born in Snaasen, Norway, March 15. He was educated at the Throndhjem Latin school and Christiania university, and, after graduation, taught for five years. Shortly after his marriage he and his wife sailed to America in 1859. Refusing, on account of conscientious scruples, to take the ministerial oath, he was ordained and entered upon his life's work at Holden that same year. He remained with the Norwegian synod, being for years president of the Minnesota district, until the anti-Missourian defection, when he became a member of the United Norwegian church. Failing health compelled him to give up his work, and he returned last summer to Norway with his daughter, who had come to visit him. The deceased had three sons.

IMPROVED WARSHIP.

Sweden's seventh ironclad of modern type, the Dristigheten, was launched in the presence of the minister of marine, several naval officers and others. This vessel is an improvement upon the type of war vessels adopted some years ago by the Swedish naval constructors for the defense of the Swedish coast, with its hundreds of islands. In appearance these armored vessels resemble the United States cruisers Boston and Atlanta, but carry their heavy guns in turrets instead of barbettes. The dimensions of the dristigheten are as follows: Length on the water line, 285 feet; width, 48.4 feet; draught of water, 16 feet; displacement, 3,450 tons. She will have twelve tubular boilers, calculated to develop 5,400 horse power. The speed will be from 17 to 18 knots. The armament will be two 8-inch guns, one in each turret; six 6-inch and ten 2.3-inch quick-firing guns; two 5.31-inch automatic mitrailleuses, and two 18-inch torpedo tubes. The steam launches will also be provided with rapid-firing guns of small caliber. The total cost will be $1,206,000. Three smaller vessels will be finished before the end of the year 1901.

G. N. Haugan, congressman from the Fourth Iowa district, has been renominated by the Republicans.

Gustaf Sjostrom has been ordained as a clergyman in the Protestant Episcopal church by Bishop McLaren of Chicago.

The Republicans of Wisconsin have nominated Rev. J. D. Nelsenius of Ashland as presidential elector for the Ninth district.

A monument is to be raised to the memory of Queen Margrete, who ruled 400 or 500 years ago. A number of noted Norwegians are aiding in the movement.

Gunnar Wennerberg, the Swedish composer, has lost his wife, formerly Countess Cronstedt. She was a daughter of Rear Admiral Cronstedt, was born in 1830 and married the noted composer in 1852.

Minister Grip has secured a six months' vacation and left for Paris, Norway and Sweden. Legation Secretary Strale will have charge of the affairs of the office until the minister returns.

The recent mobilization in Norway caused some amusing and provoking incidents. At least two weddings were rudely postponed by the bridegrooms being hastily dragged away on the day set for their marriages. The ceremonies were postponed for only eight days, however, and caused only amusement after the first surprise.

Miss Sofie Parelius, the noted Norwegian actress, retired from the stage two weeks ago. She is now seventy-eight years of age, and made her debut in 1852. Since 1855 she has been connected with the Christiania theater, except for two years in Bergen.

GOPHER COAL MINES.

Best Quality of Cannel Coal Found in Stearns County.

For some time past it has been known that coal existed in greater or less quantity near Richmond, Stearns county, in the towns of Munson, Wakefield, and Farming and those who have been on the inside, watching the development have never lost faith in the investigation or in the existence of coal in sufficient quantities to pay to mine. The work of prospecting has been carried on in a quiet way. There has been no boasting or blowing of trumpets. Experts have viewed the mine. Shafts have been sunk in various places, vein after vein of the very best quality of cannel coal have been found and the movement has passed from the experimental stage to the stage of assured success.

The existence of coal in this county has been known for some years, but John Lang, the well-known Richmond general merchant, was the first man in the county to back his judgment with funds. This he has done freely. He has covered all the land where coal was believed to exist with the result that his company now holds leases on more than twelve hundred acres of coal-bearing property. The prospecting has been an easy task for it has been accompanied with no little hardship, but affairs are now in such shape that the work can be pushed forward more rapidly and successfully.

The first shaft sunk gave a vein of four inches of good quality of coal at eight feet. At thirty-nine feet a seven-foot vein was encountered and at sixty feet an eight-inch vein of what experts call the highest grade cannel coal was struck. It will thus be seen that there is no question as to the existence or quantity of coal in Stearns county. The boiler used in pumping, etc., is fired with the coal of the mine; the same product is being used at the blacksmith's forge and also for various other purposes and gives forth the most satisfactory heating results.

Mr. Lang, to whose indefatigable efforts, the prospecting has been carried on, decided upon incorporating under the laws of the State of Minnesota, and this was done, the capital stock being placed at $70,000 and under the caption of "Eureka Mining company." The capital stock represents 280,000 shares of the value of 25 cents each. The incorporators are John Lang, Jacob C. Winter, Mary L. Lang, Kilian Kirchner, Joseph Greifnder and J. B. Braun. All are careful, conservative in business, and the affairs of the industry will be carried on in a way that will reflect credit upon the promoter and his associates.

The mines are located three or four miles from Richmond and Cold Spring, and the first active steps toward development were taken last February, since which time there has been no let up. The main shaft sunk is 4½x3½ feet in size and there are numerous others. The diamond drill is now en route to the mine, and as soon as it arrives prospecting will be continued in earnest. The importance of this mine, should it prove even half what the management predict, cannot be overestimated. Its product will find a ready market at a good price.

CAUSE OF THEIR DOWNFALL.

County Treasurers Are Allowed Too Much Discretion, Says the Public Examiner.

As a result of the troubles with the county treasurer at Winona, Public Examiner Pope proposes to see that the law regarding the keeping of public accounts is enforced with all the more vigor.

"Treasurer Crise's books showed a shortage of $1,644," Mr. Pope said. "He was engaged in some private financial deals and finally used the public funds, temporarily as he thought. He drew a personal check of $650 on the treasury of the county and could not replace it.

"If the 'easy-go-lucky' manner of conducting financial affairs in the counties were not in vogue this trouble could never have arisen. The law says plainly that the books of the treasurer shall be balanced every day, that every disbursement of money shall be by check, and that the checks shall be issued on warrant of the auditor duly countersigned. Instead, the treasurers balance their books when they please, pay out in cash whenever they see fit, and draw checks according to their discretion. The case of Crise is quite similar to those in two other counties recently, and it shows more plainly than ever that notwithstanding all the arguments about convenience of conducting the treasurer's office, about long usage and so on, the law must be enforced to the letter."

INCREASE IN BEER DRINKING.

Eighteen Thousand Barrels More This May Than Last.

The report of the internal revenue office for May, shows that the people of Minnesota have consumed 18,000 more barrels of beer than they did during the corresponding month of last year. But while some were drinking beer others must have been investing their surplus money in real estate and making contracts, because the receipts for documentary stamps were increased by over $6,000.

According to the figures compiled by J. W. Vars, chief clerk in the office, the total receipts for May are $213,679, as against $195,633 for the corresponding month of last year. Of this amount $137,281 was derived from the sale of beer stamps, when last year it was only $90,372. The sale of documentary stamps for the month just closed was $75,108, and a year ago it amounted to $68,825.

The warm weather is considered responsible for the unusual sale of beer stamps, but genuine prosperity is accountable for the increase in the sale of documentary stamps.

An important decision on tax payments has been rendered by the supreme court in the case of the state vs. Orrin Kipp. The court says in the syllabus:

"A purchaser at a tax sale, as well as a person who procures an assignment from the state after lands have been bid in at a tax sale, takes a certificate of purchase or an assignment subject to the statutory right of the state to enforce the collection of a prior tax when refundment has been made on account of a void sale, as provided in G. S. 1894, sections 1610 and 1607."

FOR KANSAS CITY

INDICATIONS OF A BIG ATTENDANCE FROM THE NORTH STAR STATE.

Two Train Loads in Prospect—Outline of Plans—The Democratic Headquarters Train and Another of Lincoln Republicans—Political Gleanings of the Week. The Boer Reception—Truth About Oregon's Election—Twin City and State Points and Pointers—The Weekly Roundup for the Reform Press.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, June 11, 1900.

Previous declarations that there is to be a large attendance from Minnesota at the Democratic national convention, as well as the Silver or Lincoln Republican gathering, same time and place, have been more than confirmed to this point by events of the past week. It looks now like the largest delegations, official and of citizens, that has ever gone from the state to a national convention of any party. The following is an outline of the arrangements:

Commencing with the Democratic delegation, the state central committee will run a headquarters special train to carry the delegation which, delegates and alternates, will number 86, and all Democrats of the state or others who may desire to attend the convention, with the official party. The train will be made up of sleepers, tourist and other coaches, and will carry band, etc., and be appropriately decorated, and will be run and managed for the convenience and comfort of the party, going, coming and while there. The sleepers and coaches will be used at Kansas City, so that there will be no necessity for securing hotel there, except for meals. The train will be located within easy distance of the convention hall. All of which accommodation will be at the lowest possible cost, one price for the round trip to include all, which price and all particulars will be announced duly by circulars by committeemen and through the city and local press. The train will run special, leaving the Twin Cities probably early in the afternoon of July 3, and arriving at Kansas City early in the following forenoon.

All arrangements for this train are in charge of the following committee, appointed by State Chairman L. A. Rosing: J. A. O'Shaughnessey, chairman, T. R. Kane, secretary, and O. A. Robertson, E. W. Murphy and Geo. S. Canfield.

The Silver Republican train comprises like arrangements as to sleepers, tourist cars and coaches, and will have a chair car, and with band, other music and decorations galore will, it is safe to say, maintain the Silver Republican record for political "hustling." E. S. Corser, Minneapolis, has full charge of train and arrangements, under authority of the Silver Republican state central committee. The train will also run special, leaving and arriving in daylight, and will be located in Kansas City so as to be used for sleeping purposes, which is covered in the trip rate. All particulars will also be duly given out by Mr. Corser, who should be addressed New York Life building, Minneapolis. Mr. Corser and committee pledge 200 by their train.

Minnesota headquarters for both Democrats and Lincoln Republicans have been secured at the Coates House.

Speaking of the conventions, the programme of the Lincolns is in part prepared. Its membership, being a mass convention, is expected to be upwards of 1,500. Senator Teller will be either temporary or permanent chairman, and the prayer will be offered by Rev. Dr. Horace Bigelow of Cincinnati, and Dr. Howard S. Taylor of Chicago will furnish an original poem.

The coming week will bring many details of the Democratic convention, now under consideration.

Our friends everywhere should remember the Democratic county and state conventions, the former called for each county on June 14, the latter June 20 at Minneapolis. The railroads have made a one fare round trip rate for the state convention.

Congress has closed without passing the anti-oleo bill so much desired by the dairy interests, but it did not fail to provide for the armor plate and other army and navy steals.

St. Paul fully sustained Minnesota's patriotism and Americanism in her management of the state's welcome to the Boer commissioners. Despite the fact that the railways refused rates, there was a goodly representation from the interior, and the Twin Cities turned out an immense audience at the St. Paul evening meeting, which was all that could have been expected as to enthusiasm and spirit. The Transvaalers took with them only the most pleasant recollections of the North Star state. And they were also satisfied that their cause and their distressed country have the sympathy of a great majority of the people of this state. It is safe to say that if it were made a matter of vote, the Boers would be endorsed by at least 80 or 90 per cent.

In the face of the almost unanimous sympathy of the masses it is surprising to many that the would-be leaders of the state Republicans have so persistently withheld any encouragement of the struggling South Africans. The real reason is however apparent. These leaders know that sympathy with the Boers is sympathy with the Filipinos, and they fear the inevitable application.

And again has Candidate Van Sant turned his back on the Boers and on those who do sympathize with them. He was invited to be present at the state reception, as he has been invited on each separate important occasion of the kind during several months past. He was invited to Minneapolis, to the St. Paul pro-Boer meeting, to the one at his home, Winona, etc., all of which he either ignored or gave a trivial, trumped-up excuse. He has not by his course strengthened himself with our liberty-loving citizens, especially those of foreign birth, who know what it is to stand up for country, and who have live sympathies with any people struggling for home and liberty. These will remember Candidate Van Sant.

What's all this worry about the Boxers in China; is not John Goodnow at Shanghai?

Oregon election reports well illustrate the garbled information of the G. O. P. and so-called "independent" press. Democrats were "skinned," or the opposition "staggered" according to each respectively, the "independent" party dependent, rather exceeding its copatriots in zeal and such election "lesson."

Now the fact is that neither class of paper had such information, by "freight" or otherwise. It was only a "guess" by the ass ociated press, based on fragmentary returns "claiming" 6,000 to 7,000 Republican majority, congressmen 2,000 to 3,000, and the legislature "Republican."

Now, Oregon has never been anything but Republican but once since 1872, and that was in '92, when fusion carried by 811. The average Republican majority for the last five presidential elections has been near 7,000, and was 15,000 in 1894. In the election of 1898, corresponding to this (for state officers and congressmen) it was 10,774, the two congressmen having above 2,000 and 6,000 respectively, while the legislature was 20 Republican majority in the senate, and 26 in the house, 46 on joint ballot. Besides there was a full complement of Republican state officers.

The latest reports are that the state has gone Republican by about the usual figure, except that the legislature is largely reduced. Considering the sheen and gloss of "expansion" in this coast state, and all that the national and state machinery, with supposedly copious showers of Hanna money, could do, there is certainly very little Republican encouragement in Oregon.

Our farmers who have been marketing their wheat for the entire year to this point at barely 50 cents will have noted that the price of silver has for some time ruled at 60 and better, chasing close up to the market price of wheat. How few of them now doubt but that if silver rose to par, wheat would stand close to the dollar mark? Silver would rise by free coinage. Is the silver question then so dead, considering the interests of our producers?

Well does the party in the door (50-cent wheat), as the cartoon shows it, say to the party within, getting himself up for the G. O. P. campaign, "Peek-a-boo, papa, you can't lose me."

The way departmental business is done under the Lind administration is well shown in the adjutant general's department in cases of Spanish war claims by state volunteers. These numbered 500, covering every variety of case, under circumstances with which all soldiers are familiar. They were all acted on by Adjutant General Lambert and filed at Washington May 2. The adjutant general presented them in person, and with such care and accuracy that before the month closed he received notification of the settlement of all with the exception of less than 30 referred back for various unimportant details. Such cases often drag for years, causing no end of annoyance and often loss. General Lambert receives many commendations for his success in the matter.

The local event of the week politically has been the inauguration of "Honest Bob" Smith as mayor of St. Paul, the result of the handsome victory by the united reform forces of the Capital City. Twin City people feel better. St. Paulites have felt most keenly the bad name of their fair city under Republican mismanagement, and look forward to substantial improvement all round.

And Mayor Smith's retirement admits ex-Governor A. R. McGill to his place as postmaster. Governor McGill is so fair a man politically, that his personal recognition, even by an administration which he is believed to hold in no great respect, is highly gratifying to many. Of course this is not an "evening up" of the ex-governor's old score with his party, but he can see what has happened to his predecessor, and gauge the thing up as a stepping stone, and take courage.

Says the Minneapolis Times:

"If Mr. Bryan were president and the Democratic party in power, tomorrow, they would do nothing practical to aid the cause of the Afrikanders. They would not because they could not, without involving this country in a war with Great Britain—an inconceivable price to pay."

If Mr. Bryan and his party had been in power there would have been action at a time when action could safely have been taken, which would have saved these two South African republics. Bryan and his administration would not have been engaged in the same kind of a war that Great Britain has been conducting, to-wit, one against the Filipino republic. That is the meat in the cocoanut. If the United States had been doing right in the Philippines, in Cuba, and in Porto Rico, she could well have said something as to what England should do in South Africa. England would never have entered on the South African job, without first making sure that the McKinley administration would keep hands off. Bryan as president could have saved the Boers, and there would have been no war with England either. And none know this better than those who now point out that it is "too late." G. S. C.

PLATFORM TALK

And the Money Plank for the Coming National Campaign. As to Silver.

Shall There Be More Than a Reaffirmation of the Chicago Platform?

Other Current National Political Topics—Our State Administration.

Now, that the state Democratic conventions, as fast as held, make it certain not that Bryan will head the national ticket by probably a unanimous nomination, but that there will be a step backward as to the Chicago platform, discussion is turning largely upon what, if any, specific declaration there will be upon the questions, especially touching free coinage.

Since the Sioux Falls convention, the plank there made has attracted great attention, and is generally received with favor by Western silver men. This is especially true since it is emphasized that the free coinage declared for carries with it a substitution of such money for the notes of the national banks.

The following is from Hon. Geo. H. Shibley, of New York, author of the Sioux Falls Plank, from a recent issue of the National Watchman:

At the national convention of the People's Party at Sioux Falls, the money plank denounces in detail the Republican currency law of March 14, 1900, and then presents the following remedy:

"We reaffirm the demand for the reopening of the mints of the United States for the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1, the immediate increase in the volume of silver coins and certificates thus created to be substituted, dollar for dollar, for the bank notes issued by private corporations, under special privilege granted by the law of March 14, 1900, and prior national banking laws, the remaining portion of the bank notes to be replaced with full legal tender government paper money, and its volume so controlled as to maintain at all times a stable money market and a stable price level."

This declaration means that the People's Party desires to repeat the money fight of 1896, and to apply the history of the past four years to demonstrate the correctness of the position then taken. In other words, the reform parties declared that a stable price level was a just, and therefore an ideal system. Mr. Bryan repeatedly said that this was the issue. In his speech of acceptance at New York, in 1896, he declared: "The interests of society demand a financial system which shall add to the volume of standard money of the world, and thus restore 'stability to prices.'"

Since 1897 there has occurred an inflation of standard money, and it has set in motion the wheels of industry, just as we said it would do; and there has been enacted a law for an inflation of paper money through private corporations. The Sioux Falls platform demands that these "bank notes" be replaced, dollar for dollar, with silver coins, silver certificates, and full legal tender government paper money, and that the volume of this government currency be "so controlled as to maintain at all times a stable money market and a stable price level."

That was our position four years ago, 'tis our position now, and the events of the past four years have demonstrated that we were right then, and therefore, are right now. And we have this additional advantage: Our opponents have admitted the quantity theory by passing a law for "more money" and all that we have to do is to ask that this paper money, issued through private corporations, be replaced with standard money—metallic money under free coinage—and that such portion of the bank money as remains shall be replaced with full legal tender government paper money and that henceforth the volume of the paper money shall not be left to accident or the bankers' self-interest, but shall be scientifically regulated. This means that an index number of average prices shall be constructed, thus measuring the height of the price level; that each week or possibly each day, a now measurement shall be made and that then the volume of the government currency shall be enough, and no more than enough, to maintain a staple price level.

This is the multiple standard, and in combination with a fixed par of exchange with silver using countries—bimetalism—the result is the ideal system.

Some of the results which will flow from a stable price level, secured, as it will be, by fixed rules laid down by Congress, are as follows:

1. It will abolish the president's discretionary power to put treasury money into Wall Street, and withdraw it, thereby controlling prices and business.

2. It will prevent speculators, speculative banks, foreign bankers, and foreign governments from controlling the money market, prices, and business.

3. It will prevent panics, falling prices, and the consequent disorganization of industry from this source, which our opponents characterize as over-production and which now threatens society.

4. It will prevent a rising price level.

5. It will furnish a stable basis on which to adjust prices fixed by law, custom, and competition.

6. It will remove the money question from politics.

7. We shall have, under such a system, a restoration to the conditions under which the country has come to greatness, a condition of real prosperity for the masses, with opportunity restored for rewards for industry and labor, and with such restoration escape from evils which threaten the destruction of the republic.

H. L. Chaffee, of the Minneapolis Commercial Salesmen's Anti-Trust League, gives in the National Watchman the following sixteen reasons why he is this year a Democrat:

1. Because a war that was commenced in the interest of humanity, finally developed into a war of conquest.

2. Because the monetary bill passed March 14 may properly be termed an act to present to the national banks a hundred million dollars.

3. Because the action of Secretary Gage in depositing large sums of government money in the Standard Oil Company's bank was an act of favoritism to a monopoly, whose annual profits are four times the interest on the national debt.

4. Because the administration has shown its subserviency to the trusts in agreeing to pay the armor trust not less than twenty million dollars this year in excess of a fair price.

5. Because for nearly four years the administration has done nothing to check the unprecedented growth of trusts.

6. Because the Republican party stands for a high tariff, which is the bulwark of the trust.

7. Because the ways and means committee and subsequently Congress, with the help of the president, made an abject surrender to the Tobacco and Sugar trusts, in the passage of the Porto Rico tariff bill.

8. Because the Hanna ship-subsidy bill, which meant not only a steal of nine millions a year, but a monopoly to large vessel-owners, was withdrawn with the distinct understanding that it should be put through at the next session of Congress, provided the Hannaites were in power.

9. Because Cuba was promised independence, and it is now apparent that the Republicans intend to break faith with the people of that island, just as they have done with Porto Rico.

10. Because the record of Governor Lind, in compelling corporations to bear a just share of the burdens of taxation, and because the success of the railway and warehouse commission in reducing freight rates on grain from one to three cents per bushel has demonstrated the wisdom of voting the Democratic ticket in Minnesota.

11. Because the administration, through Secretary Hay, adroitly changed a proposition "to mediate" under the Hague treaty to intervention, thereby defeating the purpose of the treaty, and throwing the entire moral influence of the government upon the side of Great Britain in their criminal aggression in South Africa.

12. Because the whole administration has been Hannaized, until the spirit of commercial greed and political corruption has permeated our system of government as manifest.

13. Because I am opposed to anarchy or a system which sows the seeds of anarchy.

14. Because none of the reforms such as "postal saving banks," "election of U. S. senators by the people," or "postal telegraph lines" have any show of success, so long as the present administration is retained in power.

15. Because this election in 1900 involves more than the supremacy of any party. The result will determine whether this country shall permanently depart from the fundamental principles of the founders of our government, who proclaimed equality of all men before the law. Whether the constitution and declaration of independence shall follow the flag or whether we shall adopt the British imperial policy which teaches us that might is right. A policy which carries the flag to every clime, and by force of arms rules subjects without the consent of the governed. A system which demands a large standing army with the evils which follow militarism and the corruption which attends a colonial policy.

16. And, finally, because in this conflict between liberty and despotism which has been waged in one form or another for thousands of years, I see the same spirit that once stood for the divine right of kings, now manifest in a commercialism, which through monopoly and special privilege seeks to lay tribute upon the many for the benefit of the favored few.

It is well known that the Minneapolis Swedish paper, the Svenska Folkets Tidning, since it came into ownership of Republican bankers, omits no opportunity to oppose Governor Lind. But an instance of how the governor's political enemies have to praise him when they speak in actual candor, is furnished by the Goodhue County News, in reporting what one of the owners of the Tidning, Judge N. O. Werner, said in Red Wing, when there recently. Judge Werner said:

"LIND IS THE BEST GOVERNOR MINNESOTA EVER HAD." Then Mr. Werner continued:

"There is no denying that John Lind has made a good governor. He has been careful and painstaking and has not missed a detail of the state's business. We have never had a governor who gave such close attention to every branch of the administration. His leaving the party was the greatest loss the Republicans have sustained in this state. He would have been senator before this if he had chosen to stay in the party. Governor Lind was never as strong as he is today." That is Judge Werner, says the News, a Republican whose party loyalty is unquestioned. He spent Monday and Tuesday in Red Wing, his former home, taking counsel with Republican leaders here and talking freely with Republicans and Democrats both. He opposes Lind's political tenets as cordially as ever, but he frankly declares his good opinion of his administration.

Partisanship makes a heavier draft on belief than on intelligence!

It's kind o' funny that a man can carry a mortgage that he can't "lift."

As the authority and power of privileged classes are weakened, the liberty of the masses is strengthened.

One dollar spent by England for bread where ten dollars are spent for battle, would make an incredible difference in the sum total of the world's present woe!

Monopoly is the parent of wealth centralized in few hands; public ownership of natural monopolies is the remedy for that dangerous disease, wealth centralization.

If the constitution does not apply to our new colonies, what right has Congress to legislate for them? Where does Congress find authority to legislate at all except in the constitution?

A group of American farmers were loading a car with corn donated to the starving people of India and at the same time praising England for her kind, tender, maternal care of the millions she is blessing with her rule!

William J. Bryan has opinions and the courage to defend them.

William McKinley also has opinions, but lacks courage and never sticks to them.

Bryan has faith in the people and stands up for their rights.

McKinley has no faith in the people and sacrifices their rights at the demand of the trusts.

Bryan opposes imperialism and works for freedom, and a republican form of government.

McKinley champions imperialism and works for an aristocracy of money at the expense of the people.

Bryan opposes the trusts which rob the people, enslave workingmen and kill competition.

McKinley fosters and protects the trusts regardless of the people and uses all his influence to make the rich richer, which has also the result of making the poor poorer.

Bryan has a practical plan to restrain the trusts and if elected president he will put it into execution.

McKinley has no plan to restrain trusts, and if he did have such a plan the trust managers, who own him body and soul, would not allow him to enforce it.

Which of these two men would best serve the people as president of the United States?

There is no choice between them. Bryan stands for all the people desire in the way of justice and protection. McKinley represents the trusts and imperialism and ignores the people.

The people are going to elect a president next autumn. Will they put a friend or an enemy in the White House?—Chicago Democrat.

Editor Richard L. Metcalf of the Omaha World-Herald, in the New York Journal:

In the campaign of 1900 the Democracy will follow a man whose rise from obscurity to a position of eminence has been due to his sincerity, his ability, his firm adherence to truth and his consistent attitude toward fundamental principles. Against him are arrayed all the forces that operate for class advantage. On all questions but one all men of the Democratic party agree with him. On that one question he represents the sentiment of ninety per cent of the Democrats. On that question he stands—as he has stood on all questions—the uncompromising champion of the truth as he has learned the truth. Men may urge him to yield his convictions, man may plead with him to deal in platitudes, but the urging and the pleading will be in vain.

So far as concerns the Democrats who sincerely advocate the single gold standard, the choice will lie between McKinley, with whom they agree only on one question, and Bryan, with whom they disagree on a single question. The choice will lie between a man of platitudes and a man who says what he means and means what he says, between a man whose ear is "tuned to catch the slightest pulsation of a pocketbook" and a man who "listens to the heartbeat of humanity;" between a man of whose policies none but the trusts can be certain and a man whose principles the world understands.

Those who choose McKinley cannot separate the man from his cant.

Those who choose Bryan cannot separate the man from his candor.

Those who choose Bryan cannot hope that he will abandon the policies thought out for him by others.

Those who choose Bryan need not expect him to abandon the principles he has thought out for himself.

It will be McKinley and an empire; or it will be Bryan and a republic.

If an empire resting upon gold is preferred to a republic resting upon gold and silver, then let us begin the erection of the imperial temple—the temple that shall testify to the correctness of European prophecy that government of the people, by the people and for the people shall perish from the earth.

New York Journal: The most important question which the Republican party has to face at present is not the planning and planking of a Hanna platform.

It is an easy matter to howl against the trusts without meaning it, and to fill a platform with deceptive cant and rant about the blessings supposed to follow the flag and the splendid prosperity of our satrapies.

The Republican platform, as we have learned from experience, is built of empty words and broken promises which can be written on a typewriter in fifteen minutes.

This does not worry the Republican party. The question which is causing sleepless nights is how to cover up the utter rascality of the administration. It cannot be hidden by a bombastic platform. The public cannot be deceived by rosy speeches.

Hanna leads the administration like a red ox with a brass ring through its nose. As the ox, McKinley, is irresponsible, except within the limits of his rope.

It is Hanna first, last and always, and for all the scandal and rascality connived at and covered up the people will demand an explanation.

Here are a few of the things that voters will do well to make an especial study of between now and election day:

The Alger embalmed beef scandal.

The financial collusion between John D. Rockefeller and Secretary Gage.

The tariff oppression of the Porto Ricans.

The United States army outrages on the Coeur d'Alene miners authorized by William McKinley.

Thefts, murder and mismanagement in the Philippines.

Postoffice rascality and embezzlement in Cuba.

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty by which we are to build an isthmian canal while England commands it.

Tattooed and daubed with such a damning record, the Republican party will find its platform a very minor consideration with the people.

Tammany Croker on Bryan: "I am for William J. Bryan with my whole heart. He is far and away the ablest man that we have in American politics this day. He is a wonderful man. There is no man to compare with him anywhere or to put alongside of him. He is a fine character, a man of high principle and of tremendous energy.

"Mark my words: When William J. Bryan is elected he will work eighteen hours a day in order to carry out in spirit and in letter every plank in the Democratic platform. Hitherto other men have regarded the platform drawn up at their convention as a ladder on which they mount to power, and which they kick down as soon as they get to the top.

"Mr. Bryan is not a man of that sort. He does not want to be elected for purposes of vainglory and love of position. He thinks, and I agree with him, that if he is elected he will do his country good. He will be able to serve the people, and he will be a governing president, not a mere lay-figure, whose movements are governed by wire-pullers. He is a man of conviction."

Sioux Falls Press:

Is it not significant that in two continents men who love liberty better than life are waiting for Bryan to become president of the United States in the hope that then the American republic will be a republic?

Albert Lea, in common with sister cities in Southern Minnesota, has recently received an instructive object lesson on the Trust question. The Albert Lea Tribune (Rep.) has the following to say with regard to it:

"A dog-in-the-manger policy in the commercial world was never more boldly demonstrated than it is being at Albert Lea today and the cracker trust is the demonstrator. By the order of the cracker trust thousands of dollars worth of valuable machinery used in the manufacture of crackers was destroyed in this city yesterday afternoon and was sold for scrap iron to local junk dealers. The machinery was that which was used in the cracker factory formerly owned by C. A. Ransom and which was purchased by the trust for the express purpose of removing it from the field of competition. Not only has the machinery, which is the best manufactured and is practically new, been destroyed, but the tust refused an offer of several hundred dollars for it. Rather than sell it and run risks of having it used in the manufacture of crackers, even on such a limited scale as would be necessary, its owner, the trust, sent its agent, F. J. Royer of Mankato, to the city Wednesday and by his orders every part of every machine in the building on East Williams street was smashed to pieces and rendered valueless. The pulleys and belts were shipped out of town. The trust could have sold the machinery for at least $500. Chas. Jorgenson, proprietor of Hotel Albert, made the trust an offer for the machinery. He purposed using the machinery in a bakery."

America's corn kitchen is now in successful operation at the Paris exposition. Perhaps in time even the Parisians may be made to "acknowledge the corn."

London's old underground railway is to be revolutionized by the use of electric motors. This will answer the objection as to smoke often urged against the present system of underground transit in London.

The Supreme court of Massachusetts has recently decided that the druggists of Boston must not sell cigars or tobacco on Sunday. This is the outcome of a long contest waged against them by the retail cigar dealers who are not allowed to sell their goods on that day. When they were debarred from selling they naturally protested against the right of druggists to sell, and the fight which has been going on for years has resulted in their victory.

After two years of investigation in nearly all the principal cities of the union the United States industrial commission has completed a report on general labor laws which, it is understood, will recommend that labor laws be made uniform throughout the states. A digest of national and state labor legislation will be of great value to the industrial and political interests of the country, but when it comes to specific recommendations in favor of extending the labor laws of certain northern states, put upon the statute books for political purposes, to all the states of the union the commission will be skating upon thin ice.

It is more than half a century since the Mexican war closed, and this may seem to be a rather late day to be delimiting the boundary between the two countries. The western half of the frontier is not a natural boundary, such as the Rio Grande supplies, and it was surveyed and marked by monuments between 1849 and 1856, but the monuments were few in number and not of permanent materials. The present international boundary commission, appointed in 1891, resurveyed this part of the boundary and marked it with many monuments consisting of hollow iron posts filled with concrete. Soon the work along the Rio Grande will be completed and there will be no further cause for dispute as to the frontier of the two countries.

What is known as the Grand Army bill in pension legislation, provides that pensions shall not be refused to widows whose income does not exceed $250 a year. The limit hitherto has been $90 a year. Naturally a considerable increase in the roll of pensioners would take place at once. It is to be noted, too, that pensions to widows last longest. There was, for example, last June one survivor of the war of 1812 on the pension rolls, but there are 2,000 widows of veterans of that war still drawing pensions. The Spanish war and the war in the Philippines are likely to furnish a goodly number of claims for pensions, the number now being estimated at 25,000. With this increase and the extension of the scope of legislation, it does not appear that we have reached "bottom" in the pension business.

Telegrams to London papers continue to show the remarkable spread of the bubonic plague in at least a dozen parts of the world. Here is a summary: At Mauritius, two deaths, two fresh cases. In Bombay the epidemic has become serious and is spreading. In Calcutta the same condition exists. At Port Said there have been two deaths and the plague is spreading. At Teheran, Persia, since the outbreak of the plague, there have been 200 deaths, but the violence of the epidemic has been modified recently. In Manila from twenty to thirty deaths daily are reported. At Hongkong there have been fifty-two fresh cases in a fortnight, and ninety-eight deaths since the beginning of the year. At Melbourne two new cases are reported. At Sidney 188 cases and fifty-four deaths have been reported. The mayor is paying 12 cents a head for rats, which are believed to cause the spread of the disease. In Noume, New Caledonia, the plague is raging, and there have been 238 deaths. At Brisbane there have been three cases; at Perth one death; Auckland the same. In Buenos Ayres the plague has been raging since the middle of March, and there have been forty deaths in two months.

Until a few years ago mostly Christians were accredited as ambassadors from the Sultan of Turkey to western states, and in London alone there served a Christian who remained there as representative of the sultan for forty-four years. The present ambassador in London is a Greek and a Christian. So are the ministers in Brussels and The Hague.

AMERICA AT PARIS EXPOSITION

We Are Leading the Great Nations of the Earth.

Paris Letter.—As we sat in the American pavilion wondering how soon they would get the smoking room carpet down the plaintive high notes of an American business man in expostulation came wafted on the religious silence of the white-walled rotunda.

"And you call this an American postoffice?" he was saying. "Then why can't I buy a money order?"

L. P. Moore, of Philadelphia, the sympathetic postmaster in charge, explained gently that it was really an American branch postoffice, the first and only one ever established abroad, but that not being set down as such in the books, the postmasters of the United States would have no authority to draw money orders on it. As for issuing money orders, such a one-sided act would have its difficulties also; but he could rent him a lock-box. One side of the rotunda of the American pavilion is taken up by this coquettish little American postoffice. Its lock-boxes have a smart, American look. Renting at only twenty-five cents a month, they are within the reach of all, and the "kicker" compromising on one of them, walked off, mumbling to himself the letters of his combination.

"Now that man is an example," mused Postmaster Moore. "Here our government is the only one that has had the enterprise to set up a postoffice for the accommodation of its citizens. Americans can address their mail to 'The United States Pavilion, Exposition of 1900,' in perfect assurance that it will be kept till called for. We have lock-boxes, call-boxes, a general delivery, a registered letter department and mail bags that the French government permits to come through unopened. Yet the man kicks because I cannot issue him a money order!"

If the kicker and his kick are to be typical, the European nations will have set before them an object lesson of the ingratitude of a too-well-served people. As Charles A. Coolidge, the architect, remarked: "There is no chance for an American to go wrong at the Exposition of 1900. The American who loses himself in spite of all the precautions that have been taken for his safety and convenience will have to be a pretty ingenuous blunderer.

"Now, look at this admirable pavilion," said this architect, referring modestly to its admirable uses, not its admirable design and decoration. "What use do you think the English have made of their national pavilion? They have filled it with oil paintings—a picture show, with never a writing desk or an inquiry window! The American pavilion is given up entirely to the uses of visiting Americans. This large room in which we sit is the men's smoking and conversation room. The one just like it across the rotunda is the women's parlor. They are just the thing for appointments. You have seen the postoffice. There are, besides, two American elevators whose speed will make Europeans hold tight when they venture in them. On the second floor are three parlors, furnished by the states of New York, California and Massachusetts. Except for a desk and register book in each of them for the special registration of the citizens, these state parlors are open equally to all Americans."

"But how did New York, California and Massachusetts happen to be granted such privileges?" I asked.

"There is no mystery," said the architect. "They paid for the furnishing of the rooms. That is all. I have not heard that there was any scramble for the privilege. There are no exhibits in these three state parlors, though California has gone to the length of setting up still another state room, or apartment, down on the Place de l'Opera.

"The remaining large room on this floor is to be a well appointed slicking-up room, two indeed, for men and women, with all toilet requisites. To be sure, it is for the public, but we must discriminate. Would it not be almost too much to have the thousands of Americans within the exhibition gates continually on the run to this accommodation? No, you had best say that Americans who happen to be here, making inquiries, are as welcome as the flowers in spring to step in and slick their hair and wash their hands, but they will not be expected to make it a pilgrimage."

The third floor of the pavilion is given up to the reception rooms and private offices of the commissioners-in-chief and the eighteen national commissioners.

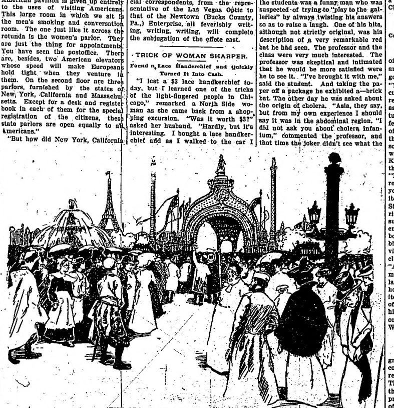
On our way to the women's room we passed the Loyal Legion room and the room given up to the Information Bureau of Dr. Pike. The Loyal Legion room speaks for itself, but the exact status of Dr. Pike, after inquiry, remains as mysterious as ever. "Commissioner Peck assigned the room," said one official, "and we understand that Dr. Pike is going to run a bureau of general information respecting matters that do not come within the scope of the Chamber of Commerce, such as finding an address, a railway ticket or a particular kind of shop.

In the women's room, however, there was information to throw to the birds. "Do not take the ladies too seriously," I had been warned discreetly by an official. "It is true they have their room in the pavilion, and we hope they will have a good time in it; but it should not be lost sight of that the American pavilion is not a women's building." Then he stopped abruptly, as if struck by remorse.

When I saw Mrs. Potter Palmer, at the Hotel Ritz, the aims and aspirations of the women became clearer to me. There are several women commissioners among the eighteen recently appointed by the president. They can retire from the third floor to the fourth floor for consultation when they deem it advisable. For the rest the women's room in the pavilion bears an analogy to the Women's building at Chicago.

"Great interest attached to the fact that congress authorized a board of lady managers of the Chicago Exposition and gave them a Women's building," said Mrs. Potter Palmer.

I repeat it, never was a traveled people treated so generously by its government abroad as the Americans this year at the exhibition. Norway, China, South Africa, Japan, England, Russia and Italy have not publishers' and correspondents' buildings. In this building, under the awe-struck gaze of Europeans, two live American newspapers are to be set up and printed daily. With the Paris Herald, the Messenger and the American Register this will make five daily papers for Americans in Paris during the exhibition. In the Publishers and Correspondents' building the European public will admire the splutterings of the typesetting machines. And, lastly, the impressive spectacle of a thousand or more American special correspondents, from the representative of the Las Vegas Optic to that of the Newtown (Bucks County, Pa.,) Enterprise, all feverishly writing, writing, writing, will complete the subjugation of the effete east.



THE CROWD AT THE MAIN ENTRANCE.

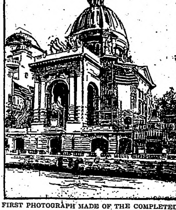
TRICK OF WOMAN SHARPER.

Found a Lace Handerchief and Quickly Turned It Into Cash.

"I lost a $3 lace handkerchief today, but I learned one of the tricks of the light-fingered people in Chicago," remarked a North Side woman as she came back from a shopping excursion. "Was it worth $3?" asked her husband. "Hardly, but it's interesting. I bought a lace handkerchief and as I walked to the car I stopped to buy a newspaper. I had my purse in my hand and a number of things, of course, and I laid the parcel containing the handkerchief and the check for it down on the counter of a fruit stand nearby. After I got to the car I thought of my package. I hurried back and the package wasn't there. "Where is the little package I left here?" I asked the Italian vender. "'Zatta litt' pape?' Yes. 'Other lady took it.' I wanted that handkerchief especially to give to a friend for a birthday present. I went to the store again and picked out another handkerchief. 'I am sorry the first one didn't suit you,' the clerk said. 'Why, I lost it,' I replied in astonishment. 'You don't say so!' said the clerk. 'Why, about 10 minutes ago a nice-looking woman came in here with that handkerchief, and we took it back and refunded the money. She said that you were her niece, and that you were out shopping together. You decided the handkerchief was not just what you wanted, and she came back to return it. We gave her a ticket for the $3, and she cashed it.'"—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Anecdote of Culbersen.

In the Fifty-first Congress, when Czar Reed first gained that title by his arbitrary decisions, Judge Culberson was one of his strongest supporters, although he gave the speaker no public endorsement, for political reason. One afternoon while the Democrats were in a terrible tumult over a decision of the speaker and the proceedings of the House were very near riot, a thunderstorm came up. When the confusion was highest a blinding flash of lightning and a terrible crash of nature's artillery startled every soul on the floor and caused a profound silence. Judge Culberson, like everybody else, was deeply moved, but was the first to recover. "That was God Almighty, sir, calling this House to order," he exclaimed in an impressive tone, addressing the speaker. Then, turning to his colleagues he said: "Now let us proceed to business like men."



FIRST PHOTOGRAPH MADE OF THE COMPLETED AMERICAN PAVILION.

Student Was Getting Gay.

It was at a Chicago medical college and a "quiz" was being held. Among the students was a funny man who was suspected of trying to "play to the galleries" by always twisting his answers so as to raise a laugh. One of his hits, although not strictly original, was his description of a very remarkable red bat he had seen. The professor and the class were very much interested. The professor was skeptical and intimated that he would be more satisfied were he to see it. "I've brought it with me," said the student. And taking the paper off a package he exhibited a—brick bat. The other day he was asked about the origin of cholera. "Asia, they say, but from my own experience I should say it was in the abdominal region. "I did not ask you about cholera infantum," commented the professor, and that time the joker didn't see what the others were laughing at.—Chicago Chronicle.

The President's Blonde Hat.

Washington special New York World: President McKinley wore his new white Fedora hat for the first time when he went out driving with Mrs. McKinley this afternoon. It was raining hard when the carriage returned. Just as the president stepped on the porch a gust of wind swept the new Fedora from his head and whirled it out into the rain. A white house policeman hustled after the hat and brought it back to the doorkeeper. It was much bedraggled and will have to go to the cleaner. For the information of men who "look like McKinley," it may be said that the president wore the Fedora without a crease.

FUNERAL MARCH AT LUNCHEON

Peculiar Method of Chicagoan of Passing Time While Awaiting Order.

His manner is the reverse of the somber and funereal. In fact, he is round, fat, jolly and talkative. Judging from his appearance and his words he enjoys life, is reasonably successful and has no complaint to offer. May be he is an American Mark Tapley, who really needs something heart-racking to equalize the bubbling spring of good humor. But he certainly delivered himself of a singular combination yesterday when he ordered his luncheon. It was one of those places where business men "bite pie" and kindred things. Rows of stools face counters, while in the middle Senegambians walk about and occasionally drop things to the floor. He blew in literally, for a nasty wind chased him when he opened the door. He was humming to himself as he dodged the street filth borne on the wings of the breeze. A little thing like that could not dampen his cheerfulness. He sailed to a stool, assembled himself on top and then grinned approval at the waiter, who got right back at him. "What's yours today, sir?" asked the waiter. "Same old bill, Sam," was the breezy retort. "Coffee and rolls, Mr. ——?" "Coffee and rolls, Sam. Had a good morning this morning. Been too busy to think. Nice day, ain't it?" Sam went for the coffee and rolls and the cheerful man looked about him and beamed on all and sundry present and accounted for. Then as if unconsciously he resumed his song where he had left off. His nearest neighbor stopped the mastication of a sandwich and gazed in surrise. He saw the most rotund, cheery individual he had met in days, with his arms folded across an ample waist, gayly chanting a funeral march. The somber music, irresistibly suggestive of tears and woe, seemed to give the fat man exquisite pleasure. He sang away in a subdued voice, stuck cleverly to the score and gambolled merrily through to the dismal end. He disposed of his coffee and rolls, waved a hand and smiled brightly upon an acquaintance, picked up his check and, still singing Chopin's saddest tune, paid his bill and departed. As he went out of the door a wild gust of wind cast back into the cafe a strain from that funeral march.—Chicago Chronicle.

ONLY A QUESTION OF TIME.

Concerning an Event Which Occurred About 1,000 Years Ago.

He had been told in the business office where he would find the literary editor, but by some mistake he got into the stall of the horse editor. "You will kindly not mention the circumstances of my call, I am sure," remarked the visitor, "but I have been asked for an article on the 'Literature of the Oriental Races,' and I confess to you that I am rather ignorant of portions of the subject and I thought you would be sure to know, so I came to ask you to tell me what was the time of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam." "Of what?" exclaimed the horse editor, dropping his pencil. "The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam," repeated the visitor distinctly. "Aren't you mistaken?" asked the horse editor, reaching up for a copy of Track Statistics. "Oh, no." "Well, I'm a ringer if I ever heard of a horse of such a name," said the horse editor, emphatically, "and I know there's nobody named Khayyam owning a stable in this country. By this time the visitor was holding himself up by clutching the desk with both hands. "Aren't you the literary editor?" he managed to whisper. "Well, hardly," laughed the equine wonder. "I'm the horse editor." "Oh!" was all the visitor could utter and he fairly fled out of the place. "That's a horse on him," smiled the equine wonder and once more resumed his labors.—Washington Star.

Fasted Thirty-Five Days.

For the past two or three years a great number of people have had recourse to the starvation cure as a remedy for their ills of body or mind. There are many authentic cases where this abstaining from food has been productive of good results, but the case of Mrs. Hermina Meyer, a Philadelphia woman, who was a sufferer from rheumatism and who resorted to the fasting treatment as a cure, resulted fatally. Under the direction of an advocate of the fasting cult she abstained absolutely from food for 35 days. Then she was seized with convulsive vomiting. From 130 pounds she was reduced to a mere skeleton. On the 35th day she tasted food, and three weeks following the breaking of her fast she died. The person who had directed her to fast pronounced Mrs. Meyer's death due to heart disease, but her family physician declared it purely a case of starvation.

Betty's Party to Soldier Raiders—Bab's Lesson in Pathology—A Soap-Bubble Trick—The Land of Anyhow: A Poem for Young Folks.

The Land of Anyhow.

Beyond the Isle of What's the Use,
  Where Slipshod Point is now,
There used to be when I was young,
  The land of Anyhow.

Don't Care was King of all this realm—
  A cruel King was he,
For those who served him with good heart
  He treated shamefully.

When boys and girls their tasks would slight
  And cloud poor mother's brow,
He'd say, "Don't care! It's good enough!
  Just do it anyhow!"

But when in after life they longed
  To make proud Fortune bow,
He let them find that Fate ne'er smiles
  On work done anyhow.

For he who would the harvest reap
  Must learn to use the plow
And pitch his tents a long way off
  From the land of Anyhow!

Betty's Party.

(By Hope O'Neil, age 15, Detroit.)

Betty Ransom stood leaning against the front gate, idly drumming on the gate post with her fingers, and gazing wistfully across the meadows at the town, half a mile distant. She was very lonesome, and no wonder. This was her fourteenth birthday, and her father was far south in the war and her grandmother had gone only that morning to help a sick aunt, nine miles away, while not even a child lived near to come and visit with her. A quaint figure she would have made to-day, for this was at the time when our great-grandfathers were fighting for liberty, and Colonel Tarleton, with his hated British troops, was overrunning Virginia, plundering and burning the homes of the Colonists. And, standing there alone, Betty was thinking of her father who had gone away so long ago, when suddenly her eyes fell upon a horseman coming up the road enveloped in a cloud of dust. Nearer and nearer he came; and as he passed the house he waved his arms and shouted:

"Come to town! The redcoats are coming!"

The girl started toward the house, and then stopped abruptly, as granny's last words came to her: "Don't go away, Betty, and take good care of the house." What would poor granny do if anything should happen to her little home. She would surely never get over it, and at once the brave girl decided to stay there and endeavor to persuade the soldiers not to harm the place. After carefully bolting the doors and closing the blinds, she sat down in the dim parlor to wait, hoping they might go straight on to town. The sky clouded, and it began to rain. Perhaps it was the rain's monotonous beating on the pane, or else it was the stillness of the house, that at last made Betty fall asleep. The afternoon wore slowly away, and finally, about 5, she was awakened by the sound of horses hoofs, and, peering through the curtain, she saw a group of soldiers, with their brilliant uniforms splashed with mud and water, dismounting at the gate.

"Confound this rain," said one; "we may as well stop here and get dry, any way. And say, captain, it looks as if no one was home. Maybe we can find some supper and something to carry away, too." And he chuckled as he pushed open the gate.

The officer addressed dismounted, strode up the path and gave a thundering rap at the door, and, summoning up her courage, Betty opened it.

"Hello!" cried the astonished intruder, and then he added pleasantly, "Will you give us something to eat, my little lass?"

"Granny isnt home," replied Betty timidly; "but if you will put your horses in the back shed and step in, maybe I can get you some supper; only please wipe your feet on the door-mat."

The men laughed at this, but not one of them stepped into the trim little kitchen with muddy boots. Betty led them to the parlor, and then, as she closed the door, a bright idea came to her. It was her birthday, so why not call this her birthday party? Quickly putting her thought into action, she brought out the best damask table linen, choicest china and silverware, and set on the table a great bowl of roses. Then out of the well-stored pantry came all kinds of ham, and a great tankard of cider. When all was done she slipped upstairs and put on her best blue frock, and then called the soldiers to supper. Great was the surprise and admiration as the men caught sight of the table, and when Betty had explained the captain gallantly escorted her to a seat at the head of the board. By the time the merry meal was ended the men had forgotten that they were going to rob the cottage, and finally, when the captain arose and said, as he held his cider mug high:

"Here's to Mistress Betty Ransom, the sweetest little maid in Virginia! God bless her and bring her father safe home to her. He was greeted with cheers. And after they had all drank her health the captain dropped several coins into his empty cup, crying: "Here's to a birthday gift for her." And then the glass went gaily around the table, to be at last set down before a very happy and grateful little girl.

And when, after firing a salute to their little hostess, they all rode away, Betty stood in the doorway, bathed in a flood of ruddy sunset light, and waved a royal good-by to her British birthday guests.—Detroit Free Press.

Bab's Lesson in Pathology.

"Bab" is a fox terrier who counts as her very own that portion of the world immediately about her. She is a quick and reasoning animal and displays traits which are strongly human. Recently she became the proud mother of two rolypoly puppies, white, with a few black spots scattered upon their tight coats. One morning Matilda came in from the kennel with the information that one of the little ones was dead and the other one nearly so. A relief corps at once visited the kennel and the surviving puppy was brought into the house. A few drops of stimulant were forced between his lips with great difficulty. Then a small hot-water bottle was placed against the little stomach, which seemed unnaturally hard and swollen. Next he was placed snugly in an old fruit basket with a scrap of blanket and developments awaited. Poor Bab was heartbroken. She followed the ministering angels into the house. Placing her sensitive nose under the chin of her sick infant, she wailed mournfully and long. She was tenderly comforted, advised to bear up, be brave and so forth. After a time Matilda, observing that the water was cooling, took the bottle away to be refilled. To this Bab objected strongly. But when she saw Matilda returning with the bottle she trotted nimbly toward her and offered to take the bottle in her mouth. Matilda let her have it, wonderingly. Bab at once went to the basket and awkwardly poked the bottle again under the small invalid's stomach. The puppy rapidly recovered. Its improved condition was evident to Bab, for she disappeared and returned, tenderly carrying the dead puppy. It was clearly her desire that it, too, should receive treatment. But the plump little body was beyond help. After a time, much to the annoyance of the other nurses, Bab climbed upon a chair with the sick puppy. But they waited to see what she would do. Then she made a second trip to the basket and brought the water bottle to the chair. The small fruit basket had hampered her in cuddling her baby, but upon the chair she formed a happy group—mother, sick puppy and hot-water bottle, in close and comfortable conjunction.—Elizabeth Nuhemacher, of New Albany, Ind., in Chicago Record.

A Soap Bubble Trick.

It is easy enough to blow three soap bubbles, one inside of another. The important matter is to have the right kind of water to make good bubbles. Take some soap containing a large amount of glycerine, or better still, take one-third of a part of chemically pure glycerine and one and one-third distilled water containing a little oleic acid natron. Make two tubes out of rolled wrapping paper, covering the paper with mucilage on both sides before rolling it up. Let one tube be about an inch in diameter at the outer end and the other two inches. Whip the water up so that it is soapy, and after a little experimenting, if soap is used, the proper consistency will be obtained, so that the bubbles stand well. Do not blow the bubbles in too warm a room, as the evaporation bursts them. Then cover a plate with a thin layer of the soap water. Blow a bubble from the widest tube and lay it gently on the plate. Soak the other smaller tube in the soapy water, so that it is wet some distance from the outer end. Then very gently insert the tube and blow a bubble with it in the large bubble already on the plate. Now you have two bubbles inside of one another. To make the third, take a common clay pipe, wet it well on the outside in the soapy water, and then, inserting it very gently into the inner of the other two bubbles, blow a bubble, not too large, and have father fill it with smoke from his cigar, through the pipe, to make it more distinct. Release the bubble from the pipe end, withdraw the pipe and you have three bubbles miraculously inside of each other, or at least it seems miraculous to any one who does not know how it is done.

A Chivalric Bird.

Even the birds recognize woman's rights—at least so an Audubonite lecturer declared the other day in describing the habits of the golden-crowned thrush, more familiarly known as the oven-bird. The word "oven" merely refers to the shape of the philosopher's nest, which usually is built on the ground with a dome-like roof. Even the family name suggests fire, being Furnariidae. But the way in which the nest is built explains the bird's answer to "eternal feminine" demands. A partition divides the "oven" into two compartments. The inside one is for the lady bird and has a luxurious feather bed. The outer room is the gentleman bird's boudoir, and its only furniture is a rough clay couch. This head of the family has a golden crown—which he deserves, for he's a gentleman and a scholar—a regular bird of a bird, to fall into the slang of the day—who might teach something to humanity—masculine humanity, that is.—Baltimore News.

To Work for School.

Vice Commander in Chief A. L. Sorter of the Sons of Veterans of Mason City, Ia., arrived at Milwaukee recently and was given a reception at the Plankinton house by the local members of the order. Mr. Sorter is the originator of the plan to found a Sons of Veterans' school and war museum to the memory of Lincoln. He is now touring the country in the interests of the school project and went to Milwaukee to advise with Commander Braband of the Wisconsin division in regard to the part that Wisconsin desires to take in the matter and also in regard to the talk of locating it in Milwaukee.

Pittsburg Seeks an Honor.

The chamber of commerce of Pittsburg, Pa., has passed a resolution petitioning the secretary of the navy to give the name "Pittsburg" to one of the new armored cruisers to be constructed for the United States navy. The reasons given for granting the honor are that Pittsburg is the heart of the greatest iron and steel producing interests in the world; has a population of 1,608,964 within a radius of sixty miles, according to the census of 1890, and has a total ascertained tonnage by water and rail of nearly 59,000,000 tons—larger than any other city in the world.

STILL ANOTHER WAR.

JOHN BULL FIGHTING "WILD MEN OF BORNEO."

Rebellious Natives Driven from Stronghold to Stronghold and the End Is Near—Rare Courage of the Islanders—Is Near the Philippines.

While public attention, so far as British military activities are concerned, has been centered on the South African struggle, England has been having serious trouble with a people other than the Boers and at present is carrying on a bloody war in Borneo. Owing to the poor facilities for carrying news, little has been made known as yet as to the origin of the war, but it is known that Britain is conducting an active campaign which cannot end otherwise than in the early crushing of the revolution.

The government at Washington may well shake hands with the British over kindred troubles in the same neighborhood. Borneo is a next-door neighbor of ours in the far east, being situated immediately and only a short distance southwest of the Philippine Islands. It is in direct line between Australia and Asia, and is a little nearer the latter. Borneo is one of the largest islands in the world, but from the standpoint of production has been of little importance. It seems the island produces little but monkeys, butterflies, tobacco, jungles and fevers. A rebellion was organized last year under a chief named Mat Lalleh and before the British bestirred themselves, a serious rebellion was begun. Much of the earlier part of the war was confined to jungle fighting. Here the natives had a tremendous advantage on account of long familiarity with the few paths through the tangled brush and their remarkable agility in sliding through what is apparently impenetrable masses of bamboo and undergrowth. So long as the rebels clung to this style of warfare the British made little headway in subduing them. Time and again the English were decoyed into ambuscades in the jungles, and always with disastrous results to the "Atkins" troops. The islanders also had several forts, and the Englih endeavored to capture them. One of them, the fort of Lalleh, occupied an almost impregnable position and it was found impossible to surround it completely. Intrenched in such a position as this the rebels were able to defy their enemies for some days. Their British adversaries had no cannon just then sufficiently heavy to do any effective work against the fortifications, ordinary as they were. There was no course left but to make an infantry attack and to endeavor to carry the fort by storm. Under fire from the rebels the British made a dash for the outer works, where they were stopped by a stout bamboo fence. The upper ends of the rods had been sharpened and this in addition to their height above the ground rendered scaling impossible. The soldiers began cutting through the barricade. As soon as the first opening was made there occurred a remarkable instance of courage and daring.

A Javanese boy named Leyman, who was a servant of one of the resident British officials, dashed through the hole in the stockade and with a big can of oil in one hand and a flaming torch in the other ran toward the fort buildings. The rebels, yelling and howling, turned their heaviest firing on the boy. The soldiers, who were now pouring through the openings in the bamboo fence, soon drew most of the fire from the lad. Undaunted by the bullets whistling about his head Leyman darted from building to building, and soon half a dozen of them were in flames. The rebels brought into play a small brass cannon, which at the third shot exploded. With the explosion the rebels abandoned the fort to the enemy. A number of them were captured, however, and the remainder who had escaped the bullets, darted into underground tunnels and escaped. At last, the rebel forces had to retire to their only fort, which occupied a commanding position, and here they withstood the British for ten days. On one occasion a dare-devil patriot appeared on the fort wall and shouted defiance at the enemy. A rifle cracked and a ball passed through both legs of the patriot. The man fell outside the walls and no sooner struck the ground than he scrambled into a sitting posture and turning his face to the enemy tore open his shirt, exposing his naked breast. A half score of rifles rang out and six or seven bullets entered the spot the poor rebel bared for them.

Eventually the rebel chief was killed, the fort had to be abandoned and now the Borneo revolutionists, the few who are left, are fugitives in the jungles. Very soon it is expected they will be run to earth and the revolution will be at an end.

Ammonia Gas.

Ammonia gas is obtained from its salts by acting on these with slaked lime or solutions of potash or soda, and is freed from water by passing over quicklime or solid potash, and is finally collected over mercury. It is a colorless gas, of a pungent smell and alkaline taste and reaction. It is remarkably soluble in water, one volume dissolving nearly 700 of the gas. Such a solution constitutes the Liq. Ammon. Fort. of the pharmacopeia, and when diluted is the liquid ammonia used for household purposes.

Their heads are used for cuff stands and for hat pins, and the amount of good luck they bring to the fashionable wearer is said to be boundless. My!

HAVE STAGE AMBITIONS.

Amusing Letters of Application From Job Hunters.

Managers of theatrical companies receive all sorts of queer applications. The Dramatic Mirror prints some of these, with pertinent comments. Says the Mirror: Manager George Dupree of "O'Hooligan's Wedding," sends this impressive communication, received by him from Pittston, Pa.: "Sir—I saw your ad where you want to hear from good people. I am a song and dance man and ragtime singer with sketch and dont take a back seat from any Buck and Wing dancer that ever threw down sand and I can certainly set fire to the sand. If you can use me, answer with ticket." This, it seems, must be the outpouring of a young man who has been told that the right thing for one to do is to assert one's self. Some one has sent in the following letter, which would seem to indicate the existence of an extraordinary person out in Kansas: "Dear sir—I am nown as the Band imitiatir or the man that swallowed a Brass Band. I am a Freak. I am the only man that does any work like I do. I give a imitation of a full Brass Band—can be heard plainly. I always make a hit and get hand. If you can use me please write me at ——— Kan. (permanent.) I also do vocal work using high tenor." Every one has met many freaks in his time, but few that have come out unreservedly and admitted that they were such. It might be expedient for some "uniformed band and orchestra" manager to communicate with the phenonenon, who should work for less than they are paying to a number of musicians, all of whose places he could fill. Frank Hallaren advertised in Kansas City for a few amateurs to assist in chorus work. He has turned in this picturesque reply to his advertisement: "dere Ser, I was reading the star tonite about minstreles and Amateurs. I am one of those I meen Amateurs. I am goin on twenny 2 year Old come the 5 of March and My folks all say I would be a good minstreles and if you think so write me a Letter and I will joine your company. I sing good and can say lots of funny jokes to make the people laugh and could play the drum in Your band with practice because I could play some tunes On the Piano and I would like to be in the band I amm a Stranger in the City but will be better none when I am here longer becaws I was in lots of shows before I will now say Good By."

SENATOR ELKINS

And How His Warm Friendship for Blaine Began.

One of the warmest political friends of the late James G. Blaine was Stephen B. Elkins, senator from West Virginia. Their friendship began this way: Early in the seventies, when Mr. Elkins was a territorial delegate to Congress from New Mexico, privileged to speak, but not to vote, he wanted to make a speech upon a subject dear to the hearts of his constituents. Mr. Blaine was Speaker of the House and Mr. Elkins was a new man and, being unknown, was without influence. He determined to be heard, nevertheless, and planned to meet the Speaker privately. As luck would have it, one night while Elkins was dining in Welker's restaurant Mr. Blaine walked in and took a seat near him. Waiving all formality, the young member introduced himself and laid his case plainly before the Speaker. "All right," said Mr. Blaine, when he had ended. "As soon as you get your speech ready I'll recognize you and you shall be heard." And heard he was. The speech was in a small way Mr. Elkins's political beginning, but it was of even more importance to Mr. Blaine, for the young man promptly pushed himself in a commanding place in national politics, and soon afterward married a daughter of Henry G. Davis of West Virginia. He became a senator from that state. From the date of that speech until 1892, when Senator Elkins marshaled the forces of President Harrison at Minneapolis, he was among the foremost champions of Mr. Blaine's presidential candidacies. General Harrison had delayed naming his premier. Mr. Blaine was the leading name mentioned for the place. In December Mr. Elkins wrote to the president-elect, saying that nine-tenths of the Republicans throughout the country would be greatly disappointed if the giving out of Mr. Blaine's name as secretary of state were delayed much longer. This letter was mailed from a postbox uptown in New York; and two days later, to the assembled reporters in Indianapolis, General Harrison announced that Mr. Blaine had accepted the post of secretary of state in his cabinet. The letter had its effect.—Saturday Evening Post.

Christian Religion.

Washington correspondent Chicago Record: Every department of this government—executive, legislative, judicial, military and civil—has time and again and almost daily recognized Christ and the Christian religion, by the rules of the house of representatives and the senate, by the observance of the Christian Sabbath in every branch of the government, by the appointment of Christian chaplains in the army and navy, by furnishing the holy Scriptures and books of common prayer to soldiers and sailors and by everybody. Congress has several times adjourned on Good Friday, Christmas day is recognized in its religious significance of every department, and the Supreme court has repeatedly held that this is a Christian nation and that Christianity is a part of the common law of the land.

WAR MAKES TROUBLE FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS.

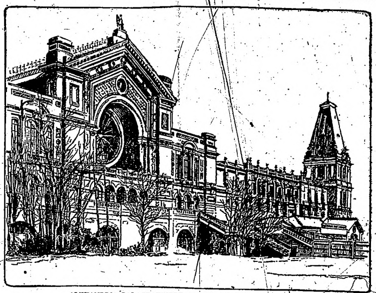
Hot Work Trying to Find Accommodations for American Delegates.

London Letter.

At present it looks as if two extremely powerful forces, Providence and the British government, were dead against the first world's convention of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, arranged to open here on July 10. This convention promises to be the greatest on record; 10,000 Americans, the largest delegation that ever crossed the sea in a body, are expected to be present, and with the Endeavorers in the United Kingdom and those from the continent and other foreign countries, the total number here will probably reach 60,000, representing 4,000,000 members.

Naturally, the thought of gathering together such a host in London made the Christian Endeavor leaders in as they can make by the required time.

All this ought to have been enough trouble. But there was more yet in store for the Christian Endeavorers. Every year there is in England a great shooting match at Bisley, the winner of which receives a prize, supposedly given by Her Majesty, and becomes known thereafter as the Queen's prizeman for that year. This, of course, necessitates an encampment at Bisley, and the date set for this encampment was the week upon which the Christian Endeavor people had pitched for their convention. Of course that meant still more trouble, for about half the little tentmakers that the Endeavorers approached were busy making ready for Bisley. In consequence of which the C. E. managers don't yet know where their tents are coming from, or if they really are coming at all. But they do know that not one of their guests will be left out in the cold.



ALEXANDRIA PALACE, WHERE THE ENDEAVORS WILL MEET.

England uncommonly proud, and they went to work light-heartedly, but so far, despite the religious nature of their task, particularly annoying difficulties have cropped up on every hand, and the last of them, the biggest, is not solved yet.

The convention is to be held in the Alexandra Palace, a great Madison-Square Garden sort of a place, just out of London proper, and here it is intended to lodge and board 5,000 of the Endeavorites. There was no other way to do, for hotels, boarding houses and the private homes of Endeavorers had been canvassed and every bed in them engaged for the eventful week, and still 5,000 expected guests would have nowhere to lay their heads, to say nothing of filling their stomachs. But the Alexandra Palace has a great banqueting hall, and this large room will be divided off into dormitories, enough of them to hold 1,200 young women.

That left 3,800 young men to be sheltered, and for this army the managers planned to erect a mighty encampment under canvas, like any other amy's. They decided to put five men in each tent—soldiers squeeze eleven in, but as the Rev. Knight Chaplin, secretary of the society's British council, remarked to me, "you can't pack Christians away like soldiers"—and they reckoned upon about 800 tents. Feeding the "campers" would be easy enough, for the Alexandra Palace has a huge kitchen in its basement, and 2,500 people can sit down in its dining-room and be served at once.

So Mr. Chaplin went to the largest tent manufacturer in England and said he'd like 1,000 tents, please, as soon as they could be got ready. The manager of the company listened to this request, which would have been a mere flea bite at any ordinary time, and told the clergyman that he couldn't have them—not from his company, at any rate—and added that he didn't believe any other company could supply the Christian Endeavorers with any tents at all, let alone 1,000. He explained to Mr. Chaplin that one "Oom Paul" was to blame for this extraordinary state of things.

As everybody knows, when Mr. Kruger thought he was about ready to go to war with England, England wasn't ready at all. She needed a lot of things that she hadn't on hand, and one of the things was unlimited tents to house the braves of Buller, Methuen, White, et al. The first thing she—or rather the war office—did was to ransack every armory, barracks, etc., in the United Kingdom and "commandeer" every solitary tent that was lying around loose; the second thing was to place orders for tents galore with nearly every tent man in the country, and the third to tell these tent men that after they got through making the first batch to turn in and make another to replenish the stock of the various armories, barracks and storehouses that had been despoiled. Naturally, the tentmakers set to work tooth and nail. The big factory that Mr. Chaplin visited was working overtime, and so great was the pressure that the business offices of the company had been deserted by the regular clerks and "occupied" by the stitchers and binders.

So, as if the reverend gentleman of the Christian Endeavor Society hadn't already had trouble enough in reserving 25,000 beds in the city of London, they had upon their shoulders the additional job of scraping up 1,000 tents, literally from nowhere. They are doing it by the burdensome means of locating little tentmakers, too small to be pounced upon by the government, and ordering from them as many tents

From letters from America it is beginning to look as if by no means the whole American contingent could get across to occupy the tents that as yet are not. In the blame for this the British government again figures largely, but has a partner in the shape of the Paris exhibition. Ordinarily every American delegation could do what one from Boston has done—that is, charter a ship and come across rejoicing and in Christian unity, but the British government has gobbled about half the passenger steamers to ship a lot of prosaic soldiers down to Africa and bring back again some that the Boers have disabled. Then, most of the American Endeavorites are not rich. Some of them, in fact, have been saving up for a year to come across the Atlantic to be present at this convention. But now along comes the exhibition, thousands of people who are well-to-do are fighting to book their passage aboard such steamers as the English government has been good enough to leave on the northern ocean, rates have mounted up to the skies, and in many cases that sum that the American Endeavorite has been able to scrape together wouldn't begin to take him across, to say nothing of getting back. At least that is the story told by the letters which the British committeemen have received from the would-be voyagers themselves.

Those committeemen say, however, that the minimum number of Americans who will come cannot fail to reach 4,000 anyway. Preparations are being made to give them a famous greeting, too. In fact, the British committee has gone so far as to request that the lord mayor himself give a reception to the American contingent at the Mansion House. Furthermore, it is expected that the bishop of London will make an address of welcome at the Albert hall the day before the convention.

MANY SEE THE FISHES.

Large Attendance at the New York Piscatorial Show.

When Colonel James Jones was asked for information about the new arrivals at the Aquarium he called attention to the annual report he had just made to President Clausen of the Park department, and some of the details are interesting. The total attendance during the year reached the astonishing figure of 1,841,330, giving an average of more than 5,000 for every day of the year. During the previous year the attendance was 1,670,085, and almost everybody thought high water mark had been reached, and that the public, tiring of the novelty, would gradually leave off coming. The greatest attendance on any single day during the year just passed, was that of September 29, when 37,248 persons thronged the building. "The only way I can explain the increase," said the Colonel, "is that the show is better than it ever was before. Our fishes are all in the best of good health, and, recognizing our good work, the fish commissioners of various states have sent us magnificent specimens. "Why," said the Colonel, waxing eloquent, "no aquarium in the world can approach us in an exhibition of the fishes of the deep sea and its fresh water tributaries. And I am not alone in this opinion, either."—New York Herald.

Ancient Weapons Unearthed.

In excavating the old Roman camp of Carnuntum, near Haimburg, on the Danube, between Vienna and Pressburg, the explorers have come upon an armory and provision house containing 1,037 weapons and pieces of armor and stores of barley, peas, etc. A great many inscriptions were found as well, and the means by which the camp was supplied with water.

The Professor and the Hat.

A college professor went into a crowded restaurant in New York city for luncheon one hot day last summer. The negro in charge of the big corridor took the professor's hat and gave no check for it in return. An hour later, when the professor came out of the dining-room, the negro glanced at him and handed him his hat. The negro's ability to remember to whom each article of clothing belonged struck the professor as being something very wonderful. "How did you know this was my hat?" he asked. "I didn't know it, sah," was the reply. "Then why did you give it to me?" the professor persisted. "Because you gave it to me, sah."

PICTURE BUYERS WARNED.

Noted Counterfeiters of Paintings Are Hard at Work in Europe.

In anticipation of the rush of half-informed picture buyers at the Paris exposition the counterfeiters of paintings by well-known artists are hard at work. Mr. Thurber of this city has been notified by a correspondent in Amsterdam that that city and also Brussels is full of spurious old masters, and the case is instanced of a picture that was sold a year ago which has turned up again bearing the name of a more famous painter than its author and priced accordingly. From another source it is reported that two of the most famous falsifiers of pictures in Europe are rushed with orders for their specialties. The London picture factories are turning out old English paintings by the dozen. Everything that will bring a good price is being counterfeited. They are prinicpally sent to Paris, where shady dealers are quick to pick them up. The dealers who do not scruple to forward this dishonest traffic do not as a rule sell the pictures themselves, but they are peddled about by irresponsible but glib and welldressed persons, who always tell the same story. The picture belongs to some private owner who is pressed for money, but who desires to avoid publicity. For this reason his name cannot be given. He could sell to a dealer, but the dealer would want to make too much profit. He would want to pay $5,000 and charge $15,000. The owner prefers to sell to a collector of taste and judgment for $10,000. He will even, being in straits for cash, take $8,000. Finally, after much parley, the picture is sold for $6,000, and the new owner congratulates himself on having obtained a masterpiece by a famous painter for one-third its value. This is a sample case, though the figures are usually smaller. It is easy to give a painting the look of age. It is only to mix dirt with the paints and with the varnish. Bad varnish died quickly produces deep cracks, and these can be made to appear old cracks by putting another coat of varnish over them. There is a sure way of avoiding being caught by such tricks; it is to buy of a responsible dealer and pay the actual value of the work.—Chicago News.

HIS OPINION OF WAGNER.

Efforts of the Salesman to Amuse the Big Customer in Town.

The newspaper man had brought the salesman from the wholesale dry goods house up to the club. After he had been introduced to three or four of the members and they all had something to take off the chill, the salesman got kind of limbered up. "It's customary among the wholesale merchants of Chicago," he began, "to treat the people who come in from the country to buy goods pretty nicely—kind of make them feel good, you know, when they are in the city—show them the sights—take them around a little. Of course, this is especially the case if they are generous buyers and good pay. Well, I had one of these 'good angels' come into the store one day and call for me. He was one of my old customers and he was going to buy a great big bill. You can imagine that I wanted to treat him all right. It happened at the time the Thomas concerts were running at full blast on the lake front, and on this particular occasion a Wagner night was announced. This led me to believe that it would be an exceptional treat for my guest to listen to the masterpieces of the great composer. So down there we went, took seats at a convivial table, quietly sipped our glasses and watched the blue smoke gracefully curl above us while the orchestra poured forth the delightful strains of that classical, entrancing harmony. The concert ended. The music had steeped my very soul and I was full of enthusiasm. 'And, now, Mr. Smith,' I asked, 'what do you think of Wagner?' 'Well, I'll tell you what I think, if you want to know,' said Smith; 'I think Wagner was a gol-blasted fool that he didn't stick to the sleeping car business.'"—Inland Printer.

Want Their Nationality.

Sir John Henry de Villiers, chief justice of the Cape of Good Hope, has been in London several weeks quietly watching the tendencies of imperial politics. He says that all Dutch South Africa would bitterly resent the annexation of the republics. He adds: "This war was forced on President Kruger. His ultimatum was somewhat intemperate in tone—he made a mistake when he sent it—but the steady tide of British aggression threatened to overbear him, and his final diplomatic effort was born of exasperation. What Mr. Chamberlain asked him to give up was the equivalent of Dutch independence. The story that Presidents Kruger and Steyn aspired to drive the British into the sea is a fable. All the Dutch leaders ever wanted was to preserve the Dutch nationality. That is all they want to-day. But they cannot have it. They have fought a good fight, they have deserved to continue as a people, but their independence will be ground to powder under the iron heel of war. When the British field marshal, a brilliant general and a brave and good man, shall have flung his flag above the seat of government at Pretoria, as he already has done at Bloemfontein, and shall have brought the federal patriots under the rule of Great Britain, we shall witness the conclusion of a dark chapter in the history of human greed."—E. P. Bell in Chicago Record.

Mixed Emotions.

To illustrate the feeling of Ireland toward the predominant partner, an actor who has been touring tells the story of an old waiter in a Dublin hotel. "When are you going to get home rule in Ireland, John?" was the question. "See ye here, sor," said the old man, "the only way we'll get home rule for ould Ireland will be if France—an' Russia—an' Germany—an' Austria—an' Maybe Italy—if they would all join together to give those blackgairds of English a rare good hiding. That's the only way we'll get home rule, anyway." Then, as he looked cautiously around, a twinkle of cunning and a smile of courtesy were added to the expression. "And the whole lot of 'em shoved together couldn't do it," he said. "Oh—it's the grand navy we've got!"—London Chronicle.

Colors Still Flying.

"You were in a highly-approving humor in your sleep last night, my dear," remarked Mrs. Yourdeal to Mr. Yourdeal at the breakfast table the other morning. "You were constantly saying 'That's good.'"

"That's so," said Yourdeal, looking up from his paper. "Oh, I remember now—I was dreaming all night of how good that tapioca pudding was that you made for dinner yesterday." and thus the natural-born liar came out again with colors flying.

* * T. M. Roberts' Supply House, Minneapolis, Minn., say: "We have made a great scoop on binding twine and one that makes the twine trust, our competitors and country dealers very tired. We are selling twine ½ of a cent less than the Minnesota States Prison sold theirs. Of course, no time must be lost in ordering twine to obtain these prices. It will not last long. Order at once before you forget it. Do not be afraid of this twine, it is new, bright and good. We are able to make this very low price because we found a manufacturer who wanted money badly. Of course we could sell it at the market price and make more money, but that is not the way we do business. When we get a good thing we pass it along to our customers."

Wonderful Fish.

Assuming that we are walking on the ocean bottom at the depth of over a mile, we move cautiously along in water icy cold and suddenly are confronted with a blaze of light and find ourselves in a field of light givers. Imagine a cornfield with stalks from two to four feet in height, the tips gleaming with light and waving gently to and fro. Such an appearance the fields of umbellularia present.

Above this forest of living lights strange and weird fish are passing which we recognize as forms that have been dredged from great depths by the Albatross, the Challenger and others. One, the chiasmodon, dashes by emitting light from its own body, and, wonder of wonders! we see it seize a fish five times its own bulk and draw itself over it like a glove. Its jaws by a special arrangement separate, and the mouth is a cavern of india rubber-like possibilities. A similar fish, malacosteus, is of a rich black velvet hue, and as it poises we see upon its head two large lights. One emits a golden light, the other throws out fitful green rays which have some hidden meaning in the economy of nature. Some of the fish seem to be literal mouths. Such is the eurypharnyx, or pelican fish. The mouth is enormous; the bones of the jaw being attached to the skull by movable joints, so that it has enormous powers of distension.—Professor Charles F. Holder.

The "Needle's Eye."

A lady writes to me and asks what is really meant by the "needle's eye" in the parable of the rich man. I remember reading somewhere that it was the smallest gate that gave entrance to the walled city of Jerusalem and that a loaded camel had to be stripped of its burden and bend its knees to squeeze through. And so a rich man had to give up his riches and come to his knees before he could enter heaven. It was just one of the thousand proverbs that adorned the moral teachings of the Jews and the eastern nations. The writings of Job and Solomon and Confucius and Mohammed abound in them.

In the Koran is found this proverb, "The impious man will find the gates of heaven shut, and he can no more enter than a camel can pass through a needle's eye." There is another in the Koran which says, "You will never see a palm tree of gold nor an elephant pass through a needle's eye." These proverbs simply meant that it was impossible. Strange to say, the world has long since quit making proverbs.

All proverbs have come down to us, even such as "A rolling stone gathers no moss." "Poor Richard" left us a few, such as "A penny saved is twopence gained."—Bill Arp in Atlanta Constitution.

Like the Rest of Us.

"George, dear," she said a night or two before the wedding, "do you think it possible that our love and our married life can become the commonplace, coldly practical love and life of the married people we see around us? Oh, George, my heart would break if I thought so!"

"But it will not be so," said George passionately. "We love each other too tenderly, too fondly for that. Our love is not of the ordinary kind, my darling, and our lives will not be so. Ah, no, no, my angel; that can never be!"

And the other day she said: "I say, George, how would you like pork for dinner with apple sauce? You would? All right, then, and don't you forget that feeding bottle for the baby or I'll send you back after it, and mind that you don't keep dinner waiting."

And he, with a falling off of the passion of ten years ago, replied: "All right, Lou, and I wish you'd sew a button on the back part of those striped trousers of mine. You'll find them hanging over a chair in our room. Don't have the pork as dry as last time, and you watch the baby's cold. That watering of the eyes looks like measles to me. Goodby."—Pearson's Magazine.

A Loud Whistle.

A clergyman in Scotland desired his hearers never to call one another "liars," but when any one said "the thing that was not" they ought to whistle.

One Sunday he preached a sermon on the parable of the loaves and fishes, and being at a loss to explain it said the loaves were not like those nowadays—they were as big as some of the hills of Scotland.

He had scarcely pronounced these words when he heard a loud whistle.

"Wha's that ca's me a liar?"

"It is I, Willy Macdonald, the baker."

"Well, Willy, what objection ha' ye to what I ha' told you?"

"None, sir, only I want to know what sort of ovens they had to bake those loaves in?"

Tools and Progress.

Despite all the attacks upon machinery, an age without tools is an age of drudgery and degradation. If once men toiled 16 hours a day, with a single stroke Watt's engine cut off two hours in the morning for rest and two hours at night for reading. The modern home, with a thousand and one comforts, is the gift of tools. We now compel steel fingers, steel knives, steel wheels and steel wires to do our work. Take away our tools and civilization would go back 100 years.—Newell Dwight Hillis in Woman's Home Companion.

Water In Porto Rico.

The water supply of Porto Rico, because of its abundance and freshness from the mountain streams, ought to be pure and good for use. But it is far otherwise. A thick bed of rank vegetation is ever decaying beneath the new growth rising above it, and the water filtering through the rotten mass becomes not only steeped with the lye of decaying roots, leaves and grasses, but is full of insects and worms.

HIS CASE OF FRIGHT.

ONE MAN'S STORY OF HOW HE WAS COMPLETELY UNNERVED.

It Was a Simple Enough Incident, Yet He Declares That the Simple Thought of It Has Often Since Brought the Sweat to His Face.

"Very few grown up people know what fright really means, except perhaps in dreams," said the quietest man in the group that had been spinning yarns in the hotel corridor. "When I speak of fright," he continued, "I don't mean alarm in any of its ordinary senses—I mean that sort of brute panic that robs a man of speech, thought and volition; that turns him sick and cold; that leaves such a deep and indelible scar on his whole nervous organism that the very memory of it, years afterward, will make him quail and shudder. It is impossible, in my opinion, for mere danger to produce that feeling, even in the rankest cowards, for you must bear in mind it is not fear that I am endeavoring to describe, but something entirely different, something against which personal courage furnishes no immunity whatever. When a man is afraid, his instinct is to run away, to escape; when he is frightened, he has no such impulse—he simply suffers. I never had but one experience of that kind in my life, and the circumstances of the case were very commonplace. I'll tell you about it in as few words as possible.

"In 1839 I was holding a job as proofreader in a big printing establishment in Chicago. The building then occupied by the concern was a rambling old barracks of a place, and the little inclosure, where I worked was in the extreme rear of the upper floor, which was used as a composing room. Next to my cubby hole was another and considerably larger inclosure, where a religious weekly was set up on special contract. That second room had a sinister reputation, for the sufficiently startling reason that it had been the scene of two suicides. A former collector for the firm, who was short in his accounts, had gone there to blow his brains out, and later on a poor old printer, broken down and despondent, had cut his throat in front of the cracked looking glass which hung over the sink. All that happened long before my time, but the memory of it abided, and it seemed to invest the place with a peculiar air of gloom.

"I have gone into these details to give you an idea of the lay of the premises, and now I'll get to the point. One night, in the fall of the year, I had an unusual lot of proofs to read and decided to go back, after a late supper, and finish them up before going to bed. When I reached the building on my return from the restaurant, everybody had gone, and the place was as black and silent as a cave, but I let myself in at a side door and groped my way up stairs, fumbling in my pockets for a match. To my annoyance I didn't have a single one, but I remembered there was a boxful on a table in the office of the religious weekly, and, knowing the composing room pretty thoroughly, I started without hesitation for my den.

"The sky was stormy and overcast that night, and inside the building it was perfectly dark, so dark that I literally couldn't see my hand before my face. Nevertheless I reached the proofroom without any mishap and had just opened the door of the adjoining inclosure to get the matches when the thought of the two suicides flashed through my brain and sent an icy shiver down my spine. For a moment I had an impulse to back out and beat a retreat, and, while I put that aside, I won't deny that I was considerably unnerved. The loneliness of the place, the pitch darkness, the whispering noises one can always hear in a big empty building at night and the memory of that ghastly story of self murder, all made my heart beat like a drum, and it required every particle of resolution I possessed to enable me to take a step forward.

"I moved slowly and cautiously, with my right arm extended to ward off obstacles, and had advanced perhaps a dozen paces when my clutched hand was laid flatly upon a human face. I could feel the nose and eye sockets against my fingers, and a stubble of beard pricked my palm. Now, gentlemen, this may seem like nothing as I tell it here, with the incandescents ablaze and people passing to and fro, but in that black, deserted rookery it was the incarnation of horror. I realized then and there, for the first time in my life, the real meaning of the word fright. If I had actually seen a ghost, it would have shaken me less, but that face against my hand in the dark—ah, I will never forget it, never, as long as I live!

"I recoiled, and as I did so my fingers encountered the matchbox. By pure instinct I snatched out a dozen matches and struck them on the table. A gas jet was half a foot away, and in an instant I had it lit. Then I understood the situation, and you will smile, no doubt, when I explain. A printer, whom I knew very well and who was the sot of the office, was standing beside one of the cases in a drunken doze. He had been on a spree, and when the office was closed he was lying asleep, unnoticed, behind a pile of paper. My steps on the stairs had aroused him, and he staggered to his feet and stood there, silent and stupid, until I blundered against him in the dark.

"That's the story, and, as I said before, it seems like nothing to tell, yet the bare thought of it has brought the sweat to my forehead."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

TIME AND SPACE are practically annihilated by the ocean cables and land telegraph systems which now belt the circumference of Old Earth in so many different directions. "Foreign parts" are no longer foreign in the old meaning of the term. Europe, Africa, Asia, are "next door" to us. What happens there to-day we know to-morrow—if we read THE CHICAGO RECORD, whose Special Cable Correspondents are located in every important city in the world outside of the United States. No other American newspaper ever attempted so extensive a service; and it is supplemented by the regular foreign news service of The Associated Press. For accurate intelligence of the stirring events which are shaking the nations—of wars and rumors of wars—of the threatening dissolution of old governments and the establishment of new—of the onward sweep of the race in all parts of the world—the one medium of the most satisfactory information is the enterprising, "up-to-date" American newspaper, THE CHICAGO RECORD.

Toney Mousseau, father of the late Barney Mousseau, arrived last evening from the Red Lake country. None of the three messages sent reached him, but by accident he overheard the sad news from a party that left Thief River Falls Thursday and reached him Sunday. He immediately started for home, being compelled to walk over half the distance as vehicles are of an unknown quantity in that country at this time of the year.

Drowned.

Thursday morning shortly after the sawmill started the alarm was given that Barney Mousseau was drowned. Barney was employed by the Red Lake Falls Lumber Company, watching their logs. Just how it happened that he fell into the river is not known but the supposition is that he stuck the pike pole into a log to either pull it toward him or turn it over in order to ascertain the log mark and that while so doing the fastening slipped and he fell backwards off of the boom stick on which he was standing into the water. Other workmen on the boom heard a call for help and in looking in that direction saw him in the water close to the boom stick but on coming near to where he was last seen his hat only could be seen floating on top of the water. Search was made with a grapling iron and at 9:15, just two hours from the time he fell into the water, the body was recovered, no attempt was made to resuscitate. Coroner Blair was notified and upon arrival decided that an inquest was unnecessary. The body was removed to the Holmes undertaking rooms where it was kept until Monday when the remains were taken to Red Lake Falls for interment. The family have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad beravement.

Senator Pettigrew stirred up the republicans by delving into political history. He charged, on the authority of Mr. Cramp himself, that Mr. Cramp contributed $400,000 to the republican campaign fund of 1892, with the express undstanding that he was to be repaid with profitable contracts to build ships. When Senator Carter, who was chairman of the Republican National committee which handled the campaign funds of that year, denied that any such agreement had been made with Mr. Cramp—mind you, not that Mr. Cramp had contributed the money—Mr. Pettigrew stated that he had a conversation with Senator Carter, repeating to him what Mr. Cramp had said, and that Carter had replied laughingly, "I guess, we did hit the old man pretty hard."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

At "Le Providence."

In the neatest, whitest ward of the "Sisters" Hospital, in the quaint little French town of D——, our story reopens.

Ten weeks have passed since the wires thrilled to America the terrible news of the Ocean Queen's total wreck, and the excitement-loving public are already weary of the oft-repeated story, and athirst for a new one.

But in the quiet precincts of simple little D—— it still remains a topic of undying interest, and the heroic men who braved all the terrors of that dreadful night, to rescue the few survivors on the doomed vessel are at the pinnacle of civic popularity.

Silver medals have been voted them already by the mayor and council, and a detailed account of their heroism deposited with the archives of the town, for the edification and improvement of future generations, while the daily papers containing descriptions of the event are in demand by young and old.

But the waves of interest break silently against the whitewashed walls of the little hospital, where the good Sisters, so quietly and skillfully, tend their heaven-sent charges.

No daily papers or daily gossip ever penetrate these sunny, peaceful wards, where life seems no longer a struggle, death no longer a doom.

"Le Providence" was the appropriate name of this quiet haven, that had proved a Providence, indeed, to many a storm-tossed wanderer who had sought refuge within its sheltering walls; and in Le Providence we resume our story.

One of these waifs was tossing restlessly upon a fever couch, on this bright autumn evening. The little bay, with its fleet of white-sailed fishing boats, stretched before the hospital windows like a sheet of molten gold. Over the western waters the sun was setting in clouds of rose and purple, and the silver chimes of the Angelus were floating from a hundred different spires, as Herbert Clive opened his eyes, now gleaming, fever-bright, in their cavernous sockets, and felt himself drifting, as it were, from a mighty distance back to unfamiliar earth.

The low, white walls of the room in which he lay, the bright-colored religious pictures hanging around the quaint, diamond-shaped windows, the polished floor and the tiled hearth—all seemed to him bits of some strange painting suddenly brought before his eyes, and of which he formed no part.

The slight, black-robed figure seated by the window, whose features were nearly concealed by the closely-frilled cap and flowing veil, was but a portion of the shadowy, unfamiliar scene, that seemed as yet to be a remnant of his fever-dream.

"Sybil!" he murmured, in a low, weak voice; "where is Sybil?" Then, with a glance of bewilderment he added: "Where am I?"

"In the hospital of Le Providence," answered the nun, as, with a deft movement, she let the veil fall closer around her face. "Monsieur has been very ill."

"Sybil!" repeated Herbert, in the same bewildered tone, as if he were dimly grasping at some broken clue; "where is Sybil?"

"Monsieur has forgotten"—the answer came very softly and sadly from beneath the drooping veil—"he is here alone."

"Alone?" repeated Herbert, slowly—"not alone? She was with me in the wild, dark waters! I held her in my arms as the angry waves dashed over us—I clasped her to my heart, and felt that even death was sweet! And she has gone—gone? Left me again—left me to live—"

The hopeless pathos of his voice must have touched some chord in his listener's heart, for she trembled visibly, and for a moment was silent.

When, at length she spoke, it was in a quiet, measured voice.

"Monsieur is young to weary of life. They will tell him here it is always a good gift—one to be used well and wisely, and never—no, never—cast away."

He turned wearily on his pillow; the feeble thread, that was guiding him back to life was broken.

Sybil, Sybil! What echo had he heard of her voice that made him believe she was near?

Weak and weary as a broken-hearted child, Herbert turned his face from the sunlight and wept.

The nun gazed at him for a moment, while her slight form trembled like an aspen in the wind; then, drawing her veil close around her, she hurried from the room.

A tall, thin, elderly woman took her place at Herbert's bedside and held a draught to his lips—a cool, pleasant draught, that seemed to steal thought from his brain—that steeped all his senses in a delicious languor of repose.

He slept again, and when he awoke new life and vigor was infused into his frame. He looked about him, and began to realize the present, to remember the past.

A screen was placed beside his bed to screen it from the moonlight that was flooding the little chamber. Two shadows were cast upon the screen—a tall woman, seated by the window, a slighter, smaller figure kneeling at her feet.

Low and guarded as were their voices their words drifted to Herbert's ears. The taller woman seemed speaking gravely:

"It is very hard, my child—very hard; but it must be. I have listened to you, yielded to you, unwisely and imprudently, perhaps, because I felt—I thought life was past. But now—now—"

"I must go," concluded the other, in a tone that made her listener's heart-chords quiver. "Ah, Sister, I know what you would say! It is not for one like me to hide her torn, despairing heart beneath your holy garb. I must go forth and wander on."

"My child, my child! do not give way to such despair," chided the older woman. "It is wrong; it is sinful! You, upon whom Providence has showered such rich and wondrous blessings!"

"I know, I know!" was the sad response. "Ah, Sister, you have taught me lessons during my sojourn in these holy walls that I can never forget. You have taugh me to look upward for the brightness that earth denies me. But, alas! you know not the weakness of a woman's heart when—when it loves! You know not the madness, the folly— Will you believe it?"—she broke off, passionately—"I have been very happy here, seeing him senseless, fevered, for aught I knew, dying—happy in feeling I was near him, at his side—happy in hearing his fevered raving, bathing his burning brow, holding the cooling water to his parched lips—happy in feeling that he would die in my arms. Sister, Sister! what must be the misery of a love that can find itself blessed in pain, in sorrow, in suffering—nay, even in death itself?"

"Poor child!" said the nun, in a tone of tender pity. "Earthly love always has its dregs of bitterness and pain. Be satisfied, be patient, and trust in the goodness of Providence. All will yet be well."

"Alas, you know not the stern fate that rules my life," answered the other, sobbing. "You know not how blind, how pitiless, how relentless, is the will of man. You speak to me of God's will; but I, alas, am bound by the will of a proud, weak, passionate, resentful man, and who, if he knew, if he dreamed of my mission here, would scorn all restraint."

"That mission is now over, my child," said the nun, gravely. "All danger is past. God has heard your first wild prayer to Him, and has spared the life dearer than your own. Leave the future in His wise keeping, and go the way that duty points in peace."

"I must, I must!" was the despairing reply. "There is no choice left me. But—but there can be no harm in my looking on his face once more ere"—the low voice faltered—"ere I bid him adieu forever."

"Your promise, my child—remember your solemn promise!" said the nun, reproachfully.

"I have not forgotten it," the other answered.

"I do not ask to speak to him. Alas, it would be only adding a new pang to despair. Let me but look upon his sleeping face and bear away with me its expression of peaceful repose."

Herbert lay still, almost breathless, fearing to move or breathe, lest he should dissolve the beautiful dream; for it was Sybil who spoke—Sybil, whose accents trembled in his ear, in tones of despairing love—Sybil, who pleaded for one more glance at his sleeping face.

He closed his eyes and lay like a breathing statue, as she approached his bedside. If he spoke to her, if he looked at her, he felt she would again melt from his presence, this strange, mysterious spirit-love.

She glided to his bedside; he felt her head bend above him, lift his wasted hand and as a great scalding tear fell upon his brow a whisper, low and tremulous as the sigh of the summer zephyr, reached his ear:

"My love, my faithful love, farewell—farewell, forever—"

The last word was unspoken, for, as if that teardrop had started him into life, Herbert unclosed his eyes, clasped the little hand that still rested timidly on his with a fervent pressure, and he and his nurse of the previous evening were face to face.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Seeking a Clue.

"Sybil, Sybil!" The name fluttered from the sick man's lips. "Is it Sybil? Oh, mock me no longer! My beloved, speak to me—tell me who and what and whence you are?"

The little hand trembled in his, the veiled head drooped, but there was no reply.

"Monsieur forgets," said the grave voice of Sister from the other side, "he is in a house where no love enters save that of heaven. Leave us, my sister; I will watch to-night. You are weary and in need of rest."

"Speak to me once—only once before you go!" pleaded Herbert, striving to raise himself on his pillows. "Unravel this mystery that is torturing me far more than bodily pain. Speak to me once more with Sybil's voice! Tell me if you belong to the living or to the dead!"

"To the dead!" The answer came in a hoarse whisper from her pallid lips, as the black-robed form flitted from the room. "Henceforth and forever to the dead!"

"All here belong to the dead!" echoed Sister Winifred's measured, passionless voice. "Life, with all its passion, pride and pain, is over for all of us. We are not of the living, but of the dead!"

Herbert made no answer, but the tide of life from that moment turned. Sybil's whisper, Sybil's tear, seemed to brighten the dark future with the roseate hues of hope—for the dead neither speak nor weep.

In three weeks from that day he was able to leave Le Providence.

As he grew stronger, memory became clearer, thoughts less troubled and confused. He began to link fact to fact, incident to incident—nay, what had seemed dream to dream.

To one of his young and vigorous constitution health came with a glad rebound, and in the first days of his convalescence hope was strong in his heart. Sybil lived—separated from him by the same dark, mysterious power that had shaped her previous life. Sybil lived, and life was hope.

She was not in Le Providence—that he knew. Indeed, as he recalled the conversation he had overheard, he remembered that she had spoken of immediate departure. His cautious inquiries elicited no response. Sister Winifred was grave, almost to severity, when he strove to question her. She knew no one by the name of Sybil Wraye. About fifty passengers had been saved from the wreck of the Ocean Queen, but no such person was among them, so far as she had heard. A cousin of her own, Madam Gillette, had spent a few days at the hospital before starting for Switzerland, and she had talked much of the shipwreck; but Sister Winifred was always too busy to hear worldly talk.

So, with many thanks to the good sisters for their kindness, Herbert was constrained to take his leave of Le Providence without learning more.

It would not be so difficult, he fancied, to get a clue outside the hospital walls.

He went to the hotel—a quaint, substantial old place, where in the summer time invalids of modest income resorted to enjoy the benefit of the fresh sea breeze.

The usual lady bookkeeper was in the cheerful little office, and, judging by her bright eyes and charming toilet, would not prove so difficult a personage as Sister Winifred.

Monsieur was "Americain." Ah—Mademoiselle Belville's eyes brightened with interest—saved from the wreck of the Ocean Queen? Ah—eyes softening into sympathy—she had heard! They had many guests at Le Brisemer who had also been on that unfortunate vessel.

Ladies? Yes, yes! many ladies. Two boats had come in safe. But, eh, mon Dieu! what were two boatfuls when so many were lost? There were several madames, and the engaging housekeeper showed her register. Ah, but they were overcome! They would never be quite themselves again, as monsieur would, no doubt, understand. The shock and terror were so grand, so terrible!"

"Mees Wraye?" Ah, no! there was no such name on the books; and mademoiselle scanned them again, obligingly. No such name—Herbert's eyes following her eagerly—no such name. Ah, she hoped that monsieur had lost no friend on board the Ocean Queen. She had understood from some of the passengers, that the young gentleman who had been taken to the hospital was a stranger, save by sight, to them all.

Herbert thanked the gracious young lady, and with a heart that had lost something of its determined hopefulness, went down to the beach.

The long boats of the fishermen were drawn up in the sunshine; the tide was out, and on the damp stretch of sand the men were busy mending their nets and lines.

They were stolid, heavy-looking peasants, and scarcely the type of men that could be easily roused to deeds of daring; and yet they had proved themselves heroes in many a tempestuous night.

Herbert approached one of them, and, making himself known as one of the survivors of the Ocean Queen, found he was an object of interest at once.

"Ah, yes, yes," said the old fisherman, "it was the worst wreck the coast has had for years and years, since Pierre Bardin was a boy; and Pierre Bardin is no infant now. He is sixty-four, if he is a day, though monsieur would not think so, if he could see him, with a rope around his waist, battling with the waves. He saved a dozen lives. Ah, 'twould be strange, indeed, if monsieur had not heard of Pierre Bardin. It was he who saved the pale lady with the golden hair, whose father was nearly mad with grief."

"A pale lady with golden hair, lashed to a spar—"

"Yes, yes, monsieur! But the spar would never have saved her but for Pierre Bardin. It was he who caught her, in the black darkness, from the cruel waves, that would have case her on the rocks above. Eh, mon Dieu! but those were cruel rocks! It was there monsieur was found, with his head so cut and bleeding that, but for the good Sisters of Le Providence, he would never have lived to tell of the terrors of that awful night."

Ah, yes! Sister Winifred had told Herbert of the merciful manner in which a kind Providence had saved his life. She had told him of those frightful black rocks, that reared themselves, like cruel monsters, on the upper shore, waiting until the billows cast them their prey. It was there he had been found, caught in a cleft between the rocks, his helpless hand closing to his heart an imaginary form.

But Herbert was not thinking of his own wonderful delivery now.

"The pale lady with the golden hair, lashed to a spar—" the lady whom Pierre Bardin had saved—where was she?

The sturdy old fisherman came shuffling up the beach, and Herbert resolved to question him.

"Oui, oui!"—the weather-beaten hero of fifty tempests scratched his grizzled head in response to the young monsieur's inquiries, and looked as stupid as though an idea had never before entered his brain—"oui, oui; there was a lady he saved from the wreck; but he did not know whither she had gone. He had not stopped to ask her name; there were so many names, and he could not remember. She had lain in his cabin on the beach for a while, until—until her father found her, and he had given Pierre a purse of gold that would make him sleep warm the coming winter nights. And they had gone away."

It was all that old Pierre knew. The dull current of his thoughts had never passed beyond a certain tide-mark. He would risk his life twenty times in saving the helpless whom he saw buffeting with the billows, but he did so led by the same instinct that makes the brave Newfoundland plunge into the sea after the missing child. Once safe on shore, Pierre's interests in his neighbors ceased.

Baffled at every turn, Herbert took his way moodily back to town. Old thoughts and fancies he had lost sight of in the roseate glow of returning hope began to reassert their sway.

Was he not, after all, only pursuing the shadow of a dream? Did it not seem as if he were, indeed, bound by some mystical spell? This girl, who had exercised so wondrous a power over his life—whom he had lost in the green heart of his native forest—what madness led him to believe he could find her here? The midnight song, the midnight vision, were born only of his own morbid fancy. If he would not go utterly mad he must give up this fruitless quest—the hope that was clouding his reason, upsetting his philosophy. He must give up the wild idea that Sybil lived. And yet—and yet, that tear, that whisper, that had been but portions of a fever-dream?

"The pale lady with the golden hair, lashed to a spar!"

The fisherman's words haunted him, despite himself. Surely, he could discover who that pale lady was and whither she had gone.

Absorbed in his own contending thoughts, Herbert was slowly walking along through the quietest and most aristocratic portion of the town, where the decayed gentry of other days still kept up a feeble appearance of importance, when he suddenly became conscious that he was followed.

A young girl, whose bright black eyes glittered roguishly beneath her high peasant cap, was coming down the street, shyly watching him, as if anxious to speak.

Herbert waited for her with an encouraging smile.

"It is—ah, yes! it must be Monsieur Clive," she said, looking up into his face. "Monsieur, you have given me a chase this morning. I have been waiting, and watching and following you ever since you left Le Providence."

"Watching for me?" repeated Herbert, in surprise.

"Yes," answered the girl, with a merry laugh. "Doubtless monsieur thinks I am very bold, or he is very charming; but, although Nanette is no angel, she is also no fool. I have something for monsieur. See!"—she held up a dainty envelope—"something that I wish to give him alone."

Herbert took the little missive eagerly, slipping a bright silver piece into the little messenger's hand.

"No, no," said Nanette. "I have been paid already; monsieur—better than paid in gold."

"Where did you get this?" interrupted Herbert, his eyes flashing as he turned upon the girl. "Are you mixed up in a plot to madden me? Child, child, where, from whom did you get this letter? Tell me, and I will triple that piece in your hands!"

"Monsieur asks too much," was the girl's laughing answer. "I have told him I was already paid."

"But you know—you saw the person who gave you this?" said Herbert, excitedly.

"Perhaps," she answered, with an arch smile. "But there are times when even wild Nanette is blind and dumb. Though"—Nanette sank her voice to a cautious whisper—"I would advise monsieur to use both eyes and ears—and use them well"

She nodded merrily as she tripped away, leaving Herbert gazing after her in speechless amazement.

Then, glancing at the paper he held in his hand, he read again the words that seemed to have come at this moment as if to lure him further on his hopeless search:

"Grieve no longer for me, true and faithful friend. I have witnessed your love and your despair, and every pang of your noble heart adds a new pain to mine. The life that now opens before me is one that I can share with none. Yet the heart that I believed had ceased to throb with earthly feelings, quivered anew at you presence. Our peace lies in being far apart. I go from you forever. It has been sweet to feel that, though invisible, I was near you; but that sweetness, like all that I have ever known, was not to last. Forget me! No, that I cannot say; but think of me as one whose bleak and barren future is brightened by one sunbeam of memory—the sunbeam that your love has cast upon her clouded path."

CHAPTER XXX.

Lurline.

With that note folded in his breast, Herbert Clive became a wanderer. All the attractions of the gay European cities could not induce the handsome and wealthy young American to linger long within their charmed precincts, or participate in their dazzling pleasures.

Like one bound by some mystic spell, he pursued his restless way, watching and waiting, day by day, for some further revelation from his beloved one—some token of her presence, some echo of her voice.

The energy with which he devoted himself to the one object of his life made him oblivious of all things else. His letters home were short and infrequent. His manner to the friends he met seemed cold and changed.

"What the deuce has come over you, anyhow, Clive?" asked a gay young college-mate, meeting him, one day, grave and abstracted, on the streets of Paris. "You haven't taken a serious turn, I hope, so early, though that ducking in the Ocean Queen was enough to sober any one for a while. I will begin to believe you were bewitched by some sea nymph in her native waters, and haven't recovered from the spell."

Herbert looked up with a start.

"Do you believe in such things, Dunn?" he asked, gravely.

"What, in woman's witchery? Of course I do!" was the laughing response. "Though I don't think one of your finny nymphs could ever captivate me hopelessly. Seriously, though, my boy, you'll get 'hypped' completely if you don't shake off this green and yellow melancholy. You're only five-and-twenty, and haven't brushed the sparkle from your life-cup yet, much less reached the dregs. Stir yourself up. Come with me to Madame la Marquise's ball; it will be the most dazzling affair of the season—in masque, too, which always adds to the charm. You needn't show your face unless you want to, though it's altogether too good-looking, in my opinion, to keep hid. Come, I'm just on the way to choose my costume. I want a chum. Let's go as Rival Princes, or Brother Knights, or—stay, no, something more solemn befits your present mood. Go as Ravenswood; the gloomy knight will suit you to a charm."

And, acceding to Edgar Dunn's gay fancy, without taking any interest in the matter, Herbert went that night to Madame la Marquise's ball.

It was a brilliant affair—such a combination of artistic conception and elaborate execution as only the gay capital can produce.

Madame la Marquise was one of the leading elegantes of Paris. She seldom undertook an extensive entertainment, but when she did, it was emphatically a success.

Even Herbert forgot for a moment his morbid fancies and hopeless wanderings, as the sober realities of the world seemed to melt away, and he passed into the enchanted dreamland into which Madame la Marquise had transformed her palace.

It was not all glare, and glitter, and crash of orchestra, as is the usual style of such entertainments. La Madame's ideas were far too perfect for such crude developments. She was in advance of her age.

The entrance hall was shadowed to a pleasant light, through which the coming guests moved noiselessly. Rows of crimson lamps, gleaming through tropic foliage, marked the polished staircase, where deft attendants waited at every turn; but the grand ball room, with its swinging suns of crystal, its wreaths of living blossoms, and cages of swinging birds, was but one feature of this bewildering scene.

Marble corridors led to quiet nooks, where the odorous breath of flowers seemed to hush the air—where unseen lights trembled through crystal domes, and fountains trickled musically into fern-wreathed basins.

The grand old oaken gallery that was the Madam's pride, was also thrown open, and her guests could wander at will amid the artistically-illuminated pictures, the rare mosaics, the chefs d'oeuvre of art, she had gathered from every clime.

And, as through hall, salon and corridor flitted the motley crowd of maskers, dressed in the quaint, gorgeous and picturesque costumes of every clime and age, Herbert felt as if he were a portion of some strange Oriental pageant; moving through the enchanted scenes of "Arabian Nights."

The dark velvet costume and sable plumes of Ravenswood well became his tall, graceful figure, and many a bright eye sparkled more brightly beneath a dainty mask at the dark knight's approach.

But by midnight the glamour of the scene was gone. Herbert grew weary of talking pretty nothings to unknown charmers, and wandered away from the gay ball room to find a more secluded place to rest and dream.

He was glancing over a portfolio of sketches in the oaken gallery, when a sound reached his ear that made him start and tremble as with a sudden shock.

MISERABLE

You're not feeling just right this spring, are you? Somehow, you haven't your old-time strength, cannot take hold of things with your usual push and energy. You just drag around, fairly well one day, not so well the next. You are wretched, disconsolate, discouraged; you are miserable.

That's Nerve Poverty

To be rich in nerve power you should take a good spring medicine, something that will give you pure and rich blood. A perfect Sarsaparilla will do this every time; not a cheap Sarsaparilla, not one that promises you a great deal of bulk for your money; but a highly concentrated Sarsaparilla, one that has more cure in it than any other Sarsaparilla in the world.

That's AYER'S

"The only Sarsaparilla made under the personal supervision of three graduates: a graduate in pharmacy, a graduate in chemistry, and a graduate in medicine."

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

"For thirty-five years I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla. There are many other kinds on the market, but I have great faith in that word "Ayer's."—N. Musesick, St. Anthony, Iowa.

Discovery of the Spectroscope.

It was in 1860 that Kirchoff and Bunsen added this new weapon to the arsenal of scientific research. The spectroscope itself, as an instrument, was an invention in the department of optics, but its application to chemistry was among the fost obvious and the most startling of all its achievements. Before the day of the spectroscope all speculation upon the chemistry of the stars was in vain; with its advent the material unity of the planets, suns and nebulae was made clear. To the astronomer a new eye was given; to the chemist, a new laboratory.

Millions in Tips.

It has been calculated that the American travelers this year will spend over $5,000,000 in tips alone. Most of them will do it grudgingly, because of all the petty blackmail of our advanced civilization these gratuities are the meanest and most provoking. At the same time, if one is traveling and wishes to get along comfortably he must deal out the tidbits on every hand. If you should want to know the depth of human misery simply decline to give any fee at all while taking a trip across the Atlantic ocean. Then you may envy Jonah in his solitude within the whale's interior. On the other side, of course, if you do not pay the tips you will simply be asked for them just as you would your street car fare. It is pretty hard, but there is no escape from it.—Saturday Evening Post.

Incongruous.

"I don't think I would ever make a political speaker," said Mr. Meekton.

"Why not?"

"I couldn't go through the ordeal. The very idea of my standing up and talking for half an hour at a stretch with Henrietta sitting in the audience not saying a word makes me nervous."—Washington Star.

Dinner.

"You observe that I dine a la carte," said the plebian truck horse, who had been fed at the curb without being unhitched.

"I always dine stable d'oat," said the aristocratic carriage horse, with rare condescension.—Detroit Journal.

Composer Perosi's Speed.

It is doubtful if there has ever been a composer who could work more quickly than the Abbe Perosi. A few days ago a large number of pilgrims from Lombardy arrived at Rome under the guidance of Cardinal Ferrari, and on the evening before the day which was fixed for their reception at the Vatican the cardinal called on Perosi, who is a native of Lombardy and requested him to compose an appropriate piece of music for the pilgrims, as they wished to surprise the pope by giving a musical performance in his presence. Abbe Perosi promised taht he would do so. That very night he composed the music; early next morning he gave the score to the performers and directed four rehearsals, and at half-past 11 o'clock his music was splendidly rendered in the presence of Leo XIII., who was so delighted with it that he sent for the composer and warmly congratulated him.—New York Herald.

BILE BLOAT

Puffs under the eyes; red nose; pimple-blotched, greasy face don't mean hard drinking always as much as it shows that there is BILE IN THE BLOOD. It is true, drinking and over-eating overloads the stomach, but failure to assist nature in regularly disposing of the partially digested lumps of food that are dumped into the bowels and allowed to rot there, is what causes all the trouble. CASCARETS will help nature help you, and will keep the system from filling with poisons, will clean out the sores that tell of the system's rottenness. Bloated by bile the figure becomes unshapely, the breath foul, eyes and skin yellow; in fact the whole body kind of fills up with filth. Every time you neglect to help nature you lay the foundation for just such troubles. CASCARETS will carry the poisons out of the system and will regulate you naturally and easily and without gripe or pain. Start to-night—one tablet—keep it up for a week and help the liver clean up the bowels, and you will feel right, your blood will be rich, face look clean, eyes bright. Get a 10c box of CASCARETS, take as directed. If you are not cured or satisfied you get your money back. Bile bloat is quickly and permanently

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Comparative Varieties of Corn.

The Illinois Experiment Station has been conducting some comparative tests of corn. The experiments have been carried on in the same field for three years. The soil is a deep, rich loam, as uniform as possible, representing very closely the average character of soil found over the corn-growing section of the state. The field was manured every spring with a coating of well-rotted barnyard manure, care being taken to make this application as uniform as possible. Most of the leading varieties of corn grown in Illinois, together with new varieties advertised by the seedsmen, were tested, the object being to find out the value of the new as compared with the standard varieties, and in this way to furnish as reliable information as possible of new varieties. The plat devoted to each variety was repeated twelve times in different parts of the field, and the following yields are the averages of each set of plats.

The preparation of the ground and the seeding during the three years was about as follows: The land was plowed with an ordinary three-horse breaking plow, about six inches deep, about the last week of April, and immediately disked twice with a spading disk, after which it was harrowed twice with a common smoothing harrow. The seed was planted the second week in May, and the corn was cultivated four times during the season, to a depth of three inches, a small shovel cultivator being used, this cultivator having four shovels on each gang. The corn was cut by hand the second week of September, each variety being harvested by itself. The corn was husked the second week of October, the weight of the corn and stover being determined separately. After the corn had become air dry during the winter the per cent of corn to cob was determined by shelling and weighing ten average ears.

Below are the averages for three years, 1897, 1898, 1899. The figures represent bushels of unshelled corn (70 pounds to the bushel):

Iowa Gold Mine	42.5
Burr's White	62.2
Mortgage Lifter	56.7
Champion Yellow Dent	60.6
Pride of Saline	49.2
Golden Beauty	46.5
Riley's Favorite	59.8
Edmond's Yellow Dent	48.9
Legal Tender	55.8
Leaming	61.0
Boone County White	55.8

The following averages are for two years:

Hickory King	47.4
Prehistoric	25.2
Pride of the North	51.2
Reid's World's Fair	75.5
St. Charles White	60.1
Iowa Silver Mine	40.9
Improved Leaming	51.4
Blount's Prolific	54.0
Champion White Pearl	54.6

The following were grown for but one season, with yields as follows:

Murdock	59.6
Clark's Iroquois	60.2
Beagley's Illinois Corn	37.6
Cuban Giant	66.7
Fisk's White Dent	51.5
Fisk's Yellow Dent	53.3
Fursman White Mastodon	53.3
Imp. Early Golden Dent	42.6
Ill. Ex. Early White Dent	45.2
Pride of Macoupin	55.7
Burrow's Premium Coin	62.6
Thoroughbred White Flint	14.2

Thinning Apples.

Bulletin 168, New York Agricultural Experiment Station: Experiments have been in progress for four years for the purpose of gaining definite information concerning the effect which thinning the fruit of apple trees may have on the remaining crop and whether the practice if followed systematically year after year tends to secure greater regularity in bearing or increased yield in succeeding seasons. The results show that with certain varieties the size and color of the fruit is generally improved where thorough and timely thinning is done and the percentage of the higher grades of fruit is increased, although the total yield of marketable fruit if often lessened. It appears that under certain circumstances, and especially with certain varieties, the thinning of apples in commercial orchards would be profitable.

With mature trees which have come into full bearing and which are properly fertilized, pruned, sprayed and generally well cared for, it is doubtful whether thinning the fruit in any one season will materially increase the yield in succeeding seasons. It should be borne in mind that young trees which have not come into full bearing may be seriously impaired in vigor and in subsequent fruit production by being allowed to mature too heavy crops. It appears that, with the exception noted, the principal source of profit from thinning fruit in orchards which are well cared for is to be looked for chiefly in preventing the breaking of overloaded limbs and in the increased market value of the fruit of the current season. Thinning, to be most effective, should be done early in the season—at the time Baldwins and Greenings are from three-fourths of an inch to an inch in diameter. In New York state it should be completed in June.

A Desirable Hardy Plant.

Most of us are quite familiar with the herbaceous Peony, but comparatively few seem to know much about Tree Peony. I am under the impression that this ignorance is the result of an idea which seems to prevail that it is a very tender variety, not adapted to culture at the north. Because of this impression it has been overlooked and neglected by those who would be sure to grow it if they felt sure of its adaptation to general culture. While it may not be hardy enough to stand the strain of some of our severest winters at the extreme north, I think it can be grown with great satisfaction in most northern states if it is given good protection in winter, writes a contributor to Ledger Monthly.

It is a very beautiful plant. Its flowers are not as globular in form as those of the ordinary herbaceous class, but they are all the more beautiful because of the open center, which affords a pleasing contrast of stamens and petals. The foliage is delicate and profuse, and furnishes a charming background against which to display the flowers effectively. Because of its stately, bush-like habit of growth, it is admirably adapted to use among border plants whose season of flowering is earlier or later than its own. In fall a liberal amount of coarse litter should be put about each plant. In spring this should be worked into the soil about its roots. Feed the plant well, in order to enable it to do its best. It likes a somewhat heavy soil in which there is a good deal of clay. The best fertilizer for it is cow manure, which should be half-rotted, neither fresh nor too old. Disturb its roots as little as possible.

Cattle Supplies.

Probably no one can figure accurately the condition of the future cattle market. All attempts to find out the available supplies have so far been based on estimates, which are more or less good guesses. Opposing factors have been at work that affect the situation quite seriously. In the first place the consumption of meat has been increased by the better business of the country. This has caused a rise in price, which in turn stimulated the production of more beef animals. More cows have been bred to better bulls than for some years. This breeding to better bulls means a direct increase in the amount of meat being produced. The sire of the calf determines to a large extent the size to which the calf is to grow, and consequently the weight that he will dress at one or two years of age. This is one of the factors that is likely to affect the market in the future. The government is about to take a census of the cattle in the country, and it is expected that this will give data of more value than we have ever before possessed. But if men try to figure out the cattle supplies from a basis of numbers they will not be able to arrive at accurate conclusions. During the last ten years the character of western range cattle has undergone a change, owing to the use on those herds of better and heavier bulls than formerly. Comparisons of numbers do not show the meat supply. It is not the numbers of cattle that affect the market, but the weight of meat they produce. It is therefore probable that the supply of cattle in the future, that is, during the next five years, will exceed considerably most of the estimates.

Cranberries.

There are many varieties of cranberries. Over 100 of them, of good keeping and shipping qualities, were raised at the state experiment station at Madison, Wis., in 1898, and exhibited at the succeeding cranberry convention. The United States consular officers report about an equal number in the Canadian provinces, the best of which are being transplanted to this country. The methods of cultivating, picking, screening or grading and marketing cranberries are practically the same everywhere, and more nearly uniform than those of any other considerable branch of agricultural production that covers widely separated areas. The growers are well organized, the national association having its headquarters at Trenton, N. J., and local organizations existing in Massachusetts and possibly elsewhere. They keep a record of acreage and production and gather for their own use certain annual statistics. They also are attempting to secure the adoption and common use of barrels and crates of uniform size, sanctioned by law. What is known as the "Western Barrel," so fixed by law in Wisconsin, is 25½ inches high, 16 inches in diameter at the heads and 18 inches in diameter at the bilge, inside measure, and must be officially branded, under severe penalties for failure. The Massachusetts or Cape Cod barrel is slightly different, being 16x17¾x26½ inches inside measure, and must contain 100 quarts. The Wisconsin (legal) or western crate is 22x12x7½ inches, inside measure, and must be branded. The Cape Cod crate, in use also in Connecticut, Maine and New Jersey, is of the same dimensions.

The Annual Flower Bed.

Give the water plenty of time to drain out of the soil before the flower beds are made. It should be so dry that when thrown from the spade it will break apart readily. The soil should be stirred to the depth of at least one foot; a foot and a half is better. It should be thrown up as loosely as possible, and left exposed to the air till it is in a condition to crumble easily before further work is done; then some well-rotted manure should be added and mixed thoroughly. This should leave the soil light and mellow. The ground should be good and warm before the seeds are sown. The design of the beds for flowering plants should not be too elaborate. If beds are wanted for producing striking effects in outline or pattern work, such foliage plants as Alternanthera, Coleus and Tresines should be used. The beds should not be made so large or wide that they cannot be worked without tramping over them. It is best not to have too many kinds, if the space for growing them is small. After the beds are made, smoothed over, and the seed is sown, the soil should be firmed down. This brings the seed in close contact with the soil, and they are less apt to dry out and will germinate more quickly. The soil should be sprinkled at least once a day; if the weather is dry, this should be done either in the evening or early in the morning. The plants from which cut flowers are to be taken should be set out to one side or in a corner of the flower garden.—W. H. Moore, Kansas Agricultural College.

It has been announced that the entire output of binding twine manufactured by the Kansas State Penitentiary will be sold direct to the farmers of the state instead of through the implement dealers, who bid for it, but were believed to be interested in the trust.

STRIKING FIGURES.

Two Ecumenical Delegates Who Have Had Rare Experiences.

In attendance upon the conference as delegates are two men who, in their missionary work, have been through as grave perils and as strange experiences, probably, as any living beings, says the New York Sun. They are Robert Laws, doctor of divinity and medicine, who comes from the missions on the shores of Lake Nyassa in Africa, and Dr. John G. Paton, whose life work has been among the cannibal South Sea Islanders of the New Hebrides. "One of the greatest rewards of your work," said a missionary from Japan to Dr. Paton upon being introduced to him, "must be the knowledge that by the spread of Christianity the practices of cannibalism have been rooted out." "It would be," said the venerable missionary, "if it were only so." "Are there still any cannibals remaining in the New Hebrides?" asked the other in surprise. "There are plenty of islands, unfortunately," was the reply, "where cannibalism is constantly practiced, and human flesh is esteemed the greatest delicacy obtainable. The life of an unarmed man wouldn't be worth a moment's purchase on any of those islands. A thing that constantly surprises me," added the doctor as his questioner turned away, "is the prevailing impression here that cannibalism is a thing of the past. Where the missionaries have gained a foothold the practice has been eradicated, though I have known of sporadic outbreaks in the vicinity of the missions. But people here at home do not seem to comprehend the vast extent of the South Sea Islands. There are thousands and tens of thousands of natives who have never seen a missionary and who, perhaps, have never seen a white man of any kind. They eat human flesh to-day, as they have from time immemorial."

FASHION'S PARASOLS.

Some of the Latest Fancies in Season's Sunshades.

If the woman who uses a parasol would be particularly far in advance of her feminine rivals this summer she will buy herself the very latest creation in parasol ingenuity, the sunshade with square edges. It is not a thing of beauty, perhaps, but at least it is strikingly odd and to be odd is at least to be noticed. The square parasol is covered with a bandana handkerchief in the gaudiest pattern obtainable and the effect is certainly bizarre and unusual. The newest handles for the season's parasols are club shaped, and some of them are adorned with bunches of flowers and fruit. Among the elaborate handles wooden ones are seen mounted in gold and silver and set with real or imitation jewels. Ivory, coral, and lapis lazuli are also cut up into the parasol handles. Parasols for morning service are always of plain design and material. Silk is, of course the rule. For carriage use a white satin sunshade is always a desirable requisition and it may be beautified by lace butterflies and flowers appliqued upon the satin. One of the fancy shades shows a parasol formed of stitched bands of white taffeta put together with strips of insertion and hemstitching.—Chicago Chronicle.

A Chance for a Fortune.

"It seems to me," said a smoker, "that there is a fortune in the tobacco business for the manufacturer who will pack his tobacco in boxes that are reasonably airtight. I mean cheap tobacco. You can get expensive tobacco in such boxes now. Cheap tobaccos are put up in boxes that are just as expensive, but there is no pretense of having them airtight. The result is that when half the tobacco has been used the other half is all dried up and it smokes like hay and burns your tongue. All, that is necessary is to have a box with a double cover, the inside cover made so that it fits the inside of the box tightly. Such a box keeps the tobacco moist and in just the proper condition until it is all used up. The additional cost of the inside cover would be infinitesimal. It could easily be covered by a little reduction in the amount of decoration put on the outside of the boxes that are now used."—New York Sun.

Owes His Fame to His Wife.

"I shall never do anything," said the famous Mascagni, the composer, one day, as he was working away at the score of Cavalleria Rusticana, "never. That is where my work must go." And he threw the sheets on the fire. Luckily that fire was low, for there was no money to buy coal, and his wife rescued the precious work herself and sent it on her own account to compete for the prize. In a day or two Mascagni woke up to find himself the most famous musician in Europe. He appeared before the curtain and the audience cheered and shouted for nearly twenty minutes! Everybody wanted to know him—the world was at his feet. Yet so poor was he when the opera was produced that he had to borrow the money to telegraph the good news to his wife! Now he is comfortably off and able to look the world cheerfully in the face.—New York Mail and Express.

The poulterer obeyed.

Marie Corelli's Home Life.

Marie Corelli seems to have settled down permanently in Stratford-on-Avon. Unlike most English authoresses, she conducts most of her correspondence by means of a secretary and a typewriter, and manages to get through with an extraordinary amount of business. In addition to a new novel and several short stories, her activities include public speaking. London has been obliged to forego the privilege of hearing her, and is to that extent behind Birmingham and Walsall in the literary procession. Miss Corelli has been elected president of the Walsall Literary institute, a post that has been held by Sir Arthur Sullivan and Sir Henry Irving. She is also taking a kindly interest in Shakespeare, and has on foot plans for popularizing this "distinguished fellow artist," among the children of Stratford-on-Avon—London Correspondence New York Press.

HOW THE YOUNG ELBOW THE OLD.

They are Crowding Into Places Where Mature Judgement Is Needed.

"The part of wisdom is not to drop one's tasks too early, not to be in haste to retire from posts of influence and duty," writes Margaret E. Sangster in the May Ladies' Home Journal. "Insensibly the young, with a certain unconscious arrogance, elbow the old out of the way and monopolize the places in every profession and branch of business. Yet the young are not dowered with experience, nor have they the riper judgment of maturity. But they do have what age has often lost—enthusiasm, self-confidence and pluck. Old people are sometimes out of touch with the present age. They have ceased to be receptive; they have grown mentally inhospitable and inert. Is there, however, the slightest reason why a woman should rust out through mere indolence before she has done the full measure of service required by her Master for the time in which she lives? As a teacher, as an artist, as a house mistress and mother, in whatever field you are, my friend, do not withdraw from active duty too soon. There is need at the front for the woman of warm heart and trained capacity for affairs, and her age is of little consequence if she is equal to her work. There never was a time when the judgment of mature age was more needed than it is to-day."

POISONING AT HOME.

The Pantry Is a Prolific Source of Danger to Good Food.

It is very desirable that the conditions under which food may become poisonous should receive more practical consideration than they do. A well known physician has called attention to some glaring defects in the location of food storerooms, which are worthy of attention.

In house construction the position of the pantry is too often treated as of minor importance. In some houses the space under the stairs or some equally unsuitable and inadequately lighted and ventilated space is thought good enough for that purpose. In a great number the pantry is a small offshoot from the house, the ceiling, floor and and walls often being damp, owing to faulty construction. In some of these matters are rendered worse by the water taps being placed therein without any provision being made for carrying away the drippings from the tap or overflow from vessels into which water is run.

One of the most frequent entries in his inspection note book is "defective yard pavement," permitting the soakage of filth into the soil underneath. Not only is the soil thus rendered a good breeding ground for pathogenic microbes, but it also supplies those conditions requisite for increased virulence.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"I was down in Charleston, W. Va., last week," said Johnny Noon, "looking after a contract, and I noticed a funny thing.

"You know," John went on, "that the motto on the great seal of West Virginia is a Latin lingo something like 'Montana nil non est exto,' meaning 'Mountaineers are always free.' Well, sir, they slap that state seal all around their capital, and as I was going to the penitentiary, I looked up and saw it over the door. There it was, 'Mountaineers are always free.'

"It may be more cheering to the convicts to read that than the old slogan, 'Abandon hope all ye who enter here,' but it's a blasted lie on the face of it, for all that, for I saw plenty of mountain men wearing the stripes, once I got inside."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Motion to Adjourn.

Senator Pettus of Alabama is noted for a ponderous solemnity of manner and a slow and stately manner of oratory, and, on account of his great age, is honored by his colleagues. While Senator Spooner was arguing the Quay case Pettus arose.

"I should like to ask the senator to give way for a moment, if he pleases," he remarked, in his funeral way.

"I will agree to anything the senator wants me to," replied Mr. Spooner, smilingly, "except to vote against my convictions on a constitutional question."

"I am not asking you to do that," said Mr. Pettus, "but I want you to give way to a motion."

"Well, what is it?" asked Mr. Spooner.

"It is to adjourn," answered Mr. Pettus, in a melancholy voice and with a smile.

THE FOLLOWING TELEGRAM JUST RECEIVED FROM OUR BUYER EXPLAINS ITSELF.

This new binding twine will be placed on sale by us May 25th, and will be sold until this lot is gone at 9⅞ cents for standard, and 11⅞ cents for Manila Mixed. In ordering this twine order as No. 57 New Standard Twine at 9⅞ cents and No. 77 Manila Mixed at 11⅞ cents.

The only reason that we could possibly obtain this twine was that a party needed spot cash. We had no expectation of being able to get any twine at anything like this price, for if you will just think of it a minute, it is ¼ of a cent less than our farmer friends paid for twine to the Penitentiary people a few weeks ago. We always believe when we get a bargain in dividing it with our friends and customers, feeling that when they feel that we are always willing to treat them right and give them the benefit of our one basis on which we do business, namely large sales and small profits, that they will appreciate it and in the end we will make more by favoring them with something of this kind than we would by charging them the regular market value. Consequently we divide this profit with you and will simply say that when this twine is out you can rest assured that we will try to make you as low prices as possible, but nevertheless, we would suggest that you get your order in at once for any part that you may want of this lot. We will be able to ship by the first of next week, as the twine reaches us by fast freight.

ACTING IN CONCERT

FOREIGN ADMIRALS FORCIBLY REOPENING THE RAILWAY.

Gangs of Laborers, Guarded by 1,500 Men From the Foreign Fleet, Repairing the Damaged Line—Three Thousand Troops of All Nations Will Go to Peking to Back Up the Demands of Ministers, or, if Necessary, Suppress the Boxers Themselves — Situation Hourly Growing More Dangerous.

London, June 12. — The admirals at Taku, acting in concert, are forcibly reopening the railway from Tien-tsin to Peking. Gangs of laborers are repairing the damaged line, which is guarded by 1,500 men, composed of detachments from the foreign fleet. One hundred Americans under Capt. McCalla are among them. They have guns and armored trains for use when the line is repaired, which can hardly be effected before Monday night. Three thousand troops of all nationalities, according to a dispatch to the Daily Express from Shanghai, will be sent to Peking to back up the demands of the ministers upon the government or, if necessary, to suppress the Boxers themselves.

-o-

Tien-tsin, June 12.—The special train that went to examine the line and reconnoiter returned last night. The railway was found clear two miles beyond Yang-tsn. The engineer, with the guards, walked a mile and a half further. They found the ties and two bridges burned and the railway torn up. They saw a few hundred persons, apparently villagers, gathered ahead of them. The first repair train, with Admiral Seymour and his staff, 650 British; Capt. McCalla, with 100 Americans, 40 Italians and 50 Austrians, left here at 9:30. A Hotchkiss and other

Guns Were Mounted

on a car in front of the engine. The rest of the guns were mounted in the center of the train. A second train left at 11 o'clock with 600 British, Japanese and French troops. Repair material and new rails were taken along. There are thirty-one foreign war vessels at Taku. A message from Peking to the admirals reports that the situation is hourly growing more dangerous for foreigners. All those at Peking have taken refuge in Legation street. The civilians are under arms to act with the Regulars if Necessary.

The approaches to Legation street are surrounded by howling mobs of disorganized soldiers with rifles and cannon. The air is full of threats. This was the situation Saturday when the courier got through with the latest dispatches. The dowager empress was amusing herself at the palace with theatricals. It is rumored that government arms are being dealt out to the Boxers. The troops of Tung Fu Seh are said to be assisting to kill native Christians after malignant tortures.

Rumor That Peking Is Burning.

London, June 12. — The Daily Mail has the following from Tien-tsin, dated Friday: "The wildest rumors are current here to the effect that Peking is burning, but they lack confirmation."

No Word at Washington.

Washington, June 12.—Not a word has been received by the state or navy departments regarding the situation in China. Minister Conger has been in almost daily communication with the state department for the past week, so that the failure to hear from him is somewhat unusual. The general interpretation put upon his silence is that affairs remained practically unchanged.

FIVE PEOPLE ARE MURDERED.

Farm Hand Kills His Employer and Four Other Members of the Family.

Winnipeg, June 12.—A tragedy was committed at Wellwyn, Assiniboia, twelve miles north of Moose mine. John Morrison, a hired man, arose during the night and attempted to murder the entire family of Alex McArthur. The following are dead: Mr. and Mrs. A. McArthur, Denny McArthur, aged 12; Charles McArthur, 10; Russell McArthur, 6. Mamie McArthur, 6; Henry McArthur, 2, and Baby McArthur are badly wounded and it is expected will not recover. Jessie McArthur, aged 15, was awakened by the murderer taking her little brother Russell out of bed, and he was then killed before her eyes. After killing the boy Morrison told Miss McArthur that he had killed the whole family, but would spare her, and said he was going to shoot himself. He then left the house and attempted to take his own life in the stable by shooting. He is still alive, although seriously wounded. He was arrested. The McArthurs were highly respected farmers at Wellwyn.

WAR TROPHY LOADED.

Spanish Cannon at Kansas City in a Dangerous Condition.

Kansas City, June 12.—It has been discovered that the Spanish cannon loaned to Kansas City several months ago by the government to be placed in one of its parks as a trophy of the Spanish war is loaded. The war department has been searching for the cannon for some time and has sent letters to different cities warning the recipients of cannon sent them from Washington to be on the lookout for a loaded gun. Mayor Reed received such a notice. An investigation was started and it was found that the cannon received by Kansas City has been loaded to the brim with powder and projectiles ever since it left Manila. The cannon had not yet been placed in position.

BOERS BOLD RAID.

They Tear Up Part of Roberts' Vital Line of Railway.

London, June 12.—The Boers have torn up twenty-one miles of Lord Roberts' vital line of railway between America Siding and Roodeval. It is a bold raid and vexatious, but it does not disquiet the military authorities as yet for they expect Gen. Kelly-Kenny to drive off the marauders and reopen the line. The rapidity of the advance of Lord Roberts cannot have permitted him to have accumulated large reserve stores. Therefore interruption of the railway even for a week must embarrass the army and must bring the forward operations

To a Standstill.

Nothing has been heard from Lord Roberts for three days. This raid on the enemy, the strenuous opposition to Gen. Rundle and the nimble escape of Gen. Botha's division have forced the war office observers to the reluctant conclusion that the war is not yet over, although even the occasional hopeful Boer sympathizer cannot see how the Boers can do anything to change the result. Gen. Buller is in Boer territory. Dispatches of correspondents with him filed yesterday at sunset describe the corps as camping at Galonsell,

Close to the Point where the frontiers of the Free State, the Transvaal and Natal meet. "The British marched eight miles yesterday," says a Reuter correspondent, "without encountering any opposition. The Boers, who had one gun, withdrew under heavy artillery fire, to a range just past the camp."

This long range, running skirmish will doubtless be renewed this morning. Gen. Buller is expected to make rapid progress now and to throw the weight of 20,000 men into Lord Roberts' Transvaal combinations.

Determined to Fight.

Gen. Rundle's and Gen. Brabant's divisions are still at Hammonia, in the Ficksburg district. The latest intelligence from their headquarters is that the Boers are determined to fight to the bitter end. They are concentrating 4,000 men around Bethlehem. The country between them and Gen. Rundle is mountainous and resembles Northern Natal in being exceedingly difficult for military operations. Gen. Rundle's plans are to prevent the Boers getting past him southward.

Occupied by Hunter.

Gen. Hunter's advance guard has occupied Ventersdorp, 100 miles southwest of Pretoria. This took place on June 7. Gen. Plumer's column is on the Elands river, northwest of Pretoria. The British are sending detachments right and left to accept the surrenders of commandos, horses, cattle and forage and to overawe the sparcely settled country. Thus far only one small commando has been heard of, a commando at Tall Basch.

STIKERS KILLED.

Most Bloody Day Since the St. Louis Strike Began.

St. Louis June 12—The day just ended has been of the most eventful and bloody since the great strike on the St. Louis Transit company began more than a month ago. There were numerous encounters between strikers and other individuals and the constituted authorities, resulting in three deaths and the wounding of five or more persons, mostly strikers. One of the latter will die. The day was quiet until the afternoon, when the a number of street car lines for the purpose of giving them a rest and to test the ability of the Transit company to operate without friction. The most serious trouble broke out between 6 and 7 o'clock in front of the building occupied by the sheriff's posse comitatus as a barracks and headquarters. A party of 100 or more striking employes who were returning from a labor parade in East St. Louis attempted to assault the crew of a passing street car.

A Brick Was Thrown

and several shots were fired by the street car men when members of the posse appeared on the street with their shotguns and attempted to rescue the street car men. In the melee at least ten shots were fired by the posse, who surrounded the mob, and there were four casualties as far as now known. Twenty-one prisoners were captured by the posse and taken into the barracks. One other shooting by a deputy sheriff is reported at the sheds of the Bellefontaine line. Fred Boehm, sixty-five years old, was killed.

Militia Is Ready.

Jefferson City, Mo., June 11. — Gov. Stephens says that everything is being put in readiness for calling out the National guard of Missouri to quell disorder in St. Louis, consequent to the street car strike, but he will not issue the call except as a last resort. It will cost, he says, $5,000 to land 2,500 men in St. Louis, and as much more to maintain them, and as there is no appropriation for the purpose he does not know how would view a deficiency of $25,000 for maintaining troops in St. Louis. It might require an extra session of the legislature to appropriate money, he says. A rumor is current here that Attorney General Crow would proceed in the supreme court to oust Mayor Seigenheim from office for failure to perform his official duties in connection with the strike. Gen. Crow denies that any such action is to be taken at this time.

The Legislature

Princess at the White House.

Washington, June 12.—Princess Aribert of Anhalt, Queen Victoria's granddaughter, Saturday visited the White House in company with Lord and Lady Pauncefote, and was received by President and Mrs. McKinley in the Red parlor. The visit was entirely informal. The princess, at her own request, was shown through the White House.

Saranac, Mich., June 12.—The safe at the postoffice was blown open, the thieves obtaining $1,407 in stamps and money belonging to the government and $60 belonging to Postmaster Fitzgibbons. F. H. Stowe saw the robbers leave the building and gave the alarm. They escaped.

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate.

Washington, June 5.—Congress is in the last gasps of the long session, and its expiration apparently is to be quite perfunctory. Unless something extraordinary occurs no further general legislation of national importance will be enacted before final adjournment. The senate was in session more than ten hours yesterday, nearly four hours of which was spent in executive session. The only features of the day session was the speech by Mr. Teller of Colorado on the Philippine question, and the one by Mr. Pettigrew in advocacy of the anti-trust bill passed by the house last Saturday. Last night a picturesque session was held, a sort of social session, in which many senators appeared in full dress, and the galleries were thronged by a gaily attired crowd of spectators. Mr. Pettigrew replied at length to the speech of Mr. Spooner of Wisconsin on the Philippines, but did not conclude his remarks. The remainder of the session was consumed in the consideration of conference reports and in passing minor measures on the calendar.

The House.

The house yesterday agreed to the senate amendment to the sundry civil bill appropriating $5,000,000 to the Louisiana purchase exposition at St. Louis. There was not a shadow of doubt of concurrence on the amendment. It was 6 o'clock when the amendment came up, and owing to the lateness of the hour and the overwhelming majority in its favor those opposed to the appropriation did not make a show of opposition. They contented themselves with demanding a roll call, which resulted 127 to 75 in favor of the provision. The house also agreed to the senate amendments on the emergency river and harbor bill, increasing the appropriation to $2,200,000 and ordering a comprehensive report on the levee system. There was disagreement on other provisions and the bill was sent back to conference. This leaves only four appropriation bills still in dispute between the houses. Mr. Tawney is making an effort to delay final amendment until final action is had on the Grout oleomargarine bill, but he met with opposition. Everything now points to final adjournment on Wednesday.

The Senate.

Washington, June 6.—A tornado of partisan debate swept over the senate yesterday with Senators Hanna of Ohio, Pettigrew of South Dakota and Carter of Montana the chief figures. For sensational criminations and recriminations, for bitter personalities and for poignant invective the debate exceeded anything heard on the floor of the chamber for many years. The lie was not passed directly, but the truthfulness of statements was challenged very sharply. Mr. Bacon of Georgia precipitated the scene by repeating a charge made several days ago by Mr. Pettigrew that Mr. Cramp, the Philadelphia shipbuilder, had contributed $400,000 to the Republican campaign fund in 1892, with the understanding that he would be reimbursed by contracts for the construction of warships for the government. This charge, Mr. Bacon said, had been denied neither by Mr. Hanna, the present chairman of the Republican national committee, nor by Mr. Carter, who was chairman of the committee in 1892. Then the storm broke. Mr. Hanna vigorously denied any knowledge of such a transaction and expressed his opinion that it was false. Mr. Carter declared the statement properly could be branded only as a lie. Mr. Pettigrew not only reiterated the statement, but created a tremendous sensation by asserting that his authority was no less a person than Mr. Cramp himself, and that in a conversation with Mr. Carter that senator substantially had verified the story. He also asked Mr. Hanna relative to his election to the senate. Mr. Hanna replied and expressed doubt of the South Dakotan's sanity. He was followed by Mr. Carter, who not only denounced the charges as figments of Mr. Pettigrew's imagination, but warned the Democratic side who were now the associates of the South Dakota senator, that if they would lie down with dogs they would get up with fleas. Most of the day was given to conference reports and orders and ends of business preparatory to final adjournment. A night session was held.

The House.

The house entered the throes of dissolution yesterday and all day and all evening the circling galleries were crowded with spectators. The picturesque incidents were few. Partisan passion running high in the face of the impending presidential campaign broke out several times during the afternoon and hot words were bandied across the political aisle. Mr. Hull of Iowa and Mr. Lentz of Ohio crossed swords, and later Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio and Mr. Gaines of Tennessee had a lively encounter. Throughout the day at every opportunity there was a play for political advantage and taunts and challenges were bandied back and forth. But all this was merely incidental to the work of crowding through the big supply bills which had the right of way. During the interims between the consideration of the reports members clamored like madmen in the wheat pit on a panic day for recognition for private bills upon which their political salvation might depend.

At the night session the galleries were thronged with gaily arrayed women and the floor was a veritable bedlam. Hour after hour the conferees struggled on with their reports, the speaker, firm and resolute, steering the house through the turmoil and confusion. Toward midnight the galleries thinned out, but tired legislators with the prospects of an all-night session remained in their places, getting what comfort they could from the knowledge that with the morrow the end would come.

The House.

Washington, June 7. — When the house last night at 10:30 took a recess until 10 o'clock to-day the two chambers of the national legislature, with heads down and horns locked, were in a desperate struggle over the item in the naval appropriation bill relating to ocean surveys. The final adjournment of congress is postponed until it is over.

The proceedings in the house during the day were tame and without dramatic incident. This was partly due to the fact that the firm position taken by the house on the armor plate provision transferred the fight to the floor of the senate and to the obstinate refusal of Mr. Lentz, an Ohio Democrat, to permit any unanimous consent legislation until the Republican leaders agreed to allow the testimony of the Coeur d'Alene investigation to be printed. Mr. Lentz held the house by the throat all day, and except for privileged matters things legislative were practically at a standstill. But last night there was enough excitement to compensate for the dullness of the day's session. The house got its dander up over the failure of its conferees to abide by their instructions on the ocean survey item, and after an exceedingly sensational debate in which Mr. Cannon, the chairman of the appropriations committee, made some startling disclosures as to the manner in which Commander Todd, the hydrographer of the navy, had waged his campaign against the stand taken by the house in favor of the coast and geodetic survey doing ocean survey work, the house rejected the conference report by an overwhelming majority, and the speaker took the almost unprecedented course of appointing new conferees on the part of the house who are not members of the naval committee. The debate was one of the bitterest and most heated of the session.

The Senate.

Inability to reach an agreement upon the naval appropriation bill forced the senate to abandon the adoption of the house resolution for final adjournment yesterday. The armor plate question, which for five years has been a burning question in congress, upset the senate leaders and caused their well laid plans to go awry. It was a day of strife and turbulence in the senate. Early the conferees on the naval bill reported a disagreement and the senate was told plainly that the house would not consent to the amendment providing for an armor plate factory to be operated by the government. A compromise proposition was presented by Mr. Penrose of Pennsylvania, and after hours of debate, finally was adopted by a vote of 39 to 35. The discussion of the proposition developed an unusual bitterness of feeling and charges of robbery and political corruption were hurled about the chamber with an abandon which, if they had not fallen from the lips of grave senators would be regarded as reckless. Little worse ever was heard in the heat of a political campaign. Three o'clock, the hour agreed upon for final adjournment, was passed and still the senate was held by the armor question. When the Penrose proposition finally was adopted, it was supposed the way was clear, but late last night another disagreement was reported upon the naval bill, and the senate took an adjournment until 11 o'clock to-day. The evening session presented a brilliant scene, the galleries being thronged with a gay and fashionable audience. All were well entertained as Senators Carter of Montana, Mason of Illinois, Turner of Washington and Money of Mississippi kept the senate on edge with rattling political speeches.

Washington, June 8.—Congress adjourned sine die at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. For the senate it was a day of waiting. The naval appropriation bill—the stumbling block to final adjournment—could not be agreed to by the conferees of the two houses and the disagreement was reported to the senate early in the day. The report was accepted by the senate, which refused to request another conference, although Mr. Hale expressed the belief that an agreement might be arrived at. There was an evident disposition on the part of the senate to make trouble if the conferees should recede from the senate amendment as to the ocean surveys, and it was deemed the wiser policy to afford the house an opportunity again to pass upon the question. At 4 o'clock, after several recesses had been taken, it became known to the senate that the house had concurred in the senate's amendments remaining in controversy, and soon afterward the house resolution providing for final adjournment was passed, an amendment fixing the hour at 5 o'clock, June 7. It was not until 4:40, twenty minutes before the hour fixed for adjournment, that the president pro tempore of the senate, Mr. Frye, affixed his signature to the naval bill. With some other measures it was hurried to the president, who was in waiting in his room in the capitol, and was signed by him a few minutes later. The concluding hour of the session was purely a social session. No business beyond the adoption of the customary resolution of thanks to the chairman, Mr. Frye, was accomplished.

The House.

In marked contrast with the exciting incidents attending the bitter struggles of the closing hours of the session, Speaker Henderson laid down his gavel at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the conclusion of one of the most picturesque scenes which has ever occurred in the hall of representatives. Party passion and personal rancor, which have brought the house to the brink of actual riot several times during the last forty-eight hours, gave way in the closing half-hour to good fellowship, which found vent in a patriotic outburst that stirred the crowded galleries to the highest pitch of enthusiasm. During a brief recess taken within thirty minutes of the time fixed for the final adjournment, to give the president an opportunity to affix his signature to the bills that were being rushed to him for approval, a group of members, led by Mr. Mercer of Nebraska, Mr. Ball of Texas, Mr. Fitzgerald of Massachusetts and Mr. Tawney of Minnesota, congregated in the area to the left of the speaker's rostrum and began singing patriotic airs. The galleries were banked to the doors. It was a magnificent and soul inspiring spectacle.

The principal feature of the closing day in the house was the reversal of its action of Wednesday night in turning down the conferees on the naval bill by yielding on the item relating to ocean surveys. Over night the sentiment of the house underwent a complete change and the members voted by a large majority to accept outright the senate's amendment, which goes much further than the compromise which the conferees offered Wednesday night. The new conferees, led by Mr. Cannon, who had brought in a compromise which they considered more satisfactory, were ignominously brushed aside. It was a distinct victory for the old conferees, Messrs. Foss of Illinois, Dayton of West Virginia and Cummings of New York. The other feature of the closing day was the course of Mr. Lentz of Ohio in blocking unanimous consent legislation. For three days he has objected to bills because a majority would not allow the testimony in the Coeur d'Alene investigation to be printed, and he maintained his position to the end.

Barney Mousseau Drowned.

Red Lake Falls, Minn., June 9. — Barney Mausseau was drowned in Red Lake river at St. Hilaire. He was sorting logs and fell in. His body was found with his hands clutching firmly to a pile at the bottom of the river.

News of the Northwest

MRS. GILBERT DEAD.

The Widow of the Late Bishop Gilbert Passes Away.

St. Paul, June 12. — Mrs. Frances Gilbert, widow of the late Bishop Gilbert, died at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon at her home, 12 Summit avenue. Her death followed quickly that of her husband, who passed away March 2, a little more than three months ago. Even at that time Mrs. Gilbert, who had been an invalid since February, 1899, was in a precarious condition. When the bishop died Mrs. Gilbert was in Faribault. She rallied sufficiently to return to her home in this city, where a private burial service was performed within her hearing. Since her bereavement she has daily failed. For several days it has been evident that she would soon depart.

BLOW-OUT FOR CLARK.

Met at Butte by a Crowd and Brass Band.

Butte, Mont., June 12.—Senator W. A. Clark returned home from Washington yesterday afternoon and several hundred of his friends and sympathizers, led by his son and a brass band, met him at the depot and escorted him to his residence, which had been decorated in his honor with flags and bunting and a big "Welcome Home" banner. Mr. Clark made a speech from his door step, and vigorously arraigned the senate committee which decided that he was elected to the senate by corruption.

RAIN WAS GENERAL.

Minnesota Is Well Soaked and North Dakota Gets Rain.

St. Paul, June 12.—Saturday's rain was general in Minnesota and Western Wisconsin, and visited many points in North Dakota. Reports received from various sources indicate that an area within a radius of 200 miles of St. Paul was thoroughly watered. This is the section of the Northwest that was suffering most from the drouth. This rain will do much towards reviving the drooping crops, and with no further drawbacks a good harvest will result.

FIRE INVADES LA CROSSE.

Wisconsin City Struck by Lightning and in Danger of Destruction.

La Crosse, Wis., June 12.—The entire city was threatened by fire Saturday night. During an electrical storm lightning struck half a dozen buildings, in each case setting them on fire. The St. James Catholic church and Hellman's ice house were totally destroyed.

Jail Sentence for Lorimer.

Sioux Falls, S. D., June 12.—Samuel Lorimer, a young man who recently came to Sioux Falls from Illinois, and who was arrested a short time ago on the charge of raising a check issued to him by his employer from $4.50 to $40.50, appeared before Judge Jones and pleaded guilty to the charge. Owing to the intercession of his employer he was permitted to plead guilty to forgery in the fourth degree and was sentenced to forty days' imprisonment in jail.

Minneapolis Man in Jail.

Hudson, Wis., June 12. — W. W. Dougherty of Minneapolis is detained in the county jail here on the charge of enticing a young lady from home. His bond was placed at $500 and the preliminary trial set for June 18. Dougherty is a cigar agent and has a wife and two children. The girl in the case is the daughter of a prominent citizen of New Richmond.

Indian Story Not True.

Green Bay, Wis., June 12.—The story sent out from here to the effect that the head of an Indian child had been chopped off by playmates and that as a result of witnessing the deed eight Indian adults who were raising a barn let go the timbers and were killed in the crash, on investigation proves to be untrue.

Burglary at St. Paul.

St. Paul, June 12.—Burglars battered down the iron bars in front of the rear door of Boeringer & Son's store, 61 East Fifth street, Sunday morning. After making a fruitless search in the cash drawer they carried away $300 worth of high-priced opera glasses, telescopes and other articles.

Silence Called a Crime.

Duluth, Minn., June 12.—John Murphy was arrested here for refusing to answer questions put to him by a census enumerator. All attempts made by the enumerator and others to get him to answer were without avail, and an example will be made of him.

Killed by an Asylum Inmate.

New Richmond, Wis., June 12.—Antone Sorensen, an attendant at the county asylum, was killed by Bert Arstein, an inmate, who struck him on the head with an ax. Sorensen and his wife went to work at the asylum the previous morning.

To Put in Waterworks.

West Concord, Minn., June 12—Plans are being prepared for a waterworks system which will probably be put in in the business section of town this summer. The council will probably act on the matter at a special meeting Monday evening.

Barn and Stock Burned.

Fergus Falls, Minn., June 12.—The barn of W. A. Ferguson, west of this city, was burned. Four horses and a large number of hogs perished. The fire was set by a passing freight train.

Going for the Gophers.

Yankton, S. D., June 12.—The total number of gophers destroyed in Brown county this year was 118,886. The amount of money paid out as bounty was $1,082. The payment will be continued next year.

Appearances Against Him.

Stillwater, Minn., June 12. — A. D. Hendrickson, wanted at Owatonna for horse stealing, was arrested by Capt. Barnes. He had in his possession a kit of burglar's tools. He was sent to Owatonna.

Fatally Kicked by a Horse.

Black River Falls, Wis., June 12. — While turning his horse into pasture Antone Johnson was kicked in the forehead. He has remained unconscious ever since and the physicians give little hope of his recovery.

Fire Destroys a Big Tannery.

Mellen, Wis., June 12.—The tannery owned by Fayette, Shaw & Co. was destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $100,000. Nine hundred men are thrown out of employment.

Military surgeons selected St. Paul as the next place of meeting.

RISING FROM THE ASHES.

The Rebuilding of Virginia Has Already Begun.

Virginia, Minn., June 10.—The enterprising citizens of the all but ruined city of Virginia are not standing idly and bemoaning their loss, but are taking hold in an intelligent and energetic manner to recoup their losses as best they may. One business man who lost heavily by Thursday's fire, cast his eye over the fire-swept town, and with grim humor said: "Well, we will have a chance to get in on the ground floor once more." The reconstruction of Virginia, destroyed by fire for the second time in seven years, began yesterday, within twenty-four hours after the fire and before the ashes were cold. Both of the new buildings which are being erected are for business purposes. Within a week scores of new buildings will be going up.

VIRGINIA'S LOSS.

Is Now Closely Estimated at $450,000.

Duluth, Minn., June 10.—The total amount of property lost in the fire that leveled Virginia Thursday is now closely estimated at $450,000. The insurance will not exceed $125,000. About 80 business houses, including 30 saloons and 5 hotels, were burned. Thirty residences were also consumed. A car load of food, clothing and blankets was sent to the 1,000 homeless people in the stricken town from Duluth last night over the Duluth & Iron Range railway, and more will rapidly follow from both Duluth and Superior.

FREIGHTS ARE ADVANCING.

Rockefeller's Waiting Game at Duluth Is Telling.

Duluth, Minn., June 10.—For years vessel men have endeavored to make such combinations as would tie up ships and hold back tonnage when the market was in need of support, but they have never been able to do so through the multiplicity of conflicting interests. What they could never do, the Rockefeller interests, single-handed, has accomplished. There are now tied up in this harbor capacity for nearly 200,000 tons every ten days, belonging to the Rockefeller company. The waiting fleet includes ten whaleback barges, five whaleback steamships and several other steel ships of the company, both owned and chartered. As a result freights have already advanced and will undoubtedly get to $1.25 a ton, the season contract rates, shortly.

INVOLVES GREAT NORTHERN.

Charges Made in Connection With the Election in British Columbia.

St. Paul, June 10.—James J. Hill indirectly and the Great Northern are involved in a political sensation which has developed at Victoria in connection with the British Columbia elections. Affidavits published in Victoria, if true, show that a deal has been made between the Great Northern and Premier Martin by which the road is to obtain entrance into British Columbia, the consideration being a campaign fund contribution. Mr. Hill is said to have forwarded $25,000, and promised another $25,000 if necessary.

Women Elect Officers.

Milwaukee, June 10. — Yesterday's session of the club women's convention was marked by the election of officers. The ticket as made out by the nominating committee went through without contest, the result being as follows: President, Mrs. Rebecca Lowe, Georgia; first vice president, Mrs. Charles Denison, New York; second vice president, Miss Margaret J. Evans, Minnesota; recording secretary, Mrs. Emma Fox, Michigan; corresponding secretary, Mrs. George Kendrick, Pennsylvania; treasurer, Mrs. Emma Van Vechten, Iowa; auditor, Mrs. George H. Noyes, Wisconsin. Directors, Mrs. Charles K. Fairbanks, Indiana; Mrs. Edward Buchwalter, Ohio; Mrs. Annie D. West, Massachusetts; Mrs. Mary Lockwood, District of Columbia; Mrs. W. J. Christie, Montana; Mrs. Lillian Streeter, New Hampshire; Mrs. W. J. Coad, South Dakota, and Mrs. L. R. Priddy, Kansas.

Badgers Win Boat Race.

Madison, Wis., June 10. — A boat race between the eight-oared crews of the Wisconsin freshmen and St. John's military academy cadets over a mile-and-a-half course last evening was won by the freshmen in 7:50, which is considered exceptionally fast. The cadets finished eight lengths behind. The freshmen will row at Poughkeepsie later in the month.

Evil Import From the Philippines.

Shakopee, Minn., June 10.—Jordan has a smallpox scare, and as a result over twenty places have been quarantined. Nothing serious is apprehended, since the disease has been going the rounds for some time, and many have recovered therefrom. It is really not smallpox, but is supposed to be a disorder brought over from the Philippines by a Jordan soldier.

Convicted of Manslaughter.

Long Prairie, Minn., June 10—In the case of the state against A. Schulz the jury, after being out twenty minutes, returned a verdict of guilty of manslaughter in the second degree. The defendant has not yet been sentenced. The case against James I. Baker is now on trial. He is charged with carnal knowledge of a child.

Hired Man and Money Missing.

Cottage Grove, Minn., June 10.—The residence of Fred Reutz, a farmer living in the town of Lakeland, was looted while the family was away from home. Fifty dollars in money was taken. The hired man is missing.

Killed by an Engine.

Menomonie, Wis., June 10. — Anton Finstad, a laborer on the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha railway, was struck by an engine on the short line here and instantly killed, his neck being broken.

Appointed as Boiler Inspector.

Langdon, Minn., June 10. — A. W. Kemp, a prominent thresherman of this place, has been appointed as deputy state boiler inspector under Clement Debolds of St. Paul. Mr. Kemp is well qualified to fill the position, having previously served two years in that capacity, besides being a practical engineer.

The voters of the Minneota independent school district, by a majority of 72 voted to bond the district for $5,000 to provide extra school accommodations.

POLICY HOLDERS NEIGHBORS.

Growth of Township Mutual Insurance Companies.

Owing to the remarkable growth in recent years of the township mutual fire insurance business in Minnesota the insurance commissioner is preparing a separate report on these to be incorporated in his annual report. Eighty-five thousand Minnesota farmers and over one hundred and eight million of insurable property, it is stated, are involved in the Minnesota mutuals. During the past ten years the average amount of insurance carried by these has been $61,598,416. There are 126 of these companies, carrying 77,751 policies at an average of about $1,350 and their business is growing steadily, having increased every year for the last twenty years.

The report speaks very highly of the operations of these companies. Failure among them, it is stated, is unknown, as long as their present character remains unchanged. They are, of course, only small companies, and their field is limited to adjoining townships. Thus the policyholders are neighbors and interested in each other as agents. In most cases the officers work without pay or for nominal sums, and the companies, it is stated, are, strictly speaking, the only class that can be considered mutual. Other mutual companies, the report states, are in all cases mutual in name only, organized and operating, as may be clearly shown, more for the taointnol clearly shown, from their expense accounts, more for the pecuniary profit of their officers than for pure and simple protection of members.

The physical, the moral and the expense hazard of the township companies are all minimized by the mutual system. The companies doing a general business, it is stated, have been charging during recent years a rate of 75 cents per annum for each $100 worth of insurance on farm property, while the town mutuals have done this business at an average rate of 17 cents. The danger now before them, the commissioner believes, is that they may become too ambitious and may attempt to broaden their field beyond that of a purely mutual company with neighbors as policyholders.

PREPARES FOR ENCAMPMENT.

Adjutant General Makes a Trip to Lake City.

Adjt. Gen. Lambert recently made a trip to Lake City, where he made arrangements for the national guard encampment. The grounds, he said, are in good condition, though a lot of hay will need to be moved off. Owing to drouths the land is dry, but some rain fell recently. The general expressed himself as well pleased with the new artillery range, which reaches across a bay of Lake Pepin.

Regarding the coming encampment, he said that the date of the Second regiment has been fixed for June 21 to 30. The question of putting the Third regiment on a practice march has not yet been definitely settled, though it is now more probable than ever that the march will take the place of an encampment.

PLANS FOR RURAL SCHOOLS.

Four Different Styles Prepared by Architect Aldrich.

Plans have been completed for four different styles of rural schools by Architect Charles K. Aldrich of the state university. The plans, together with specifications, will be sent free of charge by the superintendent of schools, through county superintendents, to the local school boards, who make minor changes in these. Both from the utilitarian and the esthetic standpoints, the school houses to be erected from these plans will be incomparably better than buildings now in use.

INSPECTOR WAS NEGLIGENT.

Alleged Flagrant Violations of Dairy Law in Duluth.

Flagrant violations of the law regarding standards of milk have, it is said, been discovered in Duluth. State Chemist Hummel returned from there with nine samples of alleged skimmed milk, on which he will make a report. An inspector formerly employed by the dairy and food commission has, it is believed, been none too diligent. He resigned a few days ago, and Inspector Mc Connell of the St. Paul office went to Duluth to make a thorough investigation.

GOOD PRICES FOR LAND.

Boom Times in Northern Minnesota Says Auditor Dunn.

Auditor Dunn returned recently from his trip to Northern Minnesota, where he had conducted land sales. "It was a very successful sale," the auditor remarked. "I tell you the country up north is settling up in great shape. It's a boom country and has a great future before it. All kinds of crops stand well and the timber is magnificent. The prices of land are advancing steadily."

GOVERNOR KILLS A NEGRO.

Executive of Alabama Takes the Life of a Colored Man.

Montgomery, Ala., June 12. — Gov. Oates killed a negro here. The governor heard a pistol shot in his kitchen and on going to investigate found his cook lying dead on the floor, killed by a negro then in the room. The negro who did the killing then started toward Gov. Oates with his pistol in hand. The negro not paying any attention to warnings not to advance, Gov. Oates shot and killed him.

Murdered at a Picnic.

Springfield, Ohio, June 12. — John Beck of this city while with a picnic party at Clifton, this county, was murdered by Robert Mendenhal, a farmer who became incensed over the upsetting of a crock of cream by the picnickers.

Lumber Fire at Washburn.

Washburn, Wis., June 12.—Fire destroyed about 2,000,000 feet of choice lumber owned by Rittenhouse & Embree, Chicago, which was piled in the Thompson yard here. Estimated loss, $25,000; insured. The fire caught from a spark in the mill yard.

Killed His Stepfather.

Fort Worth, Tex., June 12. — John Hendricks stabbed his stepfather to death here yesterday. As a result of this tragedy Hendricks' mother died an hour later from fright.

Japs Getting Pointers.

New York—S. Sakata, B. Kasakaba and S. Kondon of Tokio, Japan, are in this country studying the American system of river and harbor improvements.

Queensland Makes Reservation.

London—Queensland, according to the empress' Melbourne correspondent, will claim the right to decline to join the Australian federation if the compromise on the appeal clause of the commonwealth bill takes effect.

ARE THE INTERESTS OF THE PEOPLE ADVANCED BY THE ADMINISTRATION OF GOVERNOR LIND.

The New Ulm Coal Rate Case Sustained by the Supreme Court, as Was Expected. "And There's More to Follow"—The Week's Roundup of State and National Politics—The County Democratic and the State Conventions—Every Indication of Enthusiastic and Harmonious Outcome—Now for Kansas City and Next for Victory.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, June 18, 1900.

Step by step administration of state government in the interests of all the people of the state goes on at the hands of Governor Lind and those entrusted to state duties under him, of which the state supreme court decision, sustaining the railroad and warehouse commission, in their action known as the New Ulm coal rate case is the latest incident. This letter recently quoted Governor Lind as entirely confident that the state, in that case, would be sustained, and the decision fully confirms his view.

This case, in brief, was the result of efforts to obtain a fair and equitable rate for hard coal for the people of the southwestern part of the state, where for years and years exorbitant rates have been enforced by the railroad companies. Action originated in the city of Governor Lind's home, New Ulm, on complaint to the railroad and warehouse commission by the Commercial union of that city against the prevailing rate of $2.50 per ton, Duluth to New Ulm. The roads being cited to a hearing, such were held Nov. 3 and Dec. 14, 1898. On Jan. 19, 1899, very soon after Governor Lind's inauguration, the commission made an order reducing the rate to $1.95 for New Ulm, and other points in proportion, on a fixed schedule of places and distances, a very material average reduction, which rates being all that the companies could charge in the aggregate from Duluth to the said points, was known as the "joint rate" that the roads could divide between themselves. The companies interested made every possible legal defense on a test case by the Minneapolis and St. Louis road and were defeated, first in the Ramsey county district court, and now in the state supreme court. The latter finds clearly and unmistakably for the people, sustaining the commission. The company announces that it will still further contest, however, which means the slow length of the United States supreme court, possibly, before the people will come into the actual benefits of the efforts made in their behalf.

The railroad and warehouse commission is about all the machinery possessed by the state for protection of the small interests which the people in the past have not voted away in franchises. The people are, therefore, more interested in its administration than in almost any other department. That they are pleased with the present board is conceded on all sides.

There was opportunity last week for only the merest mention of the state's "No," uttered by the railway commission, against the proposed consolidation of the Northern Pacific and the St. Paul and Duluth railroads, which Wall street and railroad and business men had accepted as accomplished fact until the state stepped in. The state holds that those roads are competing lines in the sense that brings them under the same inhibition that was successfully maintained against the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern, and has taken the firm stand that the consolidation shall not be carried out except it be shown that the state is wrong. At the moment the game is blocked, and the Northern Pacific and the Wall street interests concerned are looking around for some way out.

And speaking further of the commission, it has ordered stations maintained at Wylie, on the Great Northern's St. Hilaire branch, and Crow Wing, on the Northern Pacific. A commission that commishes is what the people have now.

The state Democratic convention to select the Minnesota representation for Kansas City, will have been held before this letter reaches all its thousands of readers. There is every indication of that enthusiasm and harmony which is marking like conventions in other states all over the Union. Such certainly have been reports of the county conventions of last week, and certainly it is true of the Ramsey and Hennepin county action. Harmony and enthusiasm have great big capital letters this year with the Democrats and those co-operating with them.

Let all of our friends bear in mind that nobody should stay away from Kansas City who can possibly go, and the opportunity, as to trains and low rates, was never equalled. You can go with either the official Democratic train or with the Silver or Lincoln Republicans. The full particulars are widely published and are obtainable from either Secretary T. R. Kane, St. Paul, for the Democratic, or of E. S. Corser, Minneapolis, for the other. The best way to do is to remit to either, immediately, the advertised cost, thus making sure of accommodations, and that you will go. The round trip transportation cost is $13.55 by chair car, $16.55 by tourist sleepers, or $19.55 by Pullman sleepers, the sleepers in both cases, being also used for beds at Kansas City during the stay, without extra cost. Band of music with each train.

Speaking of Kansas City, state after state joins the procession for Mr. Bryan's unanimous nomination. There are also from all parts of the country kindly expressions toward Mr. Towne. Where are we going to do better in the whole situation? is what the Democracy is asking itself.

Mr. Towne certainly has reason to be pleased with the endorsements given him by the Minnesota county conventions.

Speaking of those who are at Philadelphia booming Washburn for vice president, it is safe to say that their pockets are not stuffed full with the Washburn anti-trust and pro-Boer pamphlets. Watch the trusters and the English administrationists do up the able man from Minnesota.

These jabs at Methodist Brother McKinley are almost more than even a "Napoleon" can endure. And they do charge him with insulting Miss Frances Williard, "treated her with less respect than he would a ward heeler," is the open charge made by the temperance vice presidential candidate.

Ex-Senator Gil Pierce is showing the G. O. P. "What to Eat," vice presidentially, and is for Washburn. The outlook is that while the senatorial vegetables may "wash," they will also "burn," and the trusts "throw them out."

Speaking of the vice presidential ticket, a Chicago Times-Herald correspondent looking for Republican campaign slogans, wants something discovered that will compare with the cry, "Polk and Dallas," which was made to stand for "pork in the stomach and dollars in the pocket." Well, what's the matter with taking on Bliss of New York, and then it would be McKinley and Bliss for the trusts.

At this writing Mr. Bryan and Mr. Towne are rusticating where the wicked (politicians) cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest.

The following are the figures of McKinley prosperity as applied in the St. Louis strike to date:

Strike (commenced May 8) has lasted (days)	36
Number persons killed	13
Number wounded by bullets	65
Number otherwise injured	90
Estimated business loss, per day	$100,000
Business loss, 36 days	$3,600,000
Loss of strikers in wages	$275,000
Cost of armed posse comitatus	$325,000
Number in posse comitatus	1,500
Number police on duty (regulars)	1,000
Number special police	500
Total number armed men	3,000
Men on strike	4,000

And gold was not going abroad to any amount this season. The total shipments have already exceeded $20,000,000, the government $100,000,000 of gold being now depleted to close to $70,000,000, and more going to the tune of $3,500,000 to $5,000,000 weekly.

Indiana as an asylum for Republican political murderers is a success. The shielding of Kentucky Taylor ought to make the state certain for the Democrats, and such are our advices.

And speaking of the Philippines, how different a situation we would be in had we told the Filipinos to go ahead with their independence, under our protection, we taking as they would have been glad to have us do, whatever we wanted for station. In the new Chinese situation we would have had ships or men at hand, whereas few or no men can safely be taken from the Philippines. But, best of all, we should have done right.

To date all that the goppite press has been able to say for the remissness of the Republican secretary of state as to foreign corporations not paying their taxes is that some 60 companies have been found in Governor Lind's list that are not liable. Well, that leaves some 200 or more of the delinquents. What is this Republican official going to do to those?

The repudiated St. Paul Republican city administration died harder than any one supposed. Comptroller McCardy has barely skinned in, by the means of "recount," often so disreputable, especially when election machinery is under careful guard of the other fellow, and the old chief of police, and other heads of department, refuse to surrender except as they are thrown out. Meanwhile Mayor Smith is pursuing the even tenor of his "good old Democratic ways," greatly to the satisfaction of the people.

The date now set for that great flood of Northwestern prosperity was after the farmers' spring work was over. Now it is after harvest, and a little later it will be after the election. Selah.

Speaking of business, the much vaunted Russian loan which was to have been floated in the United States, has floated out of sight, the Wall street statement being that it was absurd to expect the loan to be placed here, when "even United States bonds are not in active demand."

Now that McKinley and Otis have swapped praises, let the Philippine war go on. But it is rather a dampener on imperialism, that Otis praises the Filipinos so highly. That they learn English with surprising rapidity, and are eager for schools, illy agrees with the estimates of McKinley himself, of their dense ignorance, their lacking in patriotic inspiration, and that they are not qualified to be more than an abject people.
